But what became of the ordinance of 1787 which this report declares was suppressed by the birth of the Great Republic? Let us see. Such of the compacts of the ordinance as are necessary to guarantee the rights of states, and such as are necessary to protect the federal government and secure the rights of citizens of the United States—for under the federal constitution, all the citizens of all the states became citizens of the United States—such of the compacts as were thus necessary are adopted by the federal constitution for federal purposes. On September 25, 1789, the ten amendments constituting the federal bill of rights were submitted to the states by the first congress; nine were borrowed from the ordinance. Also the right to benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, trial by jury, inviolability of contracts, sacredness of private property, and so on, down to the first of February, 1865, when the thirteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, prohibiting slavery, exactly as therein written, were borrowed from the ordinance, all borrowed from the ordinance of 1787, the clauses of which so adopted are not postponed in their application to the states and the inhabitants of the states in the Northwest Territory, except in so far as their exercise thus would conflict with the federal government and its jurisdiction and its authority and its prerogative.

It is a well settled principle that it is not the mere existence of federal power which precludes a state from exercising the same power. But it is the exercise of that power by the federal government which so precludes the state from exercising it; and that without this, subject to federal exercise of the same power in the same sphere, any state may at any time exercise such power. (Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law, 35; Golden vs. Price, 3 Wash. C. C. 313; 3 Dallas, 386; 21 Howard, 506; 13 Wallace, 397-406; Sturges vs. Crowninshield; 4 Wheat, 122-196.)

abeyance, with the federal constitution, the proximate instrument to which we must look for immediate effect as to rights that call for exercise of federal power.

Suppressed by the assent of the states to the federal constitution! The assent of the states to the federal constitution was by the states' formal acknowledgement of the validity of the ordinance, and formal and solemn acceptance and adoption of its compacts, and its terms under the new government. Sections 1 and 2 of article VI of the federal constitution recognizes its validity, as a part of the supreme law of the land. I read from article VI of the federal constitution:

Section 1. "All debts, contracts and engagements, entered into before the adoption of this constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this constitution, as under the confederation.

Section 2. This constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made [all treaties then made had been made under the confederation], or which shall be made under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.

The ordinance of 1787 with its compacts is not mere congressional legislation. But it is a treaty, with all the solemnity and force of a treaty, a treaty made under the Confederation, and adopted by the federal constitution; and adopted and adapted by the first congress on the 7th of August, 1789, within five months after the federal constitution went into effect. And I am not without authority upon this proposition. I quote from Scott vs. Sanford, 60 U. S. 503, 522, 523:

North of the Ohio, Virginia conveyed the lands, and vested the jurisdiction in the thirteen original states before the constitution was formed. She had the sole title and sole sovereignty, and the same power to cede, on any terms she saw proper, that the king of England had to grant the Virginia colonial charter of 1609, or to grant the charter of Pennsylvania to William Penn. The thirteen states, through their representatives and deputed ministers in the old congress, had the same right to govern that Virginia had before the cession. (Baldwin's Constitutional Views, 90.) And the sixth article of the constitution adopted all engagements entered into, by the congress of the Confederation, as valid against the United States; and that the laws made in pursuance of the new constitution, to carry out this engagement, should be the supreme law of the land, and the judges bound thereby. To give the compact, and the ordinance, which was a part of it, full effect under the new government, the act of August 7, 1789, was passed, which declares: "Whereas, in order that the ordinance of the United States in congress assembled, for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, may have full effect, it is requisite that certain provisions should be made, so as to adapt the same to the present constitution of the United States."

It is then provided that the governor and other officers should be appointed by the president, with the consent of the senate; and be subject to removal, and so forth, in like manner as they were by the old congress, whose functions had ceased.

By the powers to govern, given by the constitution, those amendments to the ordinance could be made, but congress guardedly abstained from touching the compact of Virginia, further than to adapt it to the new constitution. * * *

As to the Northwest Territory, Virginia had the right to abolish slavery there; and she did so agree in 1787, with the other states in the congress of the Confederation, by assenting to and adopting the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory. She did this also by an act of her legislature, passed afterwards, which was a treaty in fact [her second deed of cession].

Before the new constitution was adopted, she had as much right to treat and agree as any European government had. And, having excluded slavery, the new government was bound by that engagement by article VI of the new constitution.

This ordinance was addressed to the inhabitants as a fundamental compact, and six of its articles define the conditions to be observed in their constitution and laws. These conditions were designed to fulfill the trust in the agreements of cession, that the states to be formed of the ceded territories should be "distinct republican states." This ordinance was submitted to Virginia in 1788, and the fifth article embodying as it does a summary of the entire act was specifically ratified and confirmed by that state. This was an incorporation of the ordinance into her act of cession.

This report argues from the false premise that there was but one party to the compact originally, and that party was the general government, the nation, and quotes from Judge Grimke to that effect in Hutchins vs. Thompson, 9 Ohio, 62.

That ill-considered remark of Judge Grimke he takes back in the next twenty lines of that decision. I read from the case:

I have called this part a compact, because it is so termed in the instrument; but if it were not for some things which have since taken place, there might be great difficulty in regarding it in that light. There was in reality but one party to it originally, and that was the general government. But when application for admission into the Union was made by the people, inhabiting the eastern part of the territory, modifications in several parts of the ordinance were asked for, and were granted by the United States as one party, and Ohio, so far, treated the articles of compact as of perpetual obligation. The alterations proposed were with a view to the immediate formation of a state constitution, and were of no importance, if the state should have a right to annul the ordinance the moment it assumed that condition. The state may thus, by its own act, have converted that into a compact which was before only a fundamental act of congress.

The ordinance provides that so far as it can be consistent with the general interest of the Confederacy such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the state than sixty thousand. (Ordinance, article 5.)

And it was in relation to modifications under this clause of the ordinance, which were requested and assented to, and not as to any of the compacts.

The nation originally the only party to the ordinance and its compacts! Why, under the Confederation, when the ordinance was adopted by the state, there was no nation. The government was an offensive and defensive alliance between independent nations, and as such each state spoke for itself in the continental congress. I quote:

The declaration of independence was not, says Justice Chase, a declaration that the united colonies jointly in a collective capacity were independent states; but that each of them was a sovereign and independent state; that is, that each of them had a right to govern itself by its own authority, and its own laws, without any control from any power on earth. (3 Dallas, 199; 4 Cranch, 212; 60 U. S. 502.)

As to how Virginia looked upon the Confederation, as well as that she fixed and dictated the terms of cession and the purposes for which cession was made, as one of the high contracting parties, I quote from her deed of cession, 1 U. S. L. 417:

That all lands within the territory so ceded shall be used as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation, or federal alliance, of said states, Virginia inclusive; according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully, and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other purpose or purposes whatsoever.

And I again repeat that the ordinance was submitted to Virginia, and on the 30th of December, 1788, was specifically ratified and confirmed by Virginia, and that the ordinance was incorporated in her deed of cession. (1 U. S. L. 481; 60 U. S. 503; Ordinance, article 5.)

Before the federal constitution was adopted she had as much right to treat and agree, particularly with all of her sister states, each becoming a party to the agreement, as any European government had; and her acceptance of the ordinance and her deed of cession, of which the ordinance became a part, was a treaty in fact.

Each of the original states was and is a party to the ordinance and its compact, Virginia in the dual relation of grantor and a participant in the proceeds arising from the vast body of land. In fact, every state then and now in the federal union is a party to that compact; but be that as it may, each of the states formed from the territory became a party to it, and each inhabitant thereof a party to the ordinance and its compacts. I quote from Spooner vs. McConnell, 1st McLean, 344, 373:

The compact was formed between political communities and the future inhabitants of a rising territory, and the states which should be formed within it. And all who became inhabitants of the territory became parties to the compact. And this compact, so formed, could only be rescinded by the common consent of those who are parties to it.

And I quote from 60 U. S. 504. The court in speaking of the ordinance says:

The consent of all the states represented in congress, the consent of the legislature of Virginia (1 U. S. L. 481), the consent of the inhabitants of the territory, all concur to support the authority of this enactment. And it is apparent in the frame of the federal constitution, that the federal convention recognized its validity and adjusted part of their work with reference to it.

I also quote from 60 U. S. 512:

The ordinance of 1787, depended upon the action of the congress of the Confederation, the assent of the state of Virginia, and the acquiescence of the people; and the federal government accepted the ordinance as a recognized and valid engagement of the Confederation.

So that we have other parties to the ordinance than the nation, which then had no existence.

Of the vast wealth which Virginia so generously ceded, the states became and were the recipient. Of the compacts of the ordinance, which breathe every principle of human liberty, the inhabitants and states formed in the territory were and are the thrice blessed beneficiaries.

This report claims that the states and the nation, through the supreme court of the United States, assent to the suppression of the ordinance.

"Shall be considered as articles of compact between the original states, and the people and states in said territory, and forever remain unalterable unless by common consent," says the ordinance.

The consent of the original states or any state is not created either by the dicta or the decision of federal courts. The compact cannot be abrogated by implication.

The United States can only consent to the abrogation of the compact through the states in congress assembled. I quote Spooner vs. McConnell, 1 McLean, 344:

It is a well established principle that no political change in a government annuls a compact made with another sovereign power, or with individuals. The compact is protected by that sacred regard for plighted faith, which should be cherished alike by individuals and organized communities. A disregard of this great principle would reject all the lights and advantages of civilization, and throw us back to an age of vandalism.

Reform of Jury System.

In this same case which I have quoted, which was under the fourth article of the ordinance, in relation to the navigable waters in said territory and the power of the state concerning them, the court says:

All were interested in this provision, since all might have occasion to navigate the rivers referred to. Is it rational to conclude that congress intended to surrender a right so solemnly secured, so important in its character, and so extensive in its operation? And is such intention to be predicated on any action, short of an express declaration to that effect? If an ordinary act of legislation cannot be repealed without the observance of the forms and solemnities requisite in its enactments, a compact declared on its face to be "unalterable, unless by common consent," cannot be abrogated by mere implication.

The Congress of the United States as the representative of the people of the United States is a party to the compact, and as much bound by its stipulations as the states individually. (1 McLean, 370, 375, 379.)

In Hogg vs. Zanesville Canal and Manufacturing Co., 5 Ohio, 416, Judge Hitchcock says, as to article IV of the compact, relating to navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and the St. Lawrence:

This portion of the ordinance of 1787, is as much obligatory upon the state of Ohio as our own constitution. In truth it is more so; for the constitution may be altered by the people of the state, while this compact cannot be altered without the assent both of the people of this state and of the United States through their representatives. It is an article of compact, and until we assume the principle that the sovereign power of the state is not bound by compact, this clause must be considered obligatory.

And that court further says on page 423, 5 Ohio:

The right to navigate the rivers is a right secured to the citizen by the ordinance of 1787. It is a right of which he cannot be deprived unless by agreement between the people of the United States through their representatives in congress, and the people of Ohio, through their representatives in the general assembly.

I also cite Hutchins vs. Thompson, 9 Ohio, 52; Cochran's Heirs vs. Loring, 17 Ohio, 409, 424, 425; Ohio vs. Boone, 84 O. S. 357 (in which the court quotes from these opinions, and declares that the foregoing quotations remain as the unmodified expressions of this court upon this subject. This case was decided in 1911), and 84 O. S. 359.

Only the parties which establish the compact can annul or modify, and then only in accordance with its stipulations. (Georgetown vs. The Alexandria Canal Company, 12 Peters, 91, and authorities heretofore cited.)

The federal cases cited in this report go to the verge of federal assault upon the ordinance and its compacts. And at farthest it can only be gathered from the federal cases so cited, nor can it be found anywhere otherwise than that the ordinance is held in abeyance by the federal constitution and the constitution of the state, in so far only as those constitutions respectively adopt the articles of compact. If that be true, they are then enforceable through those latter instruments, such of them as are so adopted, and not proximately so long as thus held in abeyance. If the cases cited in this report be binding authority even to that extent, that conclusion must be gathered from expressions of opinions by the court which are not applicable to the fact upon which the cases rest. Let us see what those cases include and conclude.

The first case cited is the Escanaba Company vs. Chicago, 107 U. S. R. 678. The fourth article of the ordinance provides—

That the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence and carrying places between the same shall be common highways and forever free as well to the inhabitants of said territory, as well to the citizens of the United States, as those of any other states that may be admitted into the confederacy, without any tax, impost or duty therefor.

This case was decided in 1881. The Escanaba Company was a corporation, chartered under the laws of Michigan, and engaged in water navigation. The state of Illinois had authorized the city of Chicago, within the city limits, to straighten and deepen and widen the Chicago river, whose waters reach the St. Lawrence through the Great Lakes. And had further authorized the city to erect bridges over the stream to facilitate commerce. To meet the necessities of traffic, the bridges were closed at certain times and for certain periods of time. This the plaintiff claimed interrupted the navigation of the river, was not consonant with federal authority over navigable waters and was forbidden by the compact of the ordinance which I have just quoted. This report states the dicta in these cases and not the decision.

It is conceded doctrine, though obiter in these cases, that the federal constitution, as well as the constitution of a state in the Northwest Territory where the constitution had adopted a clause of the ordinance of 1787, holds the clause in abeyance so long as the clause remains a part of the constitution which adopts it.

It is undisputed that a state being admitted into the Union upon equal footing in all respects with the original states, is entitled to exercise all the sovereignty of a member of the Union. This latter doctrine has meaning, however, which the mere declaration of it does not convey.

The court in the Escanaba case declares that, independent of any constitutional right or restriction, the state has the power to arrange that concessions be made for the harmonious pursuit of all occupations, so that one might not invade the rights of the other, and so that facilities be given to all kinds of commerce, with the least obstruction to either; that, to effect these ends, bridges might be rightfully built across a navigable stream, where the structure is made and used so as least to interfere with commerce on the stream; and that the city of Chicago, in exercising the authority over the

Reform of Jury System.

Chicago river delegated to it by the state of Illinois had complied with all these requisites; that widening, deepening and straightening the Chicago river, was not obstructing a navigable stream or making the river less navigable; and that the facts showed that in all that had been done there had been no discrimination against citizens of other states, that it was done in the endeavor to meet the wants and necessities of commerce of the citizens of other states as well as of the citizens of Chicago and the state of Illinois.

And the court affirmatively finds that the facts show no violation of the clause of the ordinance, and a condition not repugnant to its inhibitions but in compliance with them. And so the court declares:

We do not see that the clause of the ordinance materially affects the question before us, because the navigation of the Chicago river is free, and its character is not affected by the fact that it is crossed by bridges and used as described. (107 U. S. 447; Palmer vs. Commissioners of Cuyahoga county, 3 McLean, 226; Spooner vs. McConnell, 1 McLean, 370, et seq., 379.)

The next case cited is Huse vs. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, decided in 1886. This case arose because of the building of locks and dams in the Illinois river and in streams tributary to it. And the same questions and the same state of facts were present as obtained in the Escanaba case, with the additional proposition that the company which had made these improvements by the authority of the state, charged tolls for passing through the lock and dam. Quoting with approval the Escanaba case, and after having concluded, as to the ordinance, the same clause of which was sought to be interposed in that case, and after having remarked upon the well settled rules as to the dominion and sovereignty of a state when admitted into the Union, etc., the court declares:

Independently of these considerations, the terms of the ordinance were not violated; because navigable streams are subject to that which might be required by public convenience under reasonable conditions, and so as not to unnecessarily obstruct them to a degree inconsistent with their free navigation.

Then the court goes on and quotes from Palmer vs. Cuyahoga county, 3 McLean, 226, 227, and approves and confirms the doctrine:

This provision of the ordinance does not prevent a state from improving the navigableness of its waters, by removing obstructions, or by dams and locks, so increasing the depth of the water and that what was done in that behalf could not be considered in the nature of obstruction, prohibited by the ordinance.

And the court then declares that tolls are to reimburse the expenditure for the improvement and are not a tax.

In Sands vs. The Manistee River Improvement Company, 123 U. S. 226, this case is cited in that report, and was decided in 1887. The Manistee River Improvement Company obtained authority from the state of Michigan to clean out and make more navigable the Manistee river.

Sands was a lumberman and rafted logs down this stream, for which, after it had been thus improved by the defendant, the company charged him toll. It was in a suit to collect the toll that the case reached the supreme court of the United States. In deciding the case the court quotes and approves the Escanaba case, and the case of Huse vs. Glover, and is careful to declare:

Independently of the consideration there is nothing in the language of the 4th article of the ordinance respecting the navigable waters of the territory emptying into the St. Lawrence, which, if binding upon the state would prevent it from authorizing the improvement made in the navigation of the Manistee river. And the court further says, as we said in Huse vs. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, decided at the last term, the provisions of the ordinance that navigable streams shall be highways, without any tax, impost or duty, has reference to their navigation at a natural state. It did not contemplate that such navigation should not be improved by removing obstructions and deepening and widening.

And the court declares that by "tax, impost, and duty, mentioned in the ordinance is meant a charge for use of the government, and not compensation for improvements."

The report cites the case of Coyle vs. Oklahoma, 221 U. S. 563, decided in 1911. In that case the court says:

The question reviewable under this writ of error, if any there be, arises under the claim that the act of the state of Oklahoma providing for the immediate location of the capitol at Oklahoma City was void, as repugnant to the enabling act of congress under which the state was admitted.

The enabling act provided that the state capitol should remain at Guthrie, and not be removed therefrom, after the state was admitted, for a period named in the enabling act. As soon as the state was admitted the authorities of the state took measures to remove the capitol to Oklahoma City. Coyle sought to enjoin the removal, pleading this clause of the enabling act as bar to the removal.

And the court declares that it was no part of an act of congress for the admission of a new state to locate the capitol of a new state. And held that part of the enabling act for the admission of Oklahoma ultra vires, and not within the power or capacity of congress to require it. But that it was distinctively the business of the state to locate and fix the location of its own seat of government, and that therefore that portion of the enabling act was void; that congress may embrace in its enabling act conditions relating to matters wholly within its control, but not matters wholly within state control. (221 U. S. 566.)

The court then reads into its decision the definition of a state:

The definition of a state is found in the power possessed by the original states which adopted the federal constitution.

And in the very language of the ordinance, which was the first open door to the Union, the court declares that the power given to congress by section 3 of article IV of the federal constitution is to admit new states into this Union "on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever." (221 U. S. 559). This doctrine is as old as the ordinance which declares it; for until written into the compacts of the ordinance of 1787, man had never written it before.

And that very case of Coyle vs. Oklahoma recognizes and distinguishes between compacts made between the states sanctioned by the federal constitution, or which are the legitimate subject of congressional action, and so binding on the states, and the act then sought to be enforced at the bar of that court, which found no sanction in the federal constitution, and was so repugnant and incongruous as to defeat the ends in view, the formation of new states and their admission into the Union on a footing of equality with the original states.

In the case of The City of Cincinnati vs. The Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company decided by the supreme court of the United States, October, 1911, the opinion cites the cases I have here cited and is no broader than are those cases and goes no farther. Across certain real estate which was dedicated to, and accepted by the town of Cincinnati in 1789, defendant in error sought to condemn a right of way. The plaintiff in error, with other defenses, claimed that the "public exigency" contemplated by the provisions of article 2 of the ordinance of 1787, that allowed the appropriation of property for a public use, was not present in this instance; that article 2 of the ordinance being read into the contract of dedication no condemnation could be made. Upon this feature of the case the court held that eminent domain and under it the right to appropriate private property to public use, is an incident of sovereignty; that every contract is subordinate to it, and that article 2 of the ordinance properly interpreted does not forbid an appropriation such as is here involved. So that the court in fact finds in this case and in its subject matter nothing repugnant to the terms of the ordinance.

The ordinance of 1787 has the sanction of the constitution of the United States, and is and has been the subject of congressional action binding the states. The ordinance itself was the solemn enactment of all the states in congress assembled. It is a treaty. (60 U. S. 522, 523, 503, 502, 504.)

It was adopted by the constitution of the United States, article VI, section 1 and 2.

August 7, 1789, the first congress adopted the ordinance and adapted it to government of the Northwest Territory under the federal constitution. On the 30th of April, 1802, congress recognized its validity, and directed the creation of the state of Ohio, and that its government and constitution be not repugnant to the ordinance of the 13th of July, 1787, between the original states and the people and states of the territory northwest of the river Ohio. And the same act recognizes the compact as binding even as to boundaries of the new state. (Also see article 5, Ordinance.)

On March 3, 1803, congress refers to its act of April 30, 1802, as valid and supplements it.

On the 9th of February, 1803, congress recognizes the state as a member of the Union, and declares that the constitution and government of Ohio are in conformity with the enabling act and so are not repugnant to the compacts of the ordinance of 1787.

May 20, 1812, in marking the western boundary of Ohio, congress again refers to the ordinance for its authority.

On the 29th of November, 1802 "the people of the eastern division of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, having the right of admission into the general government, as a member of the Union," says the constitution of 1802, "consistent with the constitution of the United States, the ordinance of congress of 1787," and the law of Congress April 30, 1802, to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory of the United States, northwest of the river Ohio, to form a constitution and state government, and for admission of such state into the Union, on an equal footing with the original states, and for other purposes; in order to establish justice, promote the welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish the following constitution or form of government. "That the great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and forever unalterably established, we declare." Then follows the bill of rights of our constitution of 1802, all borrowed from the ordinance. I quote from McLean, 368, 369:

In April, 1802, upon the application of the people of that part of the territory northwest of the Ohio, now embraced within the limits of the state of Ohio, congress passed a law to enable them "to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of such state into the Union, on an equal footing with the original states, and for other purposes." This act provides, among other things, for holding a convention of the people of that part of the territory; and authorizes such convention to form a constitution and state government, provided, the same shall be republican and not repugnant to the ordinance of the 13th of July, 1787. This provision is adverted to as evidencing that the congress of 1802, most distinctly recognized the obligatory character of the ordinance, and as containing an unequivocal expression of the opinion that no state within the territory could be organized, and admitted into the Union, with a constitution "repugnant" to that instrument. That body did not consider itself as vested with the power to absolve the state of Ohio from the obligations created by the compact. * * *

It is also clear that the people of Ohio in calling a convention and adopting a constitution under the act of congress of April 13, 1802, recognized the ordinance as affording a paramount rule for their guidance. This is deducible from the fact that in the preamble to their constitution, the right of the state to admission into the Union is based upon the ordinance, the constitution of the United States, and the act of congress just referred to.

And as late as 1851, "We, the people of the state of Ohio," were still grateful to Almighty God for our freedom; and we adopted the present constitution with no departure from the compacts of 1787.

Recognized as the great and valid charter of our liberty

by congress and conventions and constitutions, state and federal, a treaty, the compacts of which could only be held in abeyance when adopted by an instrument equally solemn—with this within their view, it is not strange that the judges in the Coyle case distinguished between a compact and an act of congress which was ultra vires.

What is meant by admission of a state upon equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever? This report, this "dry logic too reasonable for productive litigation" as the makers of it declare, defines it as follows:

All the states of the Union are equal, but this equality would be destroyed if the inhabitants of one state had more privileges, guarantees and immunities than the inhabitants of another state, or were bound by more prohibitions than the inhabitants of another state. Hence the national government cannot admit of a document transcending the one which is the basis of its own existence.

I would rather depend upon the explanation and definition of Justice McLean of the supreme court of the United States, and Justice Leavitt, sitting in the circuit court of the United States, in the case of Spooner vs. McConnell, 1 McLean, 344-349 (the opinion of Justice McLean) and 370-1-2-3-4 (opinion of Justice Leavitt):

The terms "sovereign power of a state" are often used without any very definite idea of their meaning and they are often misapplied. Certain objects on which the sovereign power may act are by its own consent, withdrawn from its action. But this does not divest the state of any attribute of its sovereignty.

A state cannot divest itself of its essential attributes of sovereignty. It cannot enter into a compact not to exercise its legislative and judicial functions, or its elective rights, because this would be to change the form of government, which is guaranteed by the federal constitution. Does this provision mean that the new state will exercise the same power and in the same modes as are exercised by any other state?

Now this cannot be the true construction of the provision, for there cannot be found perhaps any two states in the Union whose legislative, judicial and executive powers are in every respect alike. If the argument be sound that there is no equal footing short of exact equality in this respect, then the states are not equal. But if the meaning be that the people of the new state, exercising the sovereign power which belongs to the people of any other state, shall be admitted into the Union, subject to such provisions in their fundamental law as they shall have sanctioned, within the restrictions of the federal constitution, then the states are equal, equal in rank, equal in their power of sovereignty; and only different in their restrictions which in the exercise of those powers they may have voluntarily imposed upon themselves.

The sixth article of the compact prohibits slavery. The constitution of the state also prohibits it. Now, notwithstanding this inhibition in the constitution, the people of the state in convention, might so alter the constitution so as to admit slavery. But does not the compact prevent such an alteration without the consent of the original states? The provision of the compact in regard to slavery rests upon the same basis as that which regards the navigable waters within the state. They are both declared to be unalterable except by common consent.

I might here remark that the compact regarding navigable waters is not adopted in terms by our constitution, but is written into it because of the fact that there is nothing in the state constitution repugnant to that compact. This being true, how much more plainly do the compacts as to slavery and trial by jury and judicial proceeding according to the course of the common law stand forth as unalterable.

In the same case Judge Levitt says, 1 McLean, 327:

To entitle a state to the character of sovereignty, it is not regarded as essential that she should possess in equal degree the same powers over all subjects that may be possessed by other states. In any other aspect of this subject, no one of the federal states formed within the territory, northwest of the Ohio river, has been admitted into the Union, on a footing of equality with some of the original states. The institution of slavery existed in many of the original states at the period of adoption of the ordinance, and in several of them it continues to exist. [This case was decided in 1838.] Yet, the ordinance expressly inhibits the introduction of slavery in any of the states to be formed within the territory. And these states have made this provision of the ordinance a part of their constitution. In this case then, it is clear that some of the original states possessed rights and exercised jurisdiction which is prohibited to Ohio and other states. And yet, can it be maintained that the latter states are not equal in sovereignty with the former?

It may be well on this point to refer to the language of the ordinance to ascertain in what light this subject was viewed by those who framed and passed it. To suppose them ignorant of the political rights and relations of the state, or that they misconceived the powers with which they were clothed, would be doing them great injustice. Under a form of government in which the congress represented the state in their sovereign capacities, it may be safely inferred that the rights of the states were not only well understood, but scrupulously guarded.

The inference is, therefore, irresistible that the intelligence and sagacity of that body did not lead to the suspicion that the compact detracted in any degree from the sovereignty of the state that might be admitted into the confederacy in virtue of the ordinance and 84 O. S. 359

So it may be seen that the provision that a new state shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states carries with it a meaning which mere reading of the sentence does not fully convey, and which the "dry logic" of this report does not comprehend, and that the report is as far from the law in this respect as it is in the respects I have mentioned and will mention.

The report declares that the ordinance is only binding between the original states and the people and states in the Northwest Territory. It makes very little difference whether this be a fact or otherwise. If it be a fact, then Ohio is one of the states in said territory and is bound. But it is not a fact. When Ohio entered the Union and ranged herself with her sister states she as a state was doubly bound. Not only as a new state admitted from the Northwest Territory, and bound by the compact, by the compact itself and by her constitution, adopted by her in consonance with the terms of the compact, but bound as a state of the Union, having assumed upon her admission to the Union all of the obligations of the original states, equal to them in sovereignty and equal in obligation. And so were and are her people bound. And I am not without authority on this point. I quote from 1 McLean, 344, 373:

This compact was formed between political communities and the future inhabitants of a rising territory, and the states which should be formed within it. And all who became inhabitants of the territory made themselves parties to the compact. And this compact so formed could only be rescinded by the common assent of those who were parties to it.

Again, by the terms of the ordinance, the states admitted into the Confederacy thereupon became parties to the compact. It has already been remarked, that the congress of 1802, in providing for the admission of Ohio, and the convention of that state in adopting the constitution, and submitting it to congress, distinctly recognized the obligatory character of the ordinance. The state became a voluntary party to the articles of compact which it contained. And having assented to it, and acknowledging its binding character, she is concluded from taking the ground that it imposes no obligation upon her.

So Ohio as a state of the Union assumed all the obligations imposed upon a state by the constitution of the United States and the laws of congress. (Authorities above and fourth article of ordinance.)

Each case cited in the report as to the ordinance of 1787 is dictum, and makes no pretense of meeting the question squarely, but sidesteps and avoids and goes obiter and by the way. I venture to say that not otherwise are any of the cases examined by gentlemen, except it be the Spooner and Palmer cases, and they both, going up from Ohio, with the ordinance and the constitution of this state in the eye of the court, cross swords with the opinion of Justice Roger Brook Taney, upon whose dicta the dicta of these modern opinions rest. You may find the shadow of all these opinions in the Dred Scott case. (Dred Scott against John F. A. Sanford.) Not only the shadow, but the substance of the opinions cited, can be found in the nine separate opinions in that case; seven with the majority, and two, Justices McLean and Curtis, dissenting. That case, the Scott case, coupled with cases preceding it, decided by the same judges, is the case in point. It has often been referred to and quoted here. It was said here by Mr. Roosevelt that the Dred Scott decision was recalled, and he smiled as he referred to it, as if recollection of the episode of that recall amused him.

The ordinance of 1787, and later, with the Missouri Compromise passed in 1820, kept the states at peace with each other for seventy-four years.

It had been long in view that the institution of slavery was the rock upon which the American Union would split into fragments. The federal constitution recognized slavery and made provision for it and for the fostering of it in the states that existed when it was framed. In its very first article is this provision to be found.

The same instrument invites new states to enter the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever. The ordinance of 1787 declares as one of its compacts, that shall forever remain unalterable and binding upon the states and the people of the Northwest Territory thus invited to enter the Union upon an equal footing of the original states in all respects whatsoever, that slavery shall never exist in said territory, nor in the states formed in said territory, nor involuntary servitude otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

This clash between those great charters provoked the assault upon the ordinance in the cases which lead up to this great case, the Scott case, hoping to find some vulnerable point by which its destruction in the interests of slavery might be effected.

With the object in view to render less implacable the slave states it was sought to nullify and take from congress the power to prohibit slavery in the territories of the United States.

When the state of Missouri was admitted into the Union in 1820, as a slave state, congress, as a compromise measure and to appease the North, by the same act which authorized Missouri to enter the Union declared that north of latitude 36 degrees and 30 minutes and west of the Mississippi, excluding Missouri, the institution of slavery should not exist. This bill was passed by a vote of one hundred and thirty-four to forty-two. The compromise had existed up to 1854, when it was supplanted by the Kansas and Nebraska bill, by which the question of slavery in the states created in said territory was left to the states themselves. But mark you, these measures had been all congressional action. The power to allow or prohibit slavery in the territories had been assumed and exercised by congress, and until the decision of the Dred Scott case it had never been questioned that the states and the people of the United States in congress assembled might not control within the territories of the United States that institution which had made enemies of the two sections of the Great Republic. But the time was ripe, and so the supreme court of the United States, by the most arrant dictum that ever was uttered, so far as concerns the proposition decided, declared that congress had not the power to prohibit slavery in the territories of the United States, and (the very words of the court) that the Missouri compromise was unconstitutional, null and void. Before this decision, in 1854, the Missouri Compromise had been practically repealed. The Scott case was heard in March, 1856, and decided in April, 1857.

Reform of Jury System.

Dred Scott was a negro slave. He claimed manumission because of the fact that he had lived with his master at Fort Snelling, in the territory west of the Mississippi river, to which the Missouri Compromise applied, and at Rock Island, Illinois, to which the ordinance of 1787 and the constitution of that state, both prohibiting slavery, applied. The period of his residence in free territory covered a number of years. He had a wife and two daughters in like condition of servitude. Dred Scott claimed by thus residing in a territory in which slavery was not tolerated by law he had (I use the language of one of the justices) acquired property in himself; that he owned his own body; and that his body was not the property of John F. A. Sanford. And he claimed the same for his wife and daughters. The case was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Missouri and carried by writ of error to the supreme court of the United States. To give the circuit court jurisdiction Scott declared that he was a citizen of Missouri and that Sanford was a citizen of the state of New York. The judgment of the circuit court was against Scott and in favor of Sanford.

The supreme court of the United States declared that the record showed that Scott was a man without a country; that being a slave he was neither alien nor citizen; that he had no right in any forum. And the court said he possessed no right which a white man was bound to respect; and found that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to entertain the case; and that the supreme court of the United States had no jurisdiction of the subject matter; and its judgment was that the case be remanded for dismissal for want of jurisdiction.

But notwithstanding this, that court claimed the right to investigate the false grounds upon which the circuit court had entertained the case, and to substantively make findings and decisions upon them. And so the supreme court of the United States built up the Dred Scott decision, and by it those judges destroyed the power of congress to prohibit slavery in the territories so far as their decision reached it. That case might have been decided against Scott without attacking the power of congress upon the provisions in both the ordinance and federal constitution relating to fugitives from service, but the power of congress as to slavery in the territories was the object of attack.

But what did the court with the ordinance of 1787, that which, when the federal constitution, which provided for slavery and provided for the importation of slaves on payment of $10 duty on each person imported, and which invited new states to range themselves in the Union beside their sister states, and partake of this blessing of sovereignty upon an equal footing in all respects whatsoever—what did they with this compact that arose above the federal constitution, and said to the states of the Northwest Territory, "Thou shalt not"; and forbade that they adopt the institution of slavery or suffer it within their border; and enjoined upon them that they shun it forever as the destroyer of their country's peace? There was still part of the Northwest Territory not erected into states. What did they with the ordinance? That ordinance was an act of congress which forbid slavery in the Northwest Territory, and the Missouri Compromise was an act of congress which forbid slavery north of 36-30. How did they reconcile the destruction of the power of congress as to one and not the other? They viewed and measured that great charter, which has the strength of a fortress formed by nature's hand, and discovered that it possessed qualities other than mere congressional legislation; that it was a compact, a treaty; that its abrogation depended, not as do the destruction of most treaties, upon the will of but one of the high contracting parties, but that to destroy it required the common and concurrent assent of all the parties to it; that the federal constitution had adopted it, and declared of it in its sixth article that it should be taken and held, and the principles in it, wherever they may be found, and adopted as the supreme law of the land; and that the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding. And seeing it thus beyond their power to destroy and invulnerable to their assault, they smote it and cast their javelins against it, and turned themselves to the destruction of the power of congress to make free states in the territory we had acquired of France and Mexico, west of the Mississippi. To perpetuate slavery they destroyed as far as they could destroy. And so ended the first lesson.

This case was blessed in the South, and in the North the air trembled with the curses of it. I have been told by authority that I would not gainsay that that opinion was thus strained and distorted and warped, and the case decided thus, hoping by it to put off the day all dark and drear that then and long had threatened. But the effect was exactly the opposite. It lighted into flame the smoldering embers of discord, and the recall of the Dred Scott decision of which Mr. Roosevelt here smilingly reminded us was at hand. Within forty-nine months after that decision the signs in the sky so long portending evil to our country, stood forth in the realities of grim-visaged war. The earth shook with the tramp of contending armies.

Virginia, the peacemaker, that had ceded an empire to allay the jealousies of her sister states and helped them in their need—the streets of her cities were swept with hissing bullets; on every hill the fires of ruin glowed. Her valleys were plowed and torn with shot and shell; her soil was steeped with the blood of her sons, and on every hand within her border stalked the hideous form of death.

For fourteen hundred miles spread the battle front, all given to tumultuous carnage. The nations of the earth were sickened with the horror of it. Civilized man shuddered as the sounds of that grapple to the death between brethren smote the palpitating air. And there was no ear upon the earth so savage or remote that was not bent in listening fear at the sullen muttering of that mighty conflict. Until finally, when the greatest war of the nineteenth century ended at Appomatox, there had been given to slaughter and to death mightier hosts than had pursued Dred Scott and haughtier names than that of John F. A. Sanford. And that case and its teachings as to slavery had been washed from the rolls with American blood—the blood of Mr. Roosevelt's countrymen. Yet he smiled, did that man, that inimitable smile, which cometh in such questionable shape that we do misdoubt us whether it be wicked or charitable, and laughed as he bethought him here of that recall and the reeking horror of it!

Is it true that we view those years of terror and despair as merely one of the useless lessons of the past? I hope not. I trust not. It was not the end of the story with us, thank God. Yet it was but history repeating itself. History that is strewn with the wrecks of dead republics; each ruin a monument to the period of that country's life, when its institutions became not sacred to its people and when its citizens, lured by the voices of its demagogues pitched to the music of patriotism, trampled their own liberties under their own feet.

In each of the federal cases cited in this report the courts repeat in almost exact words, "Independently of the consideration as to whether the clauses of the ordinance are valid or invalid, the facts show no violation of their provision. There is in the acts of the parties nothing repugnant to the terms of the ordinance, wherefore the clauses of the ordinance do not materially affect the question before us."

So that the cases cited are dicta, in so far as the ordinance and the compacts of it are concerned, and are not decision. What is the federal rule as to dictum?

The opinion of a court cannot be relied upon as binding authority unless the case (not the briefs, not argument of counsel), unless the case calls for its expression. (Re City Bank N. O., 3 Howard, 392; Carroll vs. Carroll, 16 Howard, 287; 123 Federal 502; 178 U. S. 524; 157 U. S. 429.)

The positive authority of a decision is co-extensive only with the facts upon which it is made. (4 Wheaton 122; 12 Wheaton 213.)

General expressions of an opinion, which are not essential to the disposition of the case, cannot control the judgment in subsequent suits. (Hariman vs. Northern Securities Co. 197 U. S. 244.)

An opinion in a particular case founded on special circumstances is not applicable to cases under circumstances essentially different. (Brooks vs. Marbury, 11 Wheaton, 98; 24 Howard 553; 6 Wheaton, 264; 10 U. S. 615; 110 U. S. 608; 16 Howard 287; 6 Wheaton, 399; 96 U. S. 211; 135 U. S. 135; 169 U. S. 679; 197 U. S. 291.)

But suppose the federal cases be not dicta, but decision? Every case concerns only the tangible and physical things which are within the power and dominion and sovereign control of a state—waterways, navigable streams, bridges, roads, commerce, property, navigation—and deal not with the inherited liberties of the citizen, and not with the inalienable rights of the people. You may say the Dred Scott case sounds of human liberty; not so. Dred Scott and his wife Harriet, and his two little daughters, Lizzie and Eliza, inherited no liberties. They had no inalienable rights. They were slaves; they were articles of commerce and of barter. They were chattels.

Human rights and commerce do not stand on the same footing under the compacts of the ordinance of 1787, and are not so to be viewed. And I am not without authority on this point. (Spooner vs. McConnell, 1 McLean 366, 367.) I quote:

In looking into the ordinance, it is obvious that all the provisions of the articles of compact, are not to be viewed as standing precisely on the same footing. The guaranties for the security of the great principles of liberty, which lie at the foundation, and constitute essential elements, of all true republican governments, are obviously to be regarded in a different light from those which pertain merely to the right and possession of property, and its advantageous enjoyment. The distinction seems to have been recognized by the framers of the constitution of Ohio, and to have exerted an influence upon them, in framing that instrument. They evidently acted under a belief that the fundamental law of the state must conform, in all its leading features and principles, to those of the ordinance of '87. But, while they were careful to impress those features upon, and incorporate those principles into the constitution of Ohio, they did not deem it necessary or proper to treat all the provisions of the ordinance as entitled to the same high consideration. Hence no reference is made in the constitution to the provision of the ordinance relating to the navigability of water courses; and for the plain reason that this was not necessary, in order to give to the constitution a republican character, and make it conform to the great principles declared in the ordinance.

How does the supreme court of Ohio view the compacts of the ordinance of 1787? After having quoted from all the decisions of the courts of this state upon that subject, and declaring that they remain as the, unmodified expression of this court upon this subject, the court says, in Ohio vs. Boone, 84 O. S. 359:

We have thus briefly indicated the reason for our belief that the great charter of the Northwest Territory is still under and above and before all laws or constitutions which have yet been made in the states which are part of that territory.

And in this opinion all of the judges concur, and such is the voice of your highest tribunal as late as 1911.

But suppose all that has been said falls to the ground, and that my argument so far is without foundation or weight. In obedience to the compact and to the act of congress which directs Ohio to become a state, and which provides that her constitution shall not be repugnant to the ordinance, Ohio adopts its compacts, both in letter and in spirit, both in its constitution of 1802 and the present constitution, so that in neither of these instruments is there anything repugnant to the ordinance. And having entered the Union with these earnestness of her faith in those compacts she cannot now recede from them.

One of the chiefest and most binding and most valuable articles of that compact, which shall forever remain unalterable except it be changed in accordance with the terms of the compact itself is "that the inhabitants shall always be entitled to the benefits of trial by jury, and to the benefits of judicial proceedings under the course of the common law."

What is a trial by jury under the course of the common law? A jury, under the common law, consists of twelve men. A verdict, under the course of the common law, is the united conclusion of twelve jurors. A trial by jury is a proceeding which results in the verdict of the jury and later in a judgment on the verdict. The finding of nine men out of twelve is not a verdict. And without a verdict there is no jury trial.

Our constitution provides that the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, following the compact of the ordinance and the constitution of 1802. I quote from "Words and Phrases Judicially Defined," and cite 48 A. D. 178; 4 O. S. 167, 177; 25 O. S. 91, 102; 174 U. S. 1, 43; 19 S. C. 580-585.

The provision of the constitution which says that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, means that the right shall in all cases where it was enjoyed when the constitution became binding and obligatory, continue unchanged. The term "shall be inviolate" does not merely imply that the right of jury trial, shall not be abolished or wholly denied, but means that it shall not be impaired. The word "inviolate" is defined by approved lexicographers to mean, unhurt, uninjured, unpoluted, unbroken. Inviolat, says Webster, is derived from the Latin word "inviolatus" which is defined by Ainsworth to mean not corrupt, immaculate, unhurt, untouched.

"Remain inviolate" as used in article I, section 6 of the constitution of Tennessee, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, means that it shall be preserved as it existed at common law, at the time of the adoption of the constitution. (Gibbs vs. Wilson, 49 S. W. 736; 101 Tenn. 612.)

The right to trial by jury is not a trivial right. It is the most sacred right of an American freeman. See how it is valued in our great charters. In the Declaration of Independence, where our fathers avowed that a decent respect to the opinion of mankind required that they should declare the causes which impelled them to that separation, assigned as one of the causes, "For depriving us in many cases of the benefits of trial by jury."

And hear the compact: "And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which forms the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in said territory;" and which forever shall "remain unalterable unless by common consent," solemnly declares as one of those principles that the inhabitants of said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits "of trial by jury," and "of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law."

In our constitution of 1802, "the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate", which provision means as the trial by jury then existed, at that date, November 29, 1802, when that constitution adopted that compact. It shall be inviolate and not be changed.

In our present constitution is the same provision, in exact words, which retains and keeps unchanged, in obedience to the adopted compact, the common law jury.

And in the federal constitution, article VII of the amendments, which was submitted on the 25th of September, 1789, as a part of the federal bill of rights, we find a similar provision:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Such men were then on this earth, signing federal constitutions and making laws in the congress of the United States, as George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, Daniel Carroll, Alexander Hamilton, Robert Morris, Thomas Fitzsimons and others like them. Those men looked upon trial by jury and judicial proceedings, according to the course of the common law, as the most excellent and most complete machinery ever devised by the wisdom of man for the freedom of a people and for the safety of a state. And they were right, for with this weapon a common man may defend himself and his property and throttle arbitrary power.

And Ohio having adopted the compact cannot recede from its obligation by any act of Ohio not affirmatively assented to by all the states in congress assembled. (Spooner vs. McConnell, 1 McLean, 344, 353, 369, 370, 375, 379; 5 O. 416, 423; 84 O. S. 355, 356, 357, 358, 359; 7 O. 62.)

It will not answer this argument to say that the constitutions of other states of the Northwest territory, upon which those states were admitted into the Union, followed less jealously the compacts of 1787 than does our constitution of 1802, the contract upon which Ohio was admitted. The decisions of the courts of those states are not explanatory of our situation. This is Ohio; this Convention is acting for the people of Ohio. These Ohio decisions which I have here and elsewhere cited are the declarations of the supreme court of Ohio, referring primarily to Ohio, in solemn affirmation of those articles of compact and the obligations of them.

We should be thankful that we cannot recede and withdraw from the compacts and obligations of that ordinance other than in manner fixed by its terms; for that great charter has afforded us and pointed out to us the best form of government ever enjoyed by man.

I agree with the truth uttered here by Mr. Roosevelt when he declared "that justice and liberty have been more perfectly realized in this country and under this form of government than ever before." Of course, the sentiment was absolutely inconsistent with everything else he said, and he took it back twenty times during his speech, but in so declaring he spoke the truth nevertheless. And I do not understand why we should be so desirous of freeing ourselves from the binding effect and from the protection of our bill of rights, and our charters and liberty. I do not see why we should view them as threats and menaces. I do not see why we should look with such stony horror on our form of government. I do not understand why we should be so charmed and hypnotized by every pretender who takes for his text and preaches into our ears of the rights of man and of his mountebank discoveries in that well-explored field. Yet it seems that we deem as sacred as the truths of holy writ every utterance which spits on the past and slanders the present and paints fantastic and nondescript pictures of the future.

It has been said from this rostrum by those invited to teach us here, and oft repeated on the floor of this Convention, that representative government is a failure; that under it there is no safety for the rights of man; that representative government is not sufficiently progressive to keep pace with the rights of man. It has been even here suggested that that shibboleth of the rights of man, "as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end," should be indefinitely postponed and relegated to innocuous desuetude.

There are no new discoveries to be made in the rights of man. The rights of man are the same now as when the morning stars sang together. There is no progression in the rights of man. They were the gift of God at the creation of the world. They have not grown; they have not diminished. They were implanted in the human breast by Him who is the Universe. And locked in men's hearts, they have followed down through every adversity and crash and cataclysm. The rights of man are not prompted by conditions. The rights of man have always existed, and men knew them at all times and in all ages. The fathers who builded this republic knew them and knew them well. And they builded well. They gathered from the centuries of war and strife, which we call history, the principles of liberty, that, as we have them now, are the realized hopes for which men had shed their blood through the ages past. And in instruments that will never die, they, the ablest men who ever inhabited the earth, not excepting the committee on Judiciary of this Convention, have handed down to us our inalienable rights as trustees in trust for future generations. From those rights there is no severance.

They knew full well that a government of the character of the one they were then constructing, while the crash of overthrow might suddenly come, was never destroyed by a sudden and successful revolution; but that its destruction was accomplished by changes so gradual as to escape detection and challenge; changes yielded by the people themselves, until finally, when the people awakened, the liberties they had inherited were gone and the things that had been were not.

With wisdom almost divine, they would save us from our very selves. They knew that no country was ever more in danger than when the talent that should be consecrated to peace and the good of the people has no occupation but political intrigue and personal advancement. And they knew full well, did the fathers, the dangers that would assail us—avarice, directed by political sagacity; ambition, coupled with ability and armed with popular support; all educated in craft; all versed in the black grammar of politics; all playing for high stakes; all ready to sacrifice anything not their own to forward their own interests. They could hear as we have heard, advisers, counterfeiting the dulcet voice of progression and reform, telling of untried better things that should supplant the things which had been tried and have never failed us; all aimed at the very structure itself, often from men of honest opinion, but most frequently from men whose motives rest neither upon ignorance nor upon integrity.

The fathers of this republic were not oblivious to the fact that the spirit of unrest at times takes possession of a nation, unrest akin to religious frenzy. They knew that then is greatest peril to a people's liberty and to a nation's life.

They knew the history of the world right well, did those men. They knew of upheavals, and of conquests, and convulsions, and revolutions. They knew of Roman and of Greek; they knew of Copt, and Tartar, and Saracen, and Turk, and Goth, and Vandal, and Hun. They knew that the story of the Anglo-Saxon race was not free from trouble. They had heard of the Johns, and the Henrys, and the Edwards, and the Richards; they knew of Lancaster and of York; they knew that the Charles whose last word was "Remember" had his Cromwell. They had just then, at that very time, but to look across the water and behold their recent ally, the flower of the Latin race; fast whirling into the vortex of the French Revolution, for all this was before that little second lieutenant of artillery, who answered to the name of Napoleon Bonaparte, had stepped into the streets of Paris with his whiff of grapeshot; of which Mr. Carlyle tells. They knew, above all things, did those men, the causes that had impelled them into the struggle in which they had but just triumphed. And they knew that Almighty God had placed in their hands the material with which they were to construct that which man had hoped for, but which man had not yet seen upon the earth.

And so directed by wisdom divine they builded, and they builded strong. And with such strength did they build that four score and seven years after, not long, to be sure, in a nation's life—eighty-seven years—Lincoln, who has been so often misquoted in these degenerate days, Lincoln, haggard and sad and worn with care, his presence a prophesy, and his face a prayer that the cup might pass from him. Yet his voice was mightier than the thunder of that awful battle which had scarcely then ceased to reverberate down the valleys of Pennsylvania when Lincoln declared on the red field of Gettysburg to heroes living, and to the shades of heroes dead, and to all the earth, and to all the people that walk upon the earth, and to all posterity, and to us, that the fathers had builded a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, under which, if preserved, liberty could not perish from the earth, and that he dedicated himself, as millions of others had dedicated themselves, to the preservation of that government, under which, if preserved, liberty could not perish from the earth. And, thank God, he succeeded.

And such was the strength of the government the fathers had made for us that after over four years of assault, armies unsurpassed for bravery and discipline and generalship that did beat against it, rolled back from the onslaught baffled and destroyed.

My fellow citizens from over the sea, had that vast force, with its bravery and numbers and discipline, its commanders and resources and intelligence; had the Southern people, with their army and resources, been set down in the heart of Europe as they were situated here, they would have carved out an empire with the sword, and the world would have resounded with the crash of falling thrones. Yet this government lives to bless us, thank God. It withstood the tempest's breath, and the battle's rage, and the earthquake's shock. And such is the government and its character that we have invited you here to enjoy and help us preserve. Frowning battlements, yes! moated gates, yes! But remember that fortress was reared that within it may rest in safety, for the first time since the flight of years began, the ark of the covenant of liberty, there to be defended against all who may come to pollute or destroy it.

They not only builded strong, but they were tender and careful of human rights, were the fathers. Look at that compact of 1787. High and low, rich and poor alike; life, liberty, property, religion, morality, knowledge—each citizen secure, so that he and his may stand forth with safety in the glad light of day or in the darkness of night may watch with peace the glories of the sky.

The Man of Sorrow must have directed them. The Man of Sorrow who knows so well the needs of poor humanity, and who did solve for us the silent riddle of death; the beneficent spirit of the Christ must have possessed them, as those mighty men wrote the rights of their fellowmen and their posterity in those mighty charters, not the least of which this report attacks and spits upon.

And in such manner did our fathers build that if we destroy that upon which proximately and next nearest, rest our repose and safety—the constitution that we now have in Ohio, and puncture and riddle it, and tear it into shreds; under it, and the foundation of it all, like the tables of Sinai, stands this great compact to confront us and to halt us and to save us. Why should we be willing to destroy that, the like of which man never beheld since first light gladdened the earth? Why should we attempt to surrender up that which we would sacrifice our best blood to recover when once it is gone? Why leave here in this record that behind which tyranny may entrench itself?

As it is, the federal constitution cannot be amended so as to destroy that compact without our consent. If the federal constitution were swept away by consent of all the states, except Ohio, we could turn to that compact and it would speak to us of our liberty in the voice of Him who created man and endowed him with inalienable rights.

Every clause of that compact is adopted by our present constitution, as it was by the constitution of 1802, in terms or in spirit. And when we depart from our present constitution, and away from any clause of that compact, which we have thus adopted and thereby agreed to keep, by that act, that clause is reintegrate and restored. By that act it is awakened into quick life, and we do but invoke the power of such clause by that very act which violates it. And we should thank God it is thus. We should bow to Him in humblest gratitude that He did so endow our fathers with His divine wisdom.

Mr. DWYER: In support of the report of the committee on Judiciary and Bill of Rights I desire to submit the following:

After the formation of the confederacy of states in 1778, difficulties arose regarding the western lands, portions of which were claimed by the states of Virginia, Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York, the other states claiming that these lands should be held and disposed of for the common benefit of all. The matter became so serious that congress appealed to each of the four states claiming these lands to surrender their claims by acts of cession to the United States for the common benefit of all.

To bring this result about, in the year 1780 congress passed a resolution containing a pledge that the lands when ceded to it should be disposed of for the common benefit of the whole United States, to be sold and formed into distinct states with suitable extent of territory, and to be admitted members of the federal union with the same rights of sovereignty, freedom and independence as the other states.

On this assurance New York and Massachusetts ceded their claims without any conditions except the assurance contained in the pledge made in the resolution of 1780. Connecticut followed suit, but would reserve certain territory. Virginia did likewise, and in its act of cession provided that the territory so ceded should be laid out and formed into states containing a suitable extent of territory, not less than one hundred nor more than one hundred and fifty miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances would permit, and the states so formed to be distinct republican states, and admitted members of the federal union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom and independence as the other states, and referred especially to the resolution of congress of 1780, which was declared to be the condition of the deed. Under the act of congress of 1780 these lands when ceded became a trust on the part of the United States to be carried out according to the acts of cession, and these acts provided that the states when formed out of the territory should be admitted into the Union on an equal footing in all respects with the original states.

It was also provided that the lands should be disposed of for the common benefit of all the states, and that the manner and conditions of their disposition should be regulated by congress. In 1785 congress passed an ordinance for the future survey and sale of the domain in the west. All this was done prior to the ordinance of 1787.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the original states in their acts of cession, were careful to provide that the states to be carved out of the territory northwest of the river Ohio should be admitted into the Union with all the rights of sovereignty and authority of the original states. The ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory was not their act. They had no hand in it. It was solely an act of congress, and I claim that it had no longer any binding force on the states when admitted into the Union, except as to such matters as would be of national character, as the regulation of the navigable waters for the purpose of commerce.

The ordinance of 1787, as we know, provided for the writ of habeas corpus and trial by jury and judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law. Under this ordinance the first territorial government was formed at Marietta, Ohio. This government, when formed, paid very little attention to the provisions of the ordinance of 1787. It did not strictly confine itself in its legislative authority as provided for by the ordinance. When they could not find laws of the original states to suit their condition, they supplied their wants by enactments of their own. By the ordinance of 1787, when the territory should contain a population of five thousand free male inhabitants of full age, as the ordinance provided for, on proof to the governor, the territory should be authorized to elect representatives to the territorial legislature. By territorial laws passed these provisions were confined to freeholders of fifty acres in fee simple within the district, and only freeholders in fee simple of two hundred acres were eligible as representatives, and ten freeholders of five hundred acres each were to be selected, five of which the president was to appoint as his legislative council.

The two bodies were to make laws. The governor possessed a negative on all legislative acts, which he exercised without stint in vetoing bills.

The foregoing method of legislation did not show much spirit of republicanism notwithstanding the ordinance of 1787 provided for a government republican in form.

Article 5 of the ordinance of 1787 fixed the boundaries of the eastern state, now the state of Ohio, but congress changed it subsequently, against the protests of many of the people, who claimed it a violation of the ordinance of 1787. Because of their protests congress made some modifications of the boundaries to satisfy the people. This exercise of authority by congress in changing the boundaries, notwithstanding the so-called compact between the states in the ordinance of 1787, shows how congress viewed it, as being within its power to change or abrogate, as it did in the admission of new states. As showing what action was taken by congress in organizing territorial governments and states out of the Northwest Territory, and as to what action was taken on their admission into the Union as states, and the action taken by the highest courts of record of these states, as to what effect, if any, the ordinance had in controlling their action, I desire to present the following:

First, as to the state of Ohio: On April 13, 1802, an enabling act was passed by congress with the provision that said state when formed should be admitted to the Union on the same footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever. The only reference it made to the ordinance of 1787 is that the state should be republican and not repugnant to the ordinance of 1787, between the original states and the people of the states northwest of the river Ohio.

The preamble to the constitution of Ohio adopted in 1802 pursuant to the foregoing enabling act recites that "the people of the eastern division of the territory of the United States, northwest of the river Ohio, having the right of admission into the general government, as a member of the Union, consistent with the constitution of the United States, the ordinance of congress of 1787, and of the law of congress, entitled 'An act * * * for the admission of such state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states and for other purposes, * * *, do ordain' this constitution, etc.

On the 19th of February, 1803, congress passed an act recognizing the state of Ohio as one of the states in the federal Union, but made no reference therein to the ordinance of 1787. Neither did the new constitution adopted in 1851, under which we have ever since been living, make any reference to the ordinance of 1787.

Passing from Ohio, I will next consider what action was taken by congress in reference to the territory and state of Indiana. On the 19th of April, 1816, congress passed the enabling act for the admission of Indiana into the Union as a state. The fourth section of the act recites:

The representatives of the people shall form a state government, "provided that the same whenever formed shall be republican and not repugnant to those articles of the ordinance of the 13th of July, 1787, which are declared to be irrevocable between the original states, and the people and states of the territory northwest of the river Ohio."

On the 29th day of June, 1816, by resolution, the representatives of Indiana in convention assembled accepted the terms of the enabling act, but no mention therein was made of the ordinance of 1787.

On the 29th day of June, 1816, the constitution of the state of Indiana was formed. In the preamble it recites:

We, the representatives of the people of the territory of Indiana, in convention met, at Corydon, on Monday, June 10, 1816, * * * having the right of admission into the general government, as a member of the Union, consistent with the constitution of the United States, the ordinance of congress of 1787, and the law of congress "An act to enable the people of the Indiana Territory to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of such state into the Union (being the enabling act) on an equal footing with the original states * * * do ordain and establish the following constitution * * *

Congress on December 11, 1816, adopted a resolution reciting:

Whereas in pursuance of an act of congress * * * the people of said territory did form for themselves a constitution and state government which constitution and state government, so formed, is republican and in conformity with the principles of the articles of compact between the original states and the people and states in the territory northwest of the river Ohio, passed on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That this state of Indiana shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever.

February 10, 1851, the state of Indiana adopted another constitution, which is still in force, in which no mention is made of the ordinance of 1787.

In considering the proceedings had between congress and the state of Ohio on its admission into the Union as compared with the proceedings had in reference to the state of Indiana on its admission into the Union, it will be seen that Indiana would be more forcibly bound by the articles of the ordinance of 1787 than would the state of Ohio. Yet we find from the decisions of the courts of the state of Indiana that the state did not regard itself as in any way bound by the terms of the ordinance. In the case of Beauchamp vs. The State (6 Blackford's Reports, 302), the supreme court of Indiana says:

The legislative authority of this state is the right to exercise supreme and sovereign power subject to no restrictions except those imposed by our own constitution, by the federal constitution, and by the laws and treaties made under it.

Reform of Jury System.

In support of the foregoing we cite the following cases:

Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington Railroad vs. Gieger, 34 Ind.
Fry vs. the State, 63 Ind., 558.
McComas vs. Krug, 81 Ind., 327.
8 Blackford, page 11.

In the case of Vaughan vs. Williams, 3 McLean's Reports, page 532, Judge McLean says:

When the people of Indiana came into the Union as a state, they were as much bound by the constitution of the United States as the people of any other state, and any and every part of the ordinance which conflicts with the constitution of the Union, so far as the state of Indiana is concerned, was consequently annulled. The common consent required to annul such part of the ordinance is found in the formation of the constitution and consent to come into the Union by the people of Indiana and the acceptance of the constitution and recognition of the state by Congress.

Again, citing 6 McLean's Reports, page 212, Columbus Insurance Company vs. Curtenius, the court says:

It was never doubted but that any provisions of the ordinance which were contrary to the constitution of the United States and the laws passed pursuant thereof, or to the constitutions of the states formed out of that territory were abrogated, because the common consent mentioned in the ordinance was then presumed.

The territory of Illinois was formed February 3, 1809. Section 2 of the act of congress provides that there shall be established within said territory a government in all respects similar to that provided by the ordinance of congress of July 13, 1787. April 18, 1819, congress passed an enabling act for the admission of Illinois, authorizing the state to be admitted on a footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever. Section 4 of the act provides that the state when formed is to be republican and not repugnant to the ordinance of July 13, 1787, between the original states and the people and states of the territory northwest of the river Ohio. On April 18, 1818, Illinois accepted the enabling act as passed by congress. No reference is made to the ordinance of 1787. In 1818 Illinois established a constitution, the preamble of which is as follows:

The people of the Illinois Territory, having the right of admission into the general government as a member of the Union, consistent with the constitution of the United States, the ordinance of congress of 1787, and the law of congress approved April 18, 1818—do by their representatives in convention, ordain and establish the following constitution.

In 1818 congress passed a resolution admitting the state of Illinois into the Union, in which it recites in substance as follows:

Whereas, pursuant to an act of congress, the people of said territory did form a constitution, which is republican in form and in conformity to the principles of the articles of compact between the original states and the people and states in the territory northwest of the river Ohio, passed July 13, 1787; said state is therefore admitted and declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever.

In 1870 Illinois adopted a new constitution. No mention is made of the ordinance of 1787.

As to how the ordinance of 1787 was regarded in Illinois by the decisions of its supreme court, I quote the following: Phoebe vs. Jay, 1 Breese Illinois Reports, page 268. The court in deciding the case says:

Congress, however, admitted this state into the Union with this constitutional provision and thereby I think gave their consent to the abrogation of so much of the ordinance as was in opposition to our constitution. [The question was on the introducing of negroes and mulattoes into the state.]

In the case of People vs. Thompson, 155 Illinois Reports, page 452, in the syllabus of the case, we find:

The ordinance of 1787 passed by the congress of the federation for the government of the Northwest Territory, has no force in Illinois, except so far as its principles are embodied in the state constitution.

On January 11, 1805, congress passed an act organizing the territory of Michigan.

Section 2 of the act provided, "There shall be established within said territory a government in all respects similar to that provided by the ordinance of congress passed July 13, 1787, for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio."

June 15, 1836, congress passed an enabling act for the admission of Michigan as a state.

Section 2 of said act provides that—

The constitution and state government which the people of Michigan have formed for themselves be; and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed; and that the said state of Michigan shall be, and is hereby, declared to be one of the United States of America, and is hereby admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original states, in all respects whatsoever.

Section 3 provides—

As soon as the assent herein required is given, the president of the United States shall announce the same by proclamation, and thereupon and without any further proceedings on the part of congress, the admission of said state into the Union as one of the United States of America on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever shall be considered as complete—

Nothing is said about the ordinance of 1787.

January 26, 1837, an additional act was passed by congress reciting:

Reform of Jury System.

That the state of Michigan shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever.

No mention is made of the ordinance of 1787.

In 1835 Michigan adopted a new constitution. The preamble recites:

We, the people of the Territory of Michigan, as established by the act of congress of the 11th of January, 1805, in conformity to the fifth article of the ordinance providing for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, believing that the time has arrived when our present political condition ought to cease and the right of self-government be asserted, and availing ourselves of that provision of the aforesaid ordinance of the congress of the United States of the 13th day of July, 1787, and the acts of congress passed in accordance therewith, which entitled us to admission into the Union upon a condition which has been fulfilled, do by our delegates in convention assembled mutually agree to form ourselves into a free and independent state, by the style and title of the state of Michigan.

In 1850 Michigan adopted another constitution, but nothing is said of the ordinance of 1787.

On the foregoing the courts of Michigan have held, in the case of The La Plaisance Bay Harbor Company vs. The Common Council of the City of Monroe, Walker Chancery Reports, 155, that "the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio is no part of the fundamental law of this state since its admission into the Union. It was then superseded by the state constitution, and such parts of it as are not found in the federal or state constitutions were then annulled by mutual consent."

In 1836 the territory of Wisconsin was established. Section 12 of the act provided:

The inhabitants of the said territory shall be entitled to and enjoy all * * * the rights, privileges and advantages granted and secured to the people of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, by the articles of the compact contained in the ordinance for the government of the said territory, passed on the 13th of July, 1787; and shall be subject to all the conditions and restrictions and prohibitions in said articles of compact imposed upon the people of said territory.

August 6, 1846, congress passed an enabling act which provided the territory of Wisconsin be and is hereby "authorized to form a constitution and state government for the purpose of being admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, by the name of the state of Wisconsin."

No mention is made of the ordinance of 1787.

The constitution of Wisconsin was adopted February

1, 1848, in which no mention is made in any way of the ordinance of 1787.

May 29, 1848, congress ratified this constitution, and the act recites:

That the state of Wisconsin be and is hereby admitted to be one of the United States of America, and is hereby admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever.

No mention is made of the ordinance of 1787.

With reference to any binding effect of the ordinance of 1787 on the state of Wisconsin, I herewith cite from the decisions of its supreme court as follows:

In the case of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company vs. Crothall, 18 Wisconsin 109, in the syllabus, the court says:

The adoption of the constitution of this state by the people thereof, and the assent of the government of the United States thereto, and the subsequent admission of the state into the Union, are effectual to abrogate the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, in so far as the provisions of that ordinance conflict with those of the state constitution.

Again, in State ex rel. Attorney General vs. Cunningham, 81 Wisconsin, page 441, in the syllabus, the court says:

The ordinance of 1787 and the organic act of the territory of Wisconsin became obsolete upon the admission of the state into the Union, but they may be regarded as in pari materia and helpful and of historical value in construing the sections of the constitution, which took the place of any of their provisions.

The court also cites Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan, 3 Howard, in support of this decision.

In view of the foregoing decisions of the states of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, it appears to me that any decision made by the supreme court of Ohio in conflict therewith would be outweighed by the decisions of the other four states, all having been, like Ohio, carved out of the Northwest Territory.

In addition to the federal authorities cited in the report of the committee, I desire to call special attention to Coyle vs. Smith, 121 U. S. 855, and to quote the second proposition of the syllabus of said case, as any national question or question requiring judicial interpretation of the ordinance of 1787 between the original states and the United States would have to be ultimately and finally settled by the United States supreme court:

The constitutional duty of guaranteeing to each state in the Union a republican form of government, gives congress no power to impose restrictions in admitting a new state into the Union which deprive it of equality with other states.

Mr. Doty moved that further consideration of Proposal No. 54 be postponed until tomorrow and that it retain its place at the head of the calendar.

Resolution Limiting Debate.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 128:

Resolved, That debate upon proposals upon their third reading shall be limited to ten minutes for any member upon the main question and five minutes upon any amendment or other subsidiary motion; upon all other questions the debate shall be limited to five minutes. Time of debate shall not be extended except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution will lie over.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. Campbell.

Mr. DOTY: I move that we adjourn until 9:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was carried and the Convention adjourned.

SEVENTY-FOURTH DAY

MORNING SESSION.

THURSDAY, May 23, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the member from Holmes [Mr. WALKER].

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 129:

WHEREAS, The contract of the official reporter was not made with any idea of night sessions other than Monday nights, and

WHEREAS, The Convention has held and intends to hold other night sessions; therefore

Be it resolved, That the official reporter be and is hereby allowed the additional sum of thirty dollars for each night session, other than Monday nights.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. DOTY: I desire to make a statement to the members on that side of the house. You will find the green bound book is missing. The reason for that is the force has worked on it all night and they are working on it now, but they will not be able to have your books back on your desk until the noon recess. It was simply a physical impossibility. I would state further that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology is now ready to make reports upon all of the remaining proposals, but until these books are upon your desks we will not make further reports because there is plenty of work upon the calendar for at least until late this afternoon. We will not make any reports until tomorrow morning, although if it is necessary to keep the Convention in work we may make some this afternoon. The members on this side of the house will be very glad to lend their books to members on that side for use this morning's session. Now I desire to call up at this time Resolution No. 128.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of Resolution No. 128.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. DWYER: Before that question is put I would like to say a word. There is a matter pending before the body on an amendment or motion of Judge Norris upon which an argument was made by the judge yesterday afternoon, and I would like very much to have a short time to present an argument on the other side and I cannot do it in ten minutes because it is a constitutional question that may take half an hour.

The PRESIDENT: If the rule is adopted the way is open to change the rule by unanimous consent.

The resolution was adopted.

THIRD READING OF PROPOSALS.

Proposal No. 54—Mr. Elson, was taken up.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the delegate from Marion.

Mr. ELSON: It seems to me that we should not spend any more time in debating this question. If there is any one thing that we have done since the sessions of this Convention began that has brought forth expressions of approval from the people of the whole state and nation it is this proposal. I think we are generally agreed upon that. It was passed by a vote of ninety-four to twelve and it seems to me that we can dispense with further debate, and so far as this amendment is concerned I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. MARRIOTT: In view of the statement made by the member from Montgomery who desires to be heard on that amendment I suggest that the gentleman withhold that motion to lay on the table.

Mr. ELSON: If it is the sense of the Convention that I should do so I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Montgomery announces his opposition to the amendment and if it is laid on the table it will save that much time.

The motion to table was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. ELSON: I wish to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 6 after "cases," strike out "The general assembly may authorize the rendering of a verdict" and insert "a verdict may be rendered".

Mr. ELSON: I will explain this amendment. It takes from the legislature the right to make the provision. As it reads it says that the legislature may provide a rule of this kind and the legislature might or might not do it. As I said before, the proposal has been very favorably received and I think we should not leave it to the legislature, but should make it mandatory.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I agree with the professor that there is no proposal that has been introduced and passed by this Convention that has met with as much expression of approval from the people of the state as this proposal, and I am in favor of its adoption just as the committee reported it and I move to lay this amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of line 7 add: "Whenever, after a jury is impaneled in a civil case, a vacancy or vacancies shall occur in the panel through the death or discharge by the court on account of sickness or other cause of one or more of said jurors, not exceeding three in number, the trial shall proceed, notwithstanding such vacancy or vacancies, to the remaining jurors who shall be competent to return a verdict upon the concurrence therein of a number not less than three-fourths of the original jury."

Reform of Jury System—Regulation of Corporations and Sale of Personal Property.

Mr. DOTY: I move that that amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "cases," in line 6 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury."

Mr. CASSIDY: The committee on Arrangement and Phraseology in almost every proposal changed the language "general assembly may" to "Laws may be passed," but for some reason that was not done here. It was overlooked and this amendment restores that. Then this amendment adds "by the concurrence of". The other way it might be construed that if a jury were selected and one or two were absent or sick still a verdict might be rendered by a concurrence of not less than three-fourths.

Mr. PECK: I want to say that this amendment was prepared by Mr. Cassidy and myself yesterday afternoon after consultation. We were not satisfied with the language of the committee on Phraseology and we thought it open to the very criticism that Mr. Cassidy makes, that three-fourths might apply to the number of jurors present instead of to the number participating in the verdict. The language now proposed removes that. It also provides for the other matter, that "laws may be passed," instead of empowering the "general assembly" to pass laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 96, nays 4, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Mr. President.

Those who voted in the negative are: Messrs. Brat-tain, Campbell, Norris, Price.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 54—Mr. Elson, to submit an amendment to article I, section 5, of the constitution.—Reform of civil jury system.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: The proposal is finally adopted. The president wishes to announce that unless the Convention definitely orders otherwise no one, who might have been in his seat to answer to his name when it was first called, will be recognized to cast his vote on a proposal that carries.

The next proposal in order is Proposal No. 72—Mr. Stokes.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. MAUCK: I offer an amendment. I stated yesterday the purport of the amendment I offer. The purpose is to make it clear that the last sentence of the proposal is not necessarily related to the preceding part of the proposal, by adding the following after the last words: "Whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual", and to make of the last sentence a separate paragraph of the section.

The amendment was read as follows:

Div. 1. Make a separate paragraph of the last sentence.

Div. 2. After the last word of the proposal strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual."

Mr. COLTON: I raise a question as to whether it should be paraphrased. The custom of the committee has been not to break any section into paragraphs and we have followed that consistently, and I do not see the necessity of making a paragraph here.

Mr. MAUCK: The only purpose in making a separate paragraph was to disassociate it as far as possible from the rest.

Mr. LAMPSON: It has been our custom not to paraphrase, and I do not see any reason for departing from that custom.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment will be divided and the first question will be put on separating the paragraphs.

The first division of the amendment was lost.

The second division of the amendment was agreed to.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 72—Mr. Stokes, to submit an amendment to article XIII, section 2, of the constitution.—Regulation of corporations and sale of personal property.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of Proposal No. 209.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Just right there. I do not understand that the rules make any provision for action or revision of these proposals after amendments have been made under the third reading. If so, I am not aware of it. It seems just as necessary that the proposals, when amended, should be considered by the committee on Phraseology now as at any time. I move that this proposal and all proposals acted upon in this way be referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, to be reported at their convenience before adjournment.

Mr. DOTY: I would say that the Rules committee provided for another roll call on all of these matters, so that if the motion of the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. HARRIS] is adopted and we should have any criticism to make our report could be embodied in the final report, which requires a roll call.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I raise the question for the consideration of the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: Certainly. The Convention should have opportunity to consider the provision before final adoption.

Mr. LAMPSON: There will be a final roll call upon all amendments under one grand resolution so to speak.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I shall insist on the first part of my motion, that the proposals that are amended be referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The motion was carried.

Mr. HARTER, of Huron: I want to have my vote recorded on Proposal No. 54.

Mr. DOTY: I object.

Mr. PRESIDENT: We are going to spend a great deal of time calling rolls if the members exercise this privilege.

Mr. DOTY: I object. If we are going into this sort of a thing we shall never have any journals.

Mr. HOSKINS: What right has the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty] to object to that?

Mr. DOTY: My right as a member.

Mr. HOSKINS: No one can lay down an arbitrary rule that the names cannot be called—

Mr. DOTY: The right I have is my right as a member. The vote on this proposal is on the journal and I question the right of any member to have a subsequent roll call. We cannot run that desk and have people voting all day long.

Mr. HOSKINS: I don't know of any rule that prevents it.

Mr. DOTY: The rule is that the journal shows who voted for a proposal.

Mr. LAMPSON: The rule requires that each member shall vote when his name is called and it has simply been by unanimous consent and sufferance that we have been permitting members to come in and have their votes recorded.

The PRESIDENT: And the rule will be enforced hereafter.

Mr. WINN: I desire to make an inquiry. I would like to know whether the rule announced by the president respecting the members' right to have their votes recorded after their names are passed applies only to those whose names are not called until after the result is announced?

The PRESIDENT: The president so understands.

Mr. WINN: I cannot see any objection to that. What I wanted to know was, if a person is sitting in his seat here and fails to answer, he could not have his name called and vote before the result was announced.

Eight-Hour Day on Public Work — Workmen's Compensation.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on Proposal No. 209.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. TETLOW: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

"In line 7 strike out the word "laborers" and in lieu thereof insert the word "workmen".

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 93, nays 11, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hoskins,	Pierce,
Antrim,	Hursh,	Price,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 209—Mr. Tetlow, to submit an amendment by adding section 37 to article II, of the constitution.—Eight hour day on public work.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: The next proposal is Proposal No. 24, by Mr. Cordes.

The proposal was read the third time.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 107, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 24—Mr. Cordes, to submit an amendment by adding section 35 to article II, of the constitution.—Workmen's compensation.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents, for death, injuries or occupational diseases, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payment shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employees and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employe when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employees. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rates of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

The PRESIDENT: The next proposal is Proposal No. 236—Mr. Worthington.

The proposal was read the third time.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 108, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 236—Mr. Worthington, to submit an amendment to article II, section 8, of the constitution.—Investigations by each house of general assembly.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors, to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all powers, necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation.

or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers.

The PRESIDENT: The next proposal is Proposal No. 100 by Mr. Fackler.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. PECK: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the period in line 6 and in lieu thereof insert a comma and add the following: "until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. PECK: It is obvious there are times and places in the state where they do not desire to have justices of the peace and the number of these places is increasing. The constant tendency is to do away with them as in Cleveland. It was the intention of the Judiciary committee to report an amendment putting the whole matter into the hands of the general assembly and that is what I offer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAGGART: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend Proposal No. 100 as follows: By adding "Schedule No. 1."

Resolved, further, That in the event Proposal No. 184—Mr. Peck, passed by the Convention, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then section 9 of article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing proposal, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

Mr. TAGGART: If the Convention will indulge me, this is the action of the Schedule committee in order to provide for any inconsistency that may arise between Proposal No. 184 if adopted and Proposal No. 100 if adopted. Judge Peck's proposal abolishes the office of justice of the peace as a constitutional office, in which event the whole matter would be in the hands of the legislature, and then there would be no purpose or object in the Fackler Proposal, No. 100.

Mr. PECK: I am not sure that Proposal No. 184 does abolish it. It simply drops out the word's "justice of the peace" here, but those words are in several other places and I think those words are necessary here.

Mr. TAGGART: The only other place in which the words "justice of the peace" occur is section 9, which this repeals and leaves the matter in the hands of the legislature to create courts inferior to the courts specified in your proposal. We had the matter up in the committee on Schedule.

Mr. PECK: I am in sympathy with the object. I think the whole matter should be left to the general assembly. If you are sure of what you are driving at, all right.

Mr. TAGGART: The committee has gone over it carefully and we are unanimous that that will be the effect.

Mr. HALFHILL: Cannot your committee make a more definite description than by referring to Proposal 184?

Abolition of Justices of the Peace in Certain Cities.

Mr. TAGGART: We had nothing more definite than that to refer to. We could not make it any more specific and certain than by referring to Proposal No. 184.

Mr. HALFHILL: When can that addenda be changed?

Mr. TAGGART: Those words can be changed or made more definite by the committee on Phraseology.

Mr. KNIGHT: The amendment just offered does two things. First it nullifies Proposal No. 100 if Proposal Nos. 184 and 100 are both ratified by the people. Proposal No. 184 then becomes section 9 of article IV. But if Proposal No. 100 is not ratified by the people will it have any effect on section 9? There is a section 9 in the constitution now and there will be a question, which does this repeal?

Mr. TAGGART: If the electors adopt this they adopt it with the distinct statement of the schedule that this is of no force and effect in case Proposal No. 184 is adopted.

Mr. KNIGHT: It leaves the original section 9 of article IV as it stands now?

Mr. TAGGART: Yes, and expressly provides that section 9 of article IV is repealed if the Peck proposal is adopted.

Mr. ELSON: The object of the Fackler proposal, I suppose, is to prevent the suburban justices of the peace from doing a city business. I think that is the only object of it. Does the second proposal cover that?

Mr. TAGGART: The object and purpose of the Fackler proposal is to prevent country justices of the peace opening offices in the city of Cleveland and similar cities and doing a justice of the peace business, but looking at the language of the proposal as read by the secretary and adopted by the committee on Phraseology it prohibits the justices of the peace in such places and it recognizes the office of justice of the peace as a constitutional office. Now you cannot have recognition of the office of justice of the peace in this proposal and have it stricken out in the judiciary proposal as proposed by Judge Peck.

Mr. ELSON: The purpose is if the Peck proposal passes third reading that this is cancelled?

Mr. TAGGART: No; this is to go to the people and the people know what is included in this schedule.

Mr. PECK: What becomes of Proposal No. 100? What effect does your proposal have upon that proposal?

Mr. TAGGART: If Proposal No. 184 does not pass and this does, then Proposal No. 100 becomes part of the constitution and prohibits justices of the peace from exercising jurisdiction in the cities. If Proposal No. 184 and this also pass, then Proposal No. 100 is of no effect, section 9 of article IV is repealed, and Proposal No. 184 is effective.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: It seems to me that this question of schedule is out of order now. We haven't adopted any of these proposals yet. In my opinion the time to fix up the schedule is after we have adopted the proposals that are contradictory. Why not pass this proposal?

Mr. KING: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not asking a question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I am asking a question. I propose to ask it, too. Why not leave this until we know whether Judge Peck's proposal, eliminating the justices of the peace, passes? Why discuss a matter of that sort when nothing has passed the Convention?

Mr. TAGGART: The Schedule committee must assume some facts, and we have assumed that as the Peck Proposal No. 184 has passed this Convention on two readings and as Proposal No. 100 has passed this Convention on two readings, that those proposals will pass. We are providing for a contingency that will arise in these proceedings, and we cannot wait until the last moment and then provide a schedule. We must do it as it comes along.

Mr. KING: If we submit all of these in a separate schedule might not the schedule be defeated?

Mr. TAGGART: That is true, and we think this is the best way.

Mr. KNIGHT: Should not this proposition be prefaced by "Resolved further"?

Mr. TAGGART: I have no objection to that.

Mr. KRAMER: If Judge Peck's proposal is adopted by the people, the only way to get relief would be to apply to the legislature.

Mr. TAGGART: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: What would be the effect upon the justices of the peace now in office if Proposal No. 184 is adopted?

Mr. TAGGART: That is another proposition that will have to be disposed of at the proper time and place.

Mr. LAMPSON: I ask the question merely for the purpose of getting before the Convention what I apprehend is the necessary policy of the committee on Schedule, whether or not the different sections or items of the schedule must not necessarily be made dependent upon the adoption or rejection of the various amendments to which they apply?

Mr. TAGGART: That is undoubtedly the case. We cannot have a complete schedule and have it submitted to the people and defeated and the original proposals passed. We would have confusion worse confounded.

Mr. LAMPSON: The paragraphs or amendments if adopted might not go into effect.

Mr. MAUCK: I would ask the member from Wayne if we could not accomplish all that is desired to be accomplished by merely passing this proposal: "Laws may be passed providing for the office of justice of the peace"?

Mr. TAGGART: I had nothing to do with the original proposal. I did not champion it and I do not know anything about it. I am taking care of this proposed amendment so that there will be no inconsistency.

Mr. KING: I would inquire of the acting chairman of the committee on Schedule if the proposition as to the life of existing justices of the peace is not proper to be taken care of by an additional schedule added to Proposal No. 184?

Mr. TAGGART: Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I am opposed to the whole proposal. I believe the justice courts are the courts of the people. There is a great deal of business in the hands of the justices and this is the only place where a man not a member of the bar can plead his own case.

Mr. DOTY: You have no objection to a proposal or amendment to the constitution that would allow you to have justices of the peace in Stark county and allow us not to have them, in Cleveland?

Abolition of Justices of the Peace in Certain Cities.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: That is all right.

Mr. DOTY: That is all that this provides for.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I am opposed to having our minor courts taken out of the hands of the people. I think this is a lawyers' proposition.

Mr. DOTY: If we prefer any other form of courts, you don't care what we have?

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I do not want the power taken from the people for the sake of the lawyers. Many of the best decisions that have been made have been made by justices of the peace.

Mr. DOTY: The question I had in mind is, you do not have any objection to our substituting municipal courts for justices of the peace in Cleveland?

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: No, sir.

Mr. DOTY: That is all this proposal undertakes to do, and therefore the objection you have to the proposal is not good.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I cannot say as to that, but I do not want the minor courts taken away from the people.

Mr. DOTY: The gentleman misapprehends the object of this proposal.

Mr. KING: I would like to inquire if the member from Stark [Mr. HARTER] does not know that the right of any citizen of the state to appear in any court and argue and conduct his own case is not prohibited in the constitution and cannot be prohibited by law.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I did not know that.

Mr. KING: That is true.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: We laymen hesitate very much to appear in court.

Mr. PECK: Do you know that within the year past a woman appeared in the supreme court of Ohio and argued her own case and won it?

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I admit that women are just as capable to practice law or any other kind of business as men. We admitted that in the woman's suffrage proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: The matter of the proposal under consideration was thoroughly discussed by the committee on Judiciary and Bill of Rights. I have the same feeling as the gentleman who just left the floor in regard to this matter. The justice courts are the courts of the people. I want this proposal to pass because I believe my friends in Cleveland are working in the interest of the people in that locality, but I want the justices left as a constitutional office, hence I am opposed to that part of Judge Peck's proposal, and for that reason I objected to the gentlemen's fixing the schedule at this time. I am not a lawyer but a farmer, and farmers are noted for their common sense. It would be well to get something for the Schedule committee to work upon before we make the schedule, and it seems to me to discuss the schedule before we have anything before us is out of order. I am glad to be permitted now to talk, for I won't be called to order because I am asking a question in a square-toed way. I favor making the office of justice a constitutional one and I signed the report for this proposal and propose to vote for it. I believe we should pay no attention to the schedule until we get something to act upon. I do not know that I have made myself clear. I think my good friend from Cuyahoga understands, but if he does not, as a gentleman said the other day, I cannot furnish him with judgment.

Mr. PECK: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the delegate from Wayne.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 105, nays 2, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Hamilton,	Norris,

Mr. Davio and Mr. Evans voted in the negative.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 100 — Mr. Fackler, to submit an amendment to article IV, section 9, of the constitution. — Abolition of justices of the peace in certain cities.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law; provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

Abolition of Justices of the Peace in Certain Cities—Removal of Officials.

SCHEDULE NO. I.

Resolved further, That in the event Proposal No. 184—Mr. Peck, passed by the Convention be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of constitution, then section 9 of article IV, of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing proposal if adopted, shall be of no effect.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 241 is the next in order.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. WATSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

SECTION I. At the time when the vote of the electors shall be taken for the adoption or rejection of any revision, alterations or amendments made to the constitution by this Convention, the following article, independently of the submission of any revision, alteration or other amendments submitted to them shall be separately submitted to the electors in the words following, to-wit:

SECTION 1a. Every elective public officer of the state of Ohio or of any of its political subdivisions, may be removed from office at any time, by the electors entitled to vote for a successor of such officer, through the procedure and in the manner herein provided for, which procedure shall be known as the recall, and is in addition to any other method of removal provided by law.

SECTION 1b. Upon the filing of a petition as herein provided, asking for the recall of any such elective official, the question of recalling said officials shall be submitted to the electors entitled to vote for a successor of such official, at the next succeeding annual November election, occurring not less than ninety days after the filing of said petition. The number of signatures necessary upon said recall petition shall be as follows:

(a) For the recall of an official for whose successor all of the electors of the state are entitled to vote, twenty (20) per cent. of said electors.

(b) For the recall of an official for whose successor the electors of any district, county, municipality or part of a municipality are entitled to vote, twenty-five (25) per cent. of the electors of such district, county, municipality or part of a municipality.

SECTION 1c. The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined, shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor, by the electors of the state, district, county, municipality or part of a municipality entitled to vote for a successor of the official sought to be recalled. All petitions asking for the recall of a public official shall be filed at the same time and in the following places to-wit:

(a) For the recall of an official for whose successor the electors of the entire state are entitled to vote, in the office of the secretary of state.

(b) For the recall of an official for whose successor the electors of a district comprising more than one county and less than the entire state are entitled to vote, with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the most populous county in said district.

(c) For the recall of a county or municipal official, with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the county whose electors are entitled to vote for a successor to such official or in which the municipality of which the incumbent is an official, is located.

SECTION 1d. The general election laws shall apply to recall elections in so far as applicable. Any recall petition may be presented in separate parts, but each part shall have attached thereto the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of a petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature to such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed the same to be electors and that they signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name, and no other affidavit thereto shall be required.

Every recall petition shall contain a general statement of not more than two hundred words, giving the reasons for such recall. Each signer of a recall petition must be an elector of the state qualified to vote for a successor to the official sought to be recalled and shall place on such petition, after his name, the date of signing and his place of residence. In the case of a signer residing outside of a municipality he shall state the township and county in which he resides, and in the case of a resident of a municipality, in addition to the name of such municipality he shall state the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink or indelible pencil, each signer for himself.

The signatures upon such petitions so verified shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient unless not later than forty days before the election it shall be otherwise proven, and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No recall election shall be held invalid or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such election was called. After one recall petition and election, no further recall petition shall be filed against the same officer during the term for which he was elected, unless the petitioners signing such petition shall first pay into the public treasury which has paid such election expenses, all the expenses of the preceding election.

Removal of Officials.

Separate ballots shall be provided for the expression by the electors of their vote for or against the recall of officials sought to be recalled. There shall be printed on the recall ballot, as to every officer whose recall is to be voted on at said election, the following questions: "Shall (name of person against whom the recall petition is filed) be recalled from the office of (title of the office)?" following which question shall be the words "Yes" and "No" on separate lines, with a blank space at the left of each, in which the voter shall indicate by making a cross-mark (X), his vote for or against such recall.

In case any official against whom a recall petition has been filed shall die or resign, all further proceedings in the election shall be stayed. If a majority of all the votes cast by the electors entitled to vote for a successor to such official at the election at which the recall of the official is voted upon are in favor of the recall of such official, his office shall be deemed vacant and shall be filled according to law.

SECTION 1E. At the election at which this amendment is submitted to the electors, a separate ballot in the following form shall be furnished to each elector desiring to vote:

RECALL OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

	For recall of public officials.
	Against recall of public officials.

Separate ballot boxes shall be provided for the reception of such ballots. The elector shall indicate his choice by placing a cross mark (X) within the blank space opposite the words "For the recall of public officials if he desires to vote in favor of the amendment above mentioned and within the blank space opposite the words "Against recall of public officials" if he desires to vote against the amendment above mentioned. If the votes for the recall of public officials shall exceed the votes against the recall of public officials, then the above mentioned shall be section _____ of the schedule of the constitution regardless of whether any revision, alteration or other amendment submitted to the electors shall be adopted or rejected.

Mr. PECK: I move that that amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. DOTY: A point of order. The member from Guernsey has the floor.

Mr. PECK: He did not have the floor. How did he have the floor? I rose and addressed the chair and was recognized and the gentleman from Guernsey wasn't on his feet.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Guernsey has the floor.

Mr. PECK: I appeal from the decision of the chair.

He did not have the floor. The member from Guernsey wasn't even on his feet.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Hamilton [Mr. PECK] is right in that statement. The member from Guernsey [Mr. WATSON] was not on his feet.

Mr. DOTY: The member from Guernsey was holding the floor. He had offered an amendment.

Mr. PECK: The member from Cuyahoga butted in as usual and took up the time of the member from Guernsey.

Mr. DOTY: As soon as the amendment was presented the member from Guernsey had the floor.

Mr. LAMPSON: I make the point of order that the motion to lay on the table takes precedence of the motion to amend.

Mr. DOTY: It has not been amended.

Mr. LAMPSON: But there has been a motion to amend and Judge Peck moved to lay that on the table.

Mr. DOTY: How could he?

Mr. LAMPSON: The motion to table was in order. He was entitled to the floor to make a motion of precedence.

Mr. DOTY: If he can get the floor.

Mr. LAMPSON: But he is entitled to it.

Mr. PECK: I was recognized and I made the motion regularly.

Mr. LAMPSON: On page 29 is a list of motions that take precedence over each other. To amend is No. 8 and to lay on the table is No. 4.

The PRESIDENT: There is no doubt as to the precedence, but the question was whether the member from Guernsey had the floor.

Mr. LAMPSON: The member from Guernsey was sitting in his seat.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: The member from Guernsey had not asked for recognition.

Mr. WATSON: The member from Guernsey was going to as soon as the amendment was read.

The PRESIDENT: Under the rules of the Convention the member from Guernsey [Mr. WATSON] had the floor and there is an appeal from the decision of the chair. Shall the decision of the chair be sustained?

The decision of the chair was sustained.

Mr. WATSON: I shall occupy only a moment of your time. This question was discussed once before. We are asking that this be substituted for the pony recall of the member from Montgomery [Mr. DWYER]. As was stated in respect to this matter sometime ago, it is evident that the people of this state have a right to rule and beyond any doubt we will hear that urged on the question of taxation. When the gentleman from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL] argues the taxation question, the people have a right to rule. Why should not they have a right to rule in regard to their public officials? They have a right to recall them. If a man has a right to choose a man for his service he has a right to reject him when he thinks he is not properly performing his duty.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Hamilton [Mr. PECK] moves to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the Convention proceed with the orders of the day.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the orders of the day be proceeded with?"

Removal of Officials.

Mr. PECK: What is "the orders of the day?"

The PRESIDENT: This proposal and the amendment.

Mr. PECK: More tricks! Let us have a fair deal and quit these tricks. I do not believe in tricks. If you are going to pass this proposal pass it, but pass it fairly.

The PRESIDENT: The question of precedence is first to adjourn, second to recess, third to proceed to the orders of the day and fourth to lie upon the table.

Mr. PECK: The motion to lay upon the table has been made and you cannot displace it.

The PRESIDENT: The question to table has been made and now a motion of precedence, to proceed to the orders of the day. Even when you are on the floor that question takes precedence and that motion could be made.

Mr. LAMPSON: Then you sustain the point I made a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT: The question now before the Convention is on the motion made by the gentleman from Cuyahoga to proceed to the orders of the day. The orders of the day is this proposal and amendment. It amounts to two votes on it. That is all.

Mr. PECK: My question would get right to it. I demand the yeas and nays on the question to lay on the table.

Mr. LAMPSON: I would like to make a statement. This question of proceeding to the orders of the day has no application to the situation here now. We are already proceeding with the orders of the day, which is this proposal and the pending amendment. That is the orders of the day and we are proceeding with it. The gentleman from Hamilton moves to lay an amendment on the table, the very thing that we are proceeding with, to which his motion is applicable. The motion of the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty] has no application in considering the orders of the day, to which the motion to lay upon the table is applicable.

Mr. MARRIOTT: A point of order. I suggest that the president had not recognized the gentleman from Cuyahoga, and he therefore had no right to make the motion until he was recognized.

The PRESIDENT: The president will overrule that point.

Mr. DOTY: I do not understand whether the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] has made a point of order or made a suggestion. Of course the orders of the day is the pending proposal and pending amendments. Now a member makes a motion which interferes with that and that is to lay it aside, and the object of that proceeding is to have the Convention decide in a matter of precedence of one question over another, whether we shall lay aside the orders of the day and proceed to it; and it brings a question in the positive form before it brings it in the negative form, and the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] is aware that the object of this order of business to take precedence has been thus accorded.

Mr. LAMPSON: But you are proceeding with the orders of the day and it is not necessary to do that.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to ask a question and have it answered in plain terms. Suppose the motion of the gentleman from Cuyahoga passes; what will be the next thing in order?

Mr. DOTY: To go right on.

Mr. PECK: Then my motion comes right in there.

Mr. DOTY: No, sir.

The PRESIDENT: If the members wish to sustain the member from Hamilton [Mr. PECK] they should vote against the motion to proceed to the orders of the day.

The motion to proceed to the orders of the day was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the amendment lie on the table?

Mr. DOTY: On that I demand the yeas and nays.

DELEGATES. No, no.

Mr. DOTY: I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DWYER: One or two men in this Convention are taking up the whole of the time. They want to hurry things, but they want to take up all of the time talking themselves, and it is time that they should be stopped.

The question being "Shall the motion of Mr. Peck to lay on the table be agreed to?"

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 80, nays 30, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Norris,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 241—Mr. Dwyer, to submit an amendment by adding section 38 to article II, of the constitution.—Removal of officials.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors, to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

The PRESIDENT: The next is Proposal No. 118—Mr. Lampson.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. JONES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out of the title the words "good roads" and insert in lieu thereof the words "inter-county wagon roads".

Mr. JONES: I desire to be heard very briefly in the explanation of the purpose of this amendment. As will be seen from the reading of the proposal as it passed second reading, the specific thing for which the bond issue is authorized is not the building of roads in general, which, as was explained on second reading, will cover all kinds of public highways, wagon roads, railroads, electric roads and all other means of reaching from one point to another. The proposal, as it was finally passed, was limited to a particular kind and class of roads, to-wit, "inter-county wagon roads." Now the title ought to express exactly what the proposal provides for. As it stands now, it is a proposal to raise the limit of bonded indebtedness of the state for "good roads" as a general term. That may be crossroads, byroads leading from the barn to the market, electric roads, railroads or any sort of public highway. Now the title ought to be changed so that it will clearly express what the proposal provides for, raising the bond limit to authorize the building of "inter-county wagon roads." Then when anybody reads the title he will get a correct idea of what the bond limit is to be raised for.

Mr. DOTY: Do you not think $50,000,000 should be in there so that they could have the full benefit of the whole thing?

Mr. JONES: I have no objection to that. It might unduly lengthen the title, but it conduces to a ready and quick understanding of what the proposal is. Certainly this should be changed, because unless the person has read the proposal he will have to ask half a dozen questions to find out what kinds of roads it relates to. Are the roads all over the county to be improved? No, sir; it is the inter-county roads.

Mr. LAMPSON: I have no objection whatever to the amendment so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DOTY: Does the gentleman object to my suggestion about putting $50,000,000 in there?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes; it makes it so long.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Does not the gentleman think the words "good inter-county roads" should be left in there?

Mr. JONES: That is anticipating the result of the work of the state highway department. I think we should adjust the title to what is provided for in the body of the proposal. It is not to build "good inter-county wagon roads," but to build "inter-county wagon roads," and the title should contain exactly what is expressed by the body of the proposal.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Does not the member know that the philosopher says "anticipation is better than actual possession"?

Mr. JONES: Yes, but we had better keep away from too much anticipation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTRIM: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out comma and insert "and" before "repairing" in line 15.

Strike out "and maintaining" in line 15.

In line 19 strike out period after "maturity" and insert comma and the words "the general assembly shall provide for the maintenance of said roads."

Mr. ANTRIM: Just a word by way of explanation. You know that this proposal provides for two things:

1. For the issuing of $50,000,000 in bonds for the purpose, as the proposal reads, of constructing, rebuilding, improving, caring for and maintaining a system of inter-county wagon roads, and also,

Extending Bond Limit for Inter-County Wagon Roads.

2. For the paying off of those bonds.

My amendment has to do particularly with the subject of maintenance, and what I do is to eliminate the word maintaining in the first part of the proposal and in the latter part of the proposal introduce a clause, "and the general assembly shall provide for the maintenance of said roads." If we leave the proposal as it is there will be no money left for maintenance after we have spent the $50,000,000 and the roads will be left unmaintained, but if we pass my amendment we shall have $50,000,000 for the purpose of building the roads and then the general assembly will provide for the maintenance of those roads. My idea of maintenance is that automobile fees and other fees may be used for the purpose of maintenance, and of course, if there is not enough from those sources, then a tax can be levied, but for a number of years to come there will be an abundance of money from the automobile fees and other sources to maintain the roads as they are being built, so I think this will be an excellent idea.

Mr. LAMPSON: I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to have the words changed from "the general assembly" to "laws shall be passed to."

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Does not that defeat the purpose of the proposal?

Mr. ANTRIM: I think not.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: If you provide for money outside, that is contradictory.

Mr. ANTRIM: I think not.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAUCK. I offer an amendment. One might suppose from the title that this placed a limitation on the issuance of state bonds for good roads. My amendment is that before the word "State" in the title there shall be inserted the words "To extend to $50,000,000 the". The purpose of this is to advise those who are called upon to vote upon this proposal that they are extending the limitation and placing a limitation in the constitution that does not now exist.

The amendment offered by the member from Gallia was read as follows:

In the title insert before the word "State" the words "To extend to fifty million dollars the".

Strike out the capital "S" in "State" and insert lower case "s".

Mr. LAMPSON: I think this amendment is wholly unnecessary. If there is any question submitted to the people that the people will understand all about, it is the question of raising the bond limit for an intrastate system of roads. It may involve a large amount and the people are perfectly familiar with the method of voting. We have used the referendum upon bond issues everywhere from time immemorial. There will be no trouble about the people understanding what is involved in this proposition and I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MAUCK: On that I demand the yeas and nays. This certainly does not subtract from the knowledge of the people.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 41, nays 64, as follows.

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Peters,
Antrim,	Harris, Hamilton,	Price,
Beatty, Morrow,	Johnson, Williams,	Redington,
Bowdle,	Kramer,	Riley,
Brown, Highland,	Lampson,	Rockel,
Brown, Pike,	Leete,	Shaw,
Campbell,	Longstreth,	Smith, Geagua,
Collett,	Ludey,	Stamm,
Colton,	Marriott,	Stevens,
Cunningham,	Marshall,	Tannehill,
Dunn,	Matthews,	Walker,
Elson,	McClelland,	Weybrecht,
Evans,	Miller, Ottawa,	Winn.
Fess,	Peck,

Those who voted in the negative are:

Baum,	Harbarger,	Miller, Fairfield,
Beatty, Wood,	Harter, Huron,	Moore,
Beyer,	Harter, Stark,	Norris,
Cassidy,	Henderson,	Okey,
Cody,	Hoffman,	Pierce,
Cordes,	Holtz,	Roehm,
Crites,	Hoskins,	Shaffer,
Crosser,	Hursh,	Smith, Hamilton,

FitzSimons,	Lambert,	Ulmer,
Fluke,	Leslie,	Wagner,
Fox,	Malin,	Watson,
Hahn,	Mauck,	Wise,
Halenkamp,	Miller, Crawford,	Woods.
Halfhill,

So the motion to table was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the colon in line 12, and lines 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 including the period and insert the following:

"Provided, however, that in the year 1913, and in each year thereafter, including the year 1922, a tax levy of three-fourths of one mill on the grand tax duplicate of the state shall be levied and collected for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, repairing and rebuilding a system of inter-county wagon roads throughout the state. In the year 1922 the advisability of continuing such levy shall be submitted to a vote of the people."

Mr. THOMAS: This amendment simply provides that good roads shall be built by direct tax rather than by a bond issue of $50,000,000. It will permit the raising of $3,500,000 per year; and as it will require nearly half that amount to be levied and collected annually by taxation to pay off the bonds, it seems to me by direct taxation we can just as well add on that much more and build $50,000,000 worth of good roads with $50,000,000.

Extending Bond Limit for Inter-County Wagon Roads.

If the estimates given by the financiers of the Convention are correct, it will require something like $38,000,000 to pay the interest charges on this $50,000,000, running from thirty-five to forty years. I want to save to the citizens this $38,000,000 in interest and let them have $50,000,000 of good roads for $50,000,000.

Mr. LAMPSON: This question was fully gone into when the proposal was up for consideration on second reading. This is simply a practical way to kill the proposal. I think every delegate in, this Convention thoroughly understands the situation. The question is up to the delegates. I do not know that I have any more interest in the matter of a good-roads system in the state of Ohio than have the other delegates, but I do not desire that the proposal shall be killed without my protest. The responsibility is on the Convention and I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MAUCK: On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 57, nays 48, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Henderson,	Peters,
Beatty, Morrow,	Holtz,	Price,
Bowdle,	Johnson, Madison,	Read,
Brattain,	Kerr,	Redington,
Brown, Highland,	Kilpatrick,	Riley,
Brown, Lucas,	King,	Rockel,
Campbell,	Knight,	Rorick,
Collett,	Kramer,	Shaw,

Dunn,	Longstreth,	Tallman,
Elson,	Ludey,	Tannehill,
Evans,	Marriott,	Ulmer,
Fess,	Marshall,	Walker,
Halfhill,	Matthews,	Weybrecht,
Harris, Ashtabula,	McClelland,	Winn,
Harris, Hamilton,	Miller, Ottawa,	Wise,
Harter, Stark,	Okey,	Mr. President.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Baum,	FitzSimons,	Miller, Crawford,
Beatty, Wood,	Fluke,	Miller, Fairfield,
Beyer,	Halenkamp,	Moore,
Brown, Pike,	Harbarger,	Norris,
Cody,	Harter, Huron,	Peck,

Doty,	Kehoe,	Stilwell,
Dwyer,	Keller,	Taggart,
Eby,	Kunkel,	Thomas,
Fackler,	Leslie,	Wagner,
Farnsworth,	Malin,	Watson,
Farrell,	Mauck,	Woods.

So the amendment was tabled.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. HOSKINS: I would ask for information of the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] whether or not under this proposal the entire expense of these roads is not borne by the state. Is it the intention of the proposal to prevent any consolidation of state funds with local funds in the building of a single road?

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not think it would necessarily prevent it. It would be up to the legislature to pass the laws regulating the matter, but these roads will be state roads.

Mr. HOSKINS: It does provide that the cost of building and maintaining shall be by the state. Will not that be construed to prevent any consolidation of the state and county or city funds?

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not think so.

Mr. HURSH: In lines 12 and 13 the proposal reads, "contract debts and authorize the issue of bonds for an amount in the aggregate not to exceed $50,000,000." Do I understand that the whole debt shall not exceed $50,000,000?

Mr. LAMPSON: It never can exceed in the aggregate $50,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: And whenever any part of the $50,000,000 is paid off no additional amount will be used.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is true; and the legislature may not authorize $50,000,000. It may not authorize anything.

Mr. WOODS: If this goes into the constitution, do you understand that afterwards the state debt can be kept up to $50,000,000 all the time?

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not. Whenever a part of it is paid off it will be reduced to that extent and no more can be issued in lieu of that.

Mr. WOODS: That is not what it says.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is my interpretation of it.

Mr. SHAFFER: In line 12 did you purposely leave in "general assembly"?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Is not the statement of the member from Medina absolutely incorrect?

Mr. LAMPSON: I so understand it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: There is nothing in the proposal by which the total amount of bonds issued can ever exceed $50,000,000, and whenever any of them are paid no additional bonds can be issued.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Clear as sunlight.

Mr. HURSH: I would suggest to the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] that he put that in very definite terms, because that is going to raise trouble in the campaign. It is as to whether the bond limit will be at $50,000,000 always or not.

Mr. LAMPSON: I call the attention of the gentleman to line 13 on the yellow paper, "provided however that the general assembly may contract debts and authorize the issuance of bonds which in the aggregate shall not exceed $50,000,000." Not in the aggregate at any one time, but in the aggregate at all times.

Mr. HURSH: Is not that language susceptible of misconstruction?

Mr. LAMPSON: I think not. The bonds all put together shall not exceed at all times $50,000,000 and not more than $10,000,000 in any one year.

Mr. WOODS: Are you willing to put those words in?

Mr. LAMPSON: Certainly. That is what it means.

Mr. WOODS: But it doesn't say that.

Mr. KNIGHT: There seems to be a little doubt about this matter, and in view of that I move to recess until 2 o'clock p. m. The clerks say they must have two hours at noon to put our books in shape. If there is to be a vote on the main proposal anyway soon I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. LAMPSON: If the word "total" were inserted before the word "aggregate" would that satisfy you?

Mr. WOODS: We want to fix this so that only $50,000,000 can ever be issued, and if you mean that say it.

Mr. LAMPSON: My opinion of the matter is that the language is sufficiently explicit to limit the amount to an aggregate of $50,000,000. The word "total" inserted before the word "aggregate" will not add anything to it.

Mr. KNIGHT: Would it not be equivalent to saying the total whole?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: And would anybody think about using that language?

Mr. LAMPSON: I think not. I think this is as explicit as it can be made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: The language here used was practically passed upon by the highest courts of this state. It was practically the language I adopted in an amendment which cut out any possibility of exceeding $50,000,000. The trustees of the sinking fund had that language defined, and there is no possibility that any excess over $50,000,000 will be issued. Whenever any of the bonds that are issued are paid off, they cannot be reissued.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. JONES: As a member of this Convention know, I have always been opposed to this bond issue, but if it should be passed by this Convention and adopted by the people I, like every other member, am interested in having it in the best possible shape although I would oppose the proposal even if the amendment I am offering were adopted; but I want to call the attention of the Convention for a moment to the suggestion by the gentleman from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS], which it occurs to me has very much merit in it, and if this proposal is adopted it should be incorporated into it. There is doubtless a very prevalent feeling over the state that these inter-county roads ought to be contributed to, if built, by those directly benefited. The owners of land along which the roads run will be benefited by them, and the townships into which they go will likewise be benefited much more than townships into which they do not go. There will be special benefits to different classes of people by this expenditure. That being so, the way ought to be left open for the legislature to provide for the building of these roads by the distribution of the burdens, when it is desired to do so, among those that are benefited. I know in a number of counties with which I am familiar the people would be glad to have the lands along the roads assessed for part of the cost in order to encourage the building of the roads. As this proposal now stands there can be nothing done with the money from this bond issue except that the state shall expend the whole of it in the construction of roads. The direction is explicit that these roads shall be built, repaired, maintained, etc., by the state. That cuts out all opportunity for doing what is suggested by the gentleman from Auglaize, of getting aid from townships or from abutting property owners or by contributions from or assessments upon owners of automobiles and various other ways in which funds may be contributed to this $50,000,000 in order to do what is admitted by all cannot be accomplished by $50,000,000, to wit, provide a complete system of inter-county roads in the state. I think this provision restricting the expenditure to the state should be eliminated.

Mr. HALFHILL: Is there anything in this proposal that prevents doing the very thing that you are arguing for?

Mr. JONES: Yes, the language that the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing and maintaining "shall be paid by the state." Now we ought to have these inter-county roads built, if they are going to be built, by any means that the legislature may provide. If the localities through which they run are willing to contribute, or if in the wisdom of the legislature it is found that they should contribute, there should be a way open to do it. If the legislature wanted to apply the automobile fees to the building of these roads there should be a way of doing so. It should not be limited to this particular fund and nothing else.

Mr. HALFHILL: The contention of the gentleman from Fayette [Mr. JONES], it seems to me, is not borne out by the reading of the proposal. There cannot be any construction that the entire cost of these roads shall be borne by the state to the extent of excluding anything like local contribution. No such construction as that can be properly placed on that language. The purpose of the proposal, as we all know, was to give the state, through the state highway department, the right to locate these roads and have general supervision over them. Now the moment that you begin to put into this proposal matters purely legislative, so that the county commissioners or the local authorities can in any way help out in this, just that moment you open the door and do away with the exclusive control of a good highway system of state roads.

Mr. JONES: What possible objection could there be, if the legislature wanted to so provide, to having, for instance, the automobile fund devoted in part to the building of these roads?

Mr. HALFHILL: That is a mere matter of detail as to creating the revenue and has nothing to do with this. The question of collecting automobile fees and putting that in here would be improper. That is a question of taxation.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would not the money collected by the state known as the automobile fund belong to the state, and could not the state use it as it saw fit?

Mr. HALFHILL: Certainly. It is now covered into the treasury and distributed in a certain way and could be exclusively devoted to the benefit of this system.

Mr. JONES: Note in this proposal that provision is made for the building of these roads by this bond issue. The language is, "such wagon roads shall be paid for by the state". Now, the wagon roads are to be built by this fund. How can you provide by legislative enactment for the building of them in any other way than is provided here and limited to those funds raised by the state?

Mr. HALFHILL: Why, it doesn't provide for them to be built any other way. It was intended that they should be built as a system of county roads under the control of the state, and the fund created here is small compared with the resources of the state undertaking the great internal works. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves, when we see the property of the state of Ohio now as compared with the property it had at the time the canals were built, to object to creating a fund of $50,000,000 to improve the public highways of the state.

Mr. ELSON: Does this proposal make it possible for the state in any way to assess the property benefited by the inter-county roads?

Mr. JONES: It is well known to everybody that the question of taxation and the question of assessment come in upon an entirely different basis under the present constitution. The question of taxation is one thing levied under general law. The question of assessments is another thing, and they are levied under special laws. Does not that preclude the possibility of the use of any local assessment? The language in line 21 was "shall be paid by the state."

Mr. HALFHILL: It does not preclude it for the logical reason I have already tried to state.

Mr. JONES: I have been at sea for a month. If I were sure of that I would not have anything else to say, but it is not plain. The property by which the roads run will be very much more benefited than the property off some distance, and why should not the men along whose property the road runs contribute something to it when it enhances the value of their property?

Mr. HALFHILL: They can be assessed under this present arrangement.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to renew the motion to recess. It is evident that this discussion will take further time.

Mr. HALFHILL: I yield the floor, but I want it when we resume.

Mr. KNIGHT: I move that the Convention recess until 2:30 o'clock p. m.

The motion was carried and the Convention recessed until 2:30 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. LAMPSON: I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HALFHILL: I have the floor. How much time have I, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT: Five minutes.

Mr. HALFHILL: Then I must decline to be interrupted by questions until I get through.

Gentlemen, this proposal has received a very thorough consideration by the Convention and its terms are plain and explicit. It simply says that the present limitation of the constitution against incurring debts for internal improvements, is removed, and the state is authorized to issue bonds to the amount of $50,000,000 for the purpose of inter-county roads. That limitation of $50,000,000 is explicit and complete, and whenever any bonds are retired that ends it. In other words, the total or aggregate issue shall be $50,000,000, so that there can be no misunderstanding on that point. Now the proceeds of these bonds are for the purpose of constructing, building, improving and repairing a system of inter-county roads. Do not overlook the fact that I mentioned and discussed in the early part of the session, that there are eighty-eight thousand miles of highways in the state of Ohio; that, at the outside, any system that could be established or maintained in Ohio, would not control over ten or twelve per cent of the mileage of the public highways. So that this system of roads, which it is presumed will be under the control of the state highway department, will not represent more than ten or twelve per cent of the roads or highways of the state of Ohio.

It follows then that there is ninety per cent of the highways of the state of Ohio that must be improved by local assessment—by local political subdivisions, and they are the roads that lead out onto these main arteries of trade. These are the trunk lines that are provided for here. These trunk lines or main lines of highway are the only roads which it is contemplated can be established by any system put in effect under the power granted by this proposal. That much of it is plain and I think cannot be gainsaid.

Now I want to address a little attention to the argument of the member from Fayette. Gentlemen, there is nothing that is quite so confusing as a half truth. Before we realize it, a half truth entangles us in the meshes of its uncertainty and we are involved in inextricable difficulties; and there is nothing that is so dangerous to us right now as to consider and embrace any half truths, no matter how adroitly suggested in argument. Keep in mind this is a system of state highways under state control. Nobody expects that by virtue of the power provided for here we will have any local control of these particular highways. Then the argument is suggested by the member from Fayette [Mr. JONES] that this provision in the fundamental law is wrong because it provides that the cost of these state highways shall be borne by the state. Where else should the cost be borne except by the state? These highways are the main arteries of traffic. They are the inter-county highways. There is yet ninety per cent of the highways of the state, the cost of constructing which must be largely assessed upon the local property in order that the local roadways that lead out to these inter-county highways may be improved. So as a plain proposition why should not the state bear the cost and the expense of this ten or twelve per cent of the total mileage of the highways of the state? However, it does not necessarily even have to do that in order to meet the objection that is urged by the member from Fayette, because you must distinguish between the power to tax and the power to assess; and if we do not distinguish between the power of taxation and the power of assessment as exercised under our constitution then we cannot logically consider and weigh the argument that was urged here by the gentleman from Fayette. If there is anything that is well established in Ohio it is that the power of taxation and the power of assessment are two separate powers in that they do not draw their authority from the same source in the constitution. Permit me to read the first three sections of the syllabus in the case of Reeves vs. The Treasurer of Wood County, 8 O. S. 333:

1. The power to authorize assessments, as distinguished from taxes proper, is comprehended in the general grant of legislative power in the general assembly.

2. Such assessments are not embraced within the meaning of the word "taxing," in the second section of the twelfth article of the constitution.

3. The power to authorize assessments for the construction of free turnpike roads, and the opening of drains, as well as for the improvement of streets and sidewalks, exists to the same extent under the present constitution as under that of 1802.

So it is important to keep that distinction in mind. Now it is very apparent to all who have observed, that under general laws providing for taxation, certain property is not taxed, as when streets are improved around churches, the church property although not taxed is assessed by way of benefits conferred for the special improvement. In other words, the power of assessment is so different from the power of taxation that we should not confuse the two at any time, especially with reference to this particular proposal, because forsooth it is argued that by putting a state highway through a part of a county you will enhance the value of certain lands that lie adjacent to that highway which is paid for by the state; and that it ought to be within the power of the state to assess a portion of the cost and expense upon adjoining lands because they are especially benefited and improved by virtue of that improvement. For if that be the correct policy, then there is ample authority under the constitution as it now exists and there will be ample authority after the passage of this proposal just as it is written. There can be no gainsaying that point. I doubt the advisability of it, but that is altogether a different thing. That is something for the legislature to take into account, and I say if it is necessary to invoke the power of assessment, it being a different power from the power of taxation, it can be exercised and put into effect right along with this proposed amendment, so that the objection raised there is met by the existing power in the constitution. The taxing power is a greater power than the power of assessment. The taxing power reaches out and takes in all the lands, whether near to the highway that we construct or whether remote from the highway. That is one of the purposes of the issuance of these $50,000,000 of bonds. Those remote lands can be made of nearer and easier access to good roads and markets. Do you not consider that the people of the city have already improved streets and paid for them by special assessment and by adopting this they are going to do more proportionately to help out the farmers than by any other scheme of public improvement since the state was organized? Therefore, where the people of a municipality have already paid for their own local assessments and improvements of streets and have enhanced the value of their cities, they are ready to stand their proportionate assessment on the grand duplicate to make this fund for the inter-county system better, so that the products of the farm can be brought to market.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 13 after "aggregate" insert the words "of all issues."

Mr. LAMPSON: I have offered this amendment to make this emphasize what I believe the proposal already means, and I have done it to meet the suggestion of several delegates like the gentleman from Hardin [Mr. HURSH], the gentleman from Guernsey [Mr. WATSON], and the gentleman from Medina [Mr. WOODS]. Insert after the word "aggregate" in line 13 the words "of all issues," so that it will read that the general assembly may contract debts and authorize the issuance of bonds which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed $50,000,000.

Mr. HURSH: I would like to have you insert in line 19, "such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing and rebuilding, improving and repairing the same shall be paid by the state." That authorizes the legislature to make other levies than the $50,000,000.

Mr. LAMPSON: They can do that anyway, and this does not authorize it.

Mr. WINN: Suppose the national government should enter upon a plan of improving the roads, and one of the bills now pending in congress provides for an apportionment of the money among the states according to the amount that the states will provide—in other words, that the United States government will give an equal amount with the state—suppose such a law were enacted, would there be any way by which this fund could be used in connection with the national fund to construct roads?

Mr. LAMPSON: I think so.

Mr. WINN: Find it. It is provided that these roads shall be built under general laws and the state is to do the constructing, building and improving. Suppose congress provides a plan and that is put under some department of the national government, and they come into Ohio and want to appropriate $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 if we appropriate the same amount. None of this money could be available.

Mr. LAMPSON: If the national government undertakes to do anything of that kind it must act with the authority of the state. It could not act with the authority of the counties or municipalities.

Mr. WINN: I do not think you understand what I am talking about. I did not make myself clear. This provides that the state shall have charge of constructing, repairing, maintaining. That does not contemplate that the state in conjunction with any county or any other official or national government may expend this money in the construction of roads. Is it not confined absolutely to the authorities of the state?

Mr. LAMPSON: It must be by the state and the state must have control. I know nothing about the feeling of congress, but if a proposition is made to allow the general government to come into the state and undertake to control the roads you will be up against public sentiment that you cannot get over. You will be invading state rights.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Suppose the United States government wants to help and the state accepts, who in Ohio would object to it?

Mr. LAMPSON: There would not be anybody to object.

Mr. HALFHILL: It is a well-known fact that the

Extending Bond Limit for Inter-County Wagon Roads.

United States appropriates its money for public improvement only in two ways: One is by giving a gratuity to the state whereby the state has control, and the other is by taking the entire jurisdiction to itself. In this instance it would be a gratuity.

Mr. WINN: How do you know?

Mr. LAMPSON: I know that the state would not relinquish its rights.

Mr. WINN: Might not the government undertake to take upon itself the construction of the Erie canal?

Mr. HALFHILL: The government never takes control of any such a thing unless it has jurisdiction and title.

Mr. LAMPSON: I undertake to say there is not a state in the Union that would surrender its rights to the general government to control its public highways.

Mr. TAGGART: Does the provision of Proposal No. 118 in anyway provide that the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing, maintaining, etc., shall be exclusively paid by the state?

Mr. WINN: No, sir; it does not.

Mr. DWYER: I was going to suggest this: I believe it would be a great calamity to have the general government come into Ohio to build roads, and I will give you my reasons in just a moment. All over Ohio we have good turnpike roads. All through the South they have not any. All through the West and especially in Kansas they have not any. If we get the government to building roads we will have to pay for those roads, and we will pay more than our proportion because we have a level country and good roads. It would be an unfortunate thing to have the general government build roads in Ohio, for if it built roads in Ohio it would build roads in other states. I have had experience in this matter. We have a good level country here and good roads. If the general government builds roads here it must build in Arizona and New Mexico and all through the South, where they haven't any roads, and we shall have to pay for them. We had better build our own roads and let the general government alone.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I am opposed, on general principles, to the state's going into a bond issue to build roads, but if the wisdom of the people of the state stands for the issue of the bonds I, for one citizen of the state of Ohio, want to see the proposition go through entirely in the hands of the state without any entanglement whatsoever from any section or subdivision of the state. I do not want any donations from the counties to that fund. I want nobody responsible for that issue and for that application of that entire proposition but the state of Ohio. I know from experience what it means to take in the counties and townships in a proposition of that sort. It means logrolling at every point, and when your road system is completed it is a laugh for the age. Let the state of Ohio build the grand arteries of communication where in its judgment they will fit and let the counties conform to these arteries just as the body physical responds to the main arteries of the same. When we do that we have a comprehensive system that begins somewhere and ends where it was intended to end, and the result of it will be that we will have a line of roads for an extravagant price, because you are willing to saddle on your children a sum total in the aggregate for the interest to men who do not do a bit of work. Personally I would like to see $150,000,000 expended for good roads in Ohio, and I believe it would be an economic outlay in its results, but on the other hand I want a dollar's worth of roads for every dollar's worth of money taken out of the pockets of the people of Ohio for the road proposition. When we do that, instead of having five thousand miles of roads for an outlay of $120,000,000, or about $24,000 a mile, you will have for the same amount about twelve thousand miles of road. That difference of seven thousand miles of main arteries in the state of Ohio is worth considering. Is it not the proper thing for us to figure on that? It is our children that have to pay that we may run over the roads in our days. That is not a broad spirit. Let us aim to leave those following us as good conditions as we have had. It will be less of a hardship to give them good roads that we have paid for than it was for our progenitors to dig out of the wilderness roads of Ohio that we might go through them. But if we decide to issue this $50,000,000 of bonds that will cost $120,000,000 before we are through, in the name of common sense let us keep the business in our own hands. Do not let us enter into any negotiation or alliance with any county on anybody that has an axe to grind. Give it to the highway commission, and let that end it, and let them give us such roads as meet the requirements of the age. When we do that the counties will have the privilege of taxing themselves to meet the building of the laterals to connect with them, and when we do that we will have a road system that is extensive, and we shall have nothing to regret except the error of bonding ourselves instead of paying as we go, and we will have a road system that will be a credit to Ohio.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: May I ask a question?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: As long as you have lived in Cleveland have you ever voted for a bond issue?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Yes; I voted for one the other day.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: You have been guilty of the heinous crime of putting on future generations a bond issue?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: I voted the other day to bond the city of Cleveland for a playgrounds for the children, knowing full well that I was handing the matter over to the children to pay the cost of the same in the future.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Have you ever voted for any other bond issue?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Yes, and I expect to do so again as long as we are silly enough to keep to the bonding proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE: I am opposed to this scheme of issuing bonds to build a temporary improvement for which posterity will have to pay at a time when these roads will probably be worn out. We have been talking about good roads. Now a good road is a road that will last half a century, and there is no provision here for good roads. This is a scheme to issue bonds. There are millions of dollars in this country that are seeking investment every year, and this bond issue will make a market for the investment of $50,000,000 which will draw interest without labor. To that extent it is an investment which may be termed parasitic. There are many counties in this state that are now heavily bonded for good roads. They have built roads and spent millions of dollars. If this bond scheme is adopted by the people, these counties will be rebonded and the money will be spent in the counties that have not had enterprise enough to bond themselves and to build their own roads, and to that extent it will be unfair. Now we are to borrow $50,000,000, and if we get $50,000,000 worth of roads, which I doubt, it will cost us in total levy about $100,000,000 to pay off that $50,000,000. We could get $50,000,000 worth of roads for $50,000,000 if we didn't issue the bonds.

I have been charged with voting against good roads. I have been voting in favor of good roads and against bankruptcy, and I do not believe in an unlimited issue of bonds. Our states and our nation and the nations of the world and the business enterprises of the world, the railroads, the factories and the industries generally, are bonded for sums incalculable, and personally, I do not believe that this capitalization will ever be paid. The development of the great, rich agricultural land is almost at an end, unless the system under which our business is conducted is radically changed. The fertility is escaping. People who work the land are going into the mills and factories and you will have to see a change in the whole system before there is anything like general prosperity, and this scheme of issuing bonds for roads that we cannot pay cash for is only putting off the day of reckoning. There will come a time when men will refuse to pay. I am opposed to any thing like repudiation, but if we walk deliberately into it, there will come a day of judgment.

There is still another phase. If this issuing of bonds, unlimited in extent for building public service enterprises upon which the people will have to pay the interest, dividends and profits, continues, we may as well issue bonds and build them ourselves. If we permit an issue of bonds to build a railroad, why not issue the bonds and build the railroad? If we issue bonds to build railroads, we will eventually own the roads. There is not much difference in paying two cents at a toll gate when you pass through, and in having some one come to the county treasurer's office and collect three and a half per cent for building the roads. In effect it is the same thing as private ownership of a public highway.

I am going to vote against the bond scheme, but I want to declare before the Convention that if there is anybody in favor of good roads, and if any county in the state needs good roads it is Muskingum county, and I am the man, but I am opposed to this issue of bonds.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 12 strike out the words, "the general assembly may" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "laws may be passed to".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen of the Convention: It seems to me that we have discussed this proposition pro and con for all there is in it, so I call for the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the passage of the proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 83, nays 25, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 118—Mr. Lampson, to submit an amendment to article VIII, section 1, of the constitution.—To extend to fifty million dollars the state bond limit for inter-county wagon roads.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever: provided, however, that laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds to an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed fifty million dollars for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of inter-county wagon roads throughout the state. Not to exceed ten million dollars of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing and maintaining the same shall be paid by the state. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by section 6, of article XII.

Extending Bond Limit for Inter-County Wagon Roads—Schedule—Welfare of Employees.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. KING: I ask unanimous consent to offer a report so that it may go upon the calendar for tomorrow.

Consent was given and the report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Schedule, to which was referred Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended:

Strike out the word "either" in line 4 and insert the word "any" in lieu thereof. After the figures "1913" strike out the period and insert a comma and these words: "except as otherwise specifically provided in any of the said amendments."

After the word "repealed" in line 7 strike out the period and insert semi-colon and these words: "provided that all cases pending in the courts at the time this amendment takes effect shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law."

The report was agreed to. The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and read the second time in its regular order.

On motion of Mr. Doty the proposal as amended was ordered printed and placed on the calendar for second reading tomorrow.

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 54, by Mr. Elson. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye."

The PRESIDENT: The next is Proposal No. 122 by Mr. Farrell.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out in line 6 "a minimum wage".

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: The proposal with the exception of minimum wage seems so sound that I am very anxious to vote for it, and even if my amendment is tabled I state that I shall vote for same because it contains so much that appeals to me that I do not want to oppose it, but the words "minimum wage" mean nothing. They are put in to fool the laboring men. The members of the labor unions know that the words "minimum wage" will accomplish no practical results, absolutely none, and the words are there for the purpose of saying to the laboring men of the state that we have done something for you. As a matter of fact nothing in that direction has been done or can be done for them of a practical nature and I want to voice my protest against such a procedure.

Mr. DWYER: The parliament of England within a month passed a minimum wage for the house of commons, the house of lords, and the house of nobles.

Mr. HARRIS: I have from Mr. Read, of Redington, a list of names of the members of the parliament who have the same minimum wage. I have from Mr. Read, of Redington, a list of names of the members of the parliament who have the same minimum wage.

Mr. HARRIS: I will say something more. I have from Mr. Read, of Redington, a list of names of the members of the parliament who have the same minimum wage.

Mr. DWYER: I have from Mr. Read, of Redington, a list of names of the members of the parliament who have the same minimum wage.

Welfare of Employees.

Mr. PECK: You assert with great confidence, but you do not offer the proof; Judge Dwyer knows what he is talking about and you do not. It has settled the coal strike notwithstanding the talk of some people, and there is no question about our power to do this.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: This statement, like many others that you are in the habit of making, is careless and loose.

Mr. PECK: The statement you make is very impudent, like a good many others you are in the habit of making. You had better find out something before you talk. That is what you had better do.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I know what I am talking about and I know the facts so far as they can be ascertained in this country. The minimum wage in England has been a much disputed question. I shall at the first opportunity present the newspapers verifying my statement.

Mr. PECK: Parliament acted upon the subject and the strike abated and there have been some people—perhaps some people like you—discontented and not satisfied with anything, and they have been trying to get it at a point, but it has not aroused much interest and the strike is over.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: The question is as I have stated and I clearly understand it.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer an amendment notwithstanding
The amendment was read and followed by Hamilton [Mr. PECK].

Mr. PECK: I am in the strike comes. You know in advance what they have in their minds and we do not.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: So in advocating the striking out of these words, "minimum wage," I am advocating something to the interest of the laboring men, because I do not want them to bear the burden of their opponents claiming that after the working men had first agreed to accept the minimum wage, they then had repudiated the agreement. They may and probably will establish a minimum wage below the cost of living.

Mr. PECK: We are just leaving it to the general assembly.

Mr. STILWELL: Is your complaint against the principle or the size of the minimum? The miners are not making complaint against the minimum wage as a principle, but against the size of the minimum wage established.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I have not argued with these gentlemen on the question of principle. I ask you whether my statements are correct and whether the miners of England do or do not complain about the minimum wage actually established by the commission?

Mr. STILWELL: There is some complaint, but far from being by a majority of the miners. They have already accepted it. There are various amounts paid, according to the district, and some of them have the minimum too low for their particular branch of trade.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Is not the variance so great as to threaten another strike?

Mr. STILWELL: Not against the principle.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: No, but against the amount. I am complaining against Judge Peck and Judge Dwyer denying and contradicting the correctness of my statements, but I want to say in conclusion that I forgive both of them.

Mr. PECK: Neither of them has asked your forgiveness.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Judge Peck insists on getting angry. I refuse to get angry, because my statement has been verified by Mr. Stilwell, the labor leader.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I would like to make a few remarks in regard to this subject because I am compelled to be against it, but not for the reason that Mr. Harris, of Hamilton, is opposed to it. I believe the laboring men are in favor of the proposition and that, gentlemen, is not the reason I am opposed to it. I think it will prove detrimental. I have been in a country something like a republic when the laboring men ran the affairs of that government. They had a minimum wage and it was fixed at eight shillings, or about $2 a day. I heard the premier of South Australia make a speech in Melbourne wherein he wanted the minimum wage run up to nine shillings instead of eight. I tell you that everything in Australia is worse today than ever before in its existence. I know the minimum wage was fixed in New Zealand, and an old gentleman seventy years of age was working for a man that he had been working for for six years, but as he was getting old, the gentleman he was working for agreed with him on the price of seven shillings per day, but the union would not let him go to work because the minimum wage was eight shillings, and in six months from that time that old man of seventy years landed in the poor house. If I thought this would accomplish any good I would vote for it. I voted for every proposition that the laboring men wanted and I dare say I did it from conscientious motives. I am not a candidate and I do not expect that I ever shall be, and I just vote my sentiments, but I want to say to the assembly that I am in Hamilton [Mr. HARRIS] that he has contracted, and the laboring men have a right to be paid, how much I do not know, but I don't think it will do any good, but I cannot do it. I will not do any good.

Mr. STILWELL: You would not deny the recognition of this principle simply because an elderly gentleman out in Australia was denied the right to violate the law?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: As before stated, I heard the premier of South Australia speak in Melbourne. He advocated a minimum wage of nine shillings per day. I know that the working people of Australia think they are slaves of the money men. I was in Australia when four of the six states of Australia were in control of the labor party. I also know that they have had a reaction since then. I know that a proposition for nationalizing many of the industries of that commonwealth has been voted down. I do not like tyranny of any kind. In some parts of Australia if the laboring man does not vote as the leaders dictate he is treated worse than a scab. That is not a free government.

Mr. STILWELL: Do you not realize that we are in Ohio?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Yes, and it amuses me to hear some of the gentlemen on this floor talk. When we were talking about Pennsylvania the other day they told us, "but this is Ohio." I know that we in Ohio adopted the Australian ballot system. I know you added the Torrens land system, and now it comes with very poor grace from my friend from Cuyahoga to tell me that we are in Ohio. Yes, we are in Ohio. I heard Vice-President Sherman talk about being "abroad" when he was a candidate for vice president. Yet I know, with all of my experience away from home, that we are in the grandest state in the Union, but I know we can learn something from somebody else. I know I am representing the best county in Ohio and I know that I live in the best part of Williams county and we have one of the best towns you ever saw.

Now, the laboring men of Australia, like the laboring men of everywhere else, do not like to be pinched. They are for permitting a man to live.

Mr. DWYER: Will you pardon me?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Yes; I will pardon anybody.

Mr. DWYER: You are opposed to sweat shops?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Yes. I think if some of the men who hire the poor boys and girls did not have so much greed in their souls things would be a good deal better.

Mr. DWYER: You are opposed to pauper wages?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I certainly am.

Mr. DWYER: How are you going to prevent it? Now I want to give you an illustration. The railroads of this state and all over the country are paying good wages to their engineers. Why? Because the engineers are organized and demand it. They are paying good wages to their conductors. Why? Because they are organized and demand it. They are paying good wages to their firemen and for the same reason. They are paying good wages to all who are organized because they can demand it—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Let me answer.

Mr. DWYER: Wait until I get through. But take the men who work on the tracks, work in all kinds of weather on the tracks, the men who have no organization, the laboring men, and they are given $1.25 a day. Why? Because they have no organization. Now I am in favor of having minimum wages and having a commission to compel these men to pay more wages to that class of men.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I have been a friend of the laboring men when sometimes they have not been their own friend. I wish to tell my friend from Cuyahoga that I have always been opposed to the tariff tax that is robbing the laboring men on the theory that it will give the capitalists a large profit to be divided up with the laboring men, but there is never any division and the laboring men don't get their share.

Mr. PECK: Did you ever know any set of men, laborers or otherwise, that were satisfied?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: No, sir; and that is the trouble. I want it on a square basis. If you want to vote for this to help the laboring men, I say amen. But I don't believe that you are going to help him any.

Mr. DOTY: In the interest of harmony and especially as between the various members of the Cincinnati delegation, I move that this amendment be tabled.

The motion was carried.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I was going to ask to have the further consideration postponed until tomorrow because I have no printed copy before me, but a friend loaned me his book. Still there are so many amendments I do not know whether I am in favor of it or not, and I would like to have the consideration postponed.

Mr. LAMPSON: There are no amendments that change the substance at all. They are simply changes in the wording.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Then the only question is, if the initiative and referendum should carry would the governor's veto affect that? I don't think it would. My friend has never deceived me and I will withdraw my motion to defer consideration. I just want a fair consideration, and if it is not fair I do not want it passed.

The report was agreed to. The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and placed at the foot of the calendar of today for third reading.

The report was agreed to. The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and placed at the foot of the calendar of today for third reading.

Mr. DOTY: It hardly seems proper to waste three-quarters of an hour. There are at least four proposals on the calendar that will excite no discussion. I would suggest that we take up those four.

The first one is Proposal No. 5, and I move that that have its third reading now.

The motion was carried.

Proposal No. 5—Mr. Cunningham, was read the third time.

Mr. TAGGART: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend Proposal No. 5 as follows: By adding

SCHEDULE NO. 2.

Resolved further, That in the event Proposal No. 91—Mr. Kilpatrick, passed by the Convention, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing proposal, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

Mr. TAGGART: Just a word of explanation: Proposal No. 91 by Mr. Kilpatrick, which is a woman's suffrage proposal, strikes out "white male" and thus permits women to vote. In case that proposal should fail, Mr. Cunningham's proposal, if it receives a majority of votes, would be part of the constitution, but in the event that Proposal No. 91 receives a majority, then there is no necessity for this Proposal No. 5. The committee on Schedule unanimously recommends this schedule.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KRAMER: In line 7 it reads "who shall have been residents of this state for one year next preceding the election and of the county, township, or ward". What I was thinking about was, does the law provide that a man must live in a ward so long?

Woman's Suffrage—Eligibility of Women for Appointment to Certain Offices.

Mr. DOTY: That is in the constitution now; that exact wording.

Mr. KNIGHT: The only change is by striking out the word "white".

Mr. KRAMER: Have we any law requiring a man to reside in a ward?

Mr. DOTY: Yes; twenty days in a ward and thirty days in a county.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 97, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Partington,
Antrim,	Harris, Hamilton,	Peck,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 5—Mr. Cunningham, to amend article V, section 1, of the constitution.—Omitting word "white."

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

SCHEDULE NO. 2.

Resolved further, That in the event Proposal No. 91—Mr. Kilpatrick, passed by the Convention, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing proposal, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. DOTY: The next proposal is an amendment to article XV, offered by Mr. Miller, of Crawford.

Harbarger,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 163—Mr. Miller, of Crawford, to submit an amendment to article XV, section 4, of the constitution.—Eligibility of women for appointment to certain offices.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector: provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public, or as members of boards, or to positions in those departments and institutions established by the state or any political sub-division thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.

Proposal No. 169—Mr. Worthington, was read the third time.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

Civil Service—Limiting Power of General Assembly in Extra Sessions.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 84, nays 16, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 240 — Mr. Anderson: To submit an amendment by adding section 19a to article I, of the constitution. — Damages for wrongful death.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

Sec. 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

Mr. DOTY: There is such an era of good feeling that I am almost tempted to bring up the taxation matter. We have a calendar for tomorrow of twelve proposals and the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology will have the remaining reports ready to make in the morning. All the reports will be on your desks on both sides of the house tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I rise to a question of personal privilege and to make a correction. In order that a mistake of history may not be passed down I call attention to the fact that I hold in my hands this evening's paper, the Columbus Citizen, which contains a united press dispatch from London, England, stating that a strike of one hundred thousand, is threatened in England.

Mr. DOTY: I move that we indorse the strike. But before that is put I move that we adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

The motion to adjourn was carried.

SEVENTY-FIFTH DAY

MORNING SESSION.

FRIDAY, May 24, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. McClelland, delegate from Knox.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. LAMPSON: I demand a call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT: A call of the Convention has been demanded, the sergeant-at-arms will close the door and the secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called; when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson,	DeFrees,	Fess,
Brown, Lucas,	Dunlap,	Keller,
Brown, Pike,	Earnhart,	Miller, Ottawa,
Cody,	Eby,	Pettit,
Collett,	Elson,	Worthington,
Crites,

The president announced that one hundred and three members had answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT: The sergeant-at-arms will dispatch his messengers for the absentees.

Mr. LAMPSON: I move that the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to send for the absentees.

The PRESIDENT: The sergeant-at-arms is instructed to dispatch his messengers for the absentees.

Mr. LAMPSON: And the secretary will furnish him with the list.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to inquire if the sergeant-at-arms has found the vice president? And, Mr. President, I am informed that some members of the Convention have gone out of the room. The members of the Convention have no right to go out.

The PRESIDENT: I instructed the sergeant-at-arms to close the doors.

Mr. DOTY: But members have been going out and we do not know where we are. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I desire to make a report at this time.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, to which was referred Proposal No. 331—Mr. Walker, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended:

Strike out lines 36 to 39 inclusive and insert: "License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto."

Strike out lines 40, 41 and 42.

In line 43 strike out "Section 2. At" and insert: "Resolved, further, that at".

In line 47 strike out "Section 3."

In line 53 strike out "Section".

The report was agreed to. The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time tomorrow.

Mr. DOTY: This a large attendance and as this question has been talked about and discussed more than any thing else, I think we should get rid of this proposal now, and I move that it be read the third time now.

The motion was carried.

Proposal No. 151 as amended by the committee was read the third time.

Mr. WEYBRECHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 18 after the word "districts" insert the word "now."

Mr. DOTY: I move to amend Mr. Weybrecht's amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the amendment add: Strike out the word "similar" in line 22.

Mr. KING: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In lines 14 and 15 strike out the words "license" and insert in lieu thereof the words "saloon".

Mr. KING: It was evident enough when the amendment was originally proposed by the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] and the proposal as amended was passed that the understanding of all the delegates was that that particular limitation of the number of licenses rated as to the population should be applied by the legislature and this Constitutional Convention to those engaged in the retail business only.

Now the word "retail" placed before the word "license" would no doubt accomplish that and would be no doubt as good or better than the word I propose, but the proposition as passed provided two sources or two kinds of limitations of the number:

1. The proposition first originally read contained almost in the first clause these words which are now in it, beginning in line 11, "And municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons".

That is as it was passed. The Lampson amendment came in after certain other limitations had been introduced and passed as amendments. The committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has taken the Lampson amendment and the five hundred proposition, that being the minimum, and put it up with the statement in the proposal that municipal corporations may limit, and their right to limit as well as the right of the legislature anywhere to limit is governed by the latter clause, that no more shall be authorized than one to five hundred population or one in a township or in a municipality having less than five hundred and then one for each five hundred beyond that.

Now the reason I offer this amendment in this form is because with the clause authorizing the municipal corporations to limit the number of saloons—that is good work—it is understood, as all Americans do understand it, to mean a retail dealer in liquor. Then it should be carried to the next limitation with that same understanding; that is, that the number of saloons shall be limited to one to each five hundred of population. Now with this limitation upon the retail dealer, which I say was understood to apply, would be very unfair to say that that should include all dealers in these articles.

Mr. ELSON: Will you please define a saloon?

Mr. KING: A place where liquor is sold to be drunk on the premises.

Mr. ELSON: It does not include a jug-house?

Mr. KING: There are none of these in my community and I do not know anything about them. Do you know what they are? There are a good many retail dealers where I live, but there are also in our section of the country a large number of manufacturers of distilled liquors, and if those were to be counted as well as the wholesalers the limitation is valueless. It is practical prohibition of the retail traffic in the large communities where the sentiment permits it.

Mr. ELSON: I do not think there was any intention of limiting the manufacturers by this at all. So far as the jug-houses are concerned might not this limitation call into existence a number of houses where they would sell, not to be drunk on the premises, but a small quantity, a quart or a pint, to be carried off.

Mr. KING: I cannot define in a word the difference between a retailer and a wholesaler, but the law of Ohio has rightly defined it and the decisions of the court are abundant, and the whole tenor of that is that a wholesaler is one who sells to a retailer and a retailer is one who sells to a consumer.

Mr. ANDERSON: Has the law interpreted "wholesaler" and "retailer" and made a distinction as to whether or not the liquor is consumed on the premises? Has not the distinction been made that a retailer is one who sells where the liquor is to be consumed on the premises, and the wholesaler where it is not to be?

The PRESIDENT: The questions come out of the time of the speaker and if the speaker yields to the questions he must understand that they are consuming his time.

Mr. ANDERSON: Well, I do not wish to take his time.

Mr. KING: Then I will repeat: I think we understood that this limitation of five hundred should apply to those who get license to traffic as retailers to sell to consumers and to be drunk on the premises. I do not say that that is universal. Under the state law a retailer is one who sells in quantities of less than a gallon; for instance, to the man running through the country with his automobile or otherwise who goes in and buys a pint of whiskey and goes off. It is not intended to say that every drop sold is to be drunk on the premises either, but it is to be sold in retail quantities. I do not know what a jug-house is.

Mr. ELSON: Suppose a dealer sells nothing to be drunk on the premises, but he would sell as low as a pint or a quart, would that be called a wholesale house?

Mr. KING: It would not be a wholesale house.

Mr. ELSON: Would that be a saloon?

Mr. KING: Yes.

Mr. ELSON: If that were understood I suppose we can all agree.

Mr. ANDERSON: Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING: If my time is not up, but I hope it is.

The PRESIDENT: The member's time is up.

Mr. WINN: Gentlemen of the Convention: If this Convention will write into this proposal the definition of a saloon and if that definition conforms to the one given here by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. KING], I have no objection to it, but if we are to pass it leaving it to the court to fix the definition it is most mischievous indeed. If we may say that the word saloon as herein used means a place where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale and sold as a beverage otherwise than in quantities of one gallon or more, then we have the definition of a saloon as given by the member from Erie. If that is added I shall offer no objection.

Mr. KING: I agree to that.

Mr. WINN: "And the word saloon as herein used means a place where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale and sold for beverages otherwise than in quantities of one gallon or more"; if that is added, all right.

"A hall or state department, a large reception room or fine arts exhibition, a bar room or grog shop"—that is the definition, and it is very indefinite, so I say again to the gentleman from Erie, so far as I am personally concerned, if his definition of the word saloon may be added in his amendment I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. KING: There is no objection to that.

Mr. DOTY: I think if the Convention will allow us to recess for five minutes we can put this matter into shape. I move that we take a recess for five minutes.

The recess was ordered.

10:30 o'clock a. m.

The Convention met pursuant to recess.

Consideration of Proposal No. 151 was resumed.

Mr. KING: I desire to withdraw the amendment I just offered and offer another.

Consent was given.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 14, strike out the word "license" and insert in lieu thereof the word "saloon".

In line 15, strike out the word "license" and insert the word "saloon".

In line 38, after the period add the following: "The word saloon as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 42 between the words "for" and "license" insert "restricted".

In line 43 between "against" and "license" insert "restricted".

Mr. ANDERSON: I do not suppose there will be any objection to that as it simply makes the form of the ballot correspond with the body of the proposal.

In the King proposal it was unrestricted license. Therefore it was "For or against license," but by the time we got through it was restricted license.

It means tens of thousands more votes in that case than in its present shape. Now on the question of "now" and "similar," it is marching up the hill and marching down again if you take out the word "similar". Judge King, shortly after this proposal passed, came to me and stated that there had been a mistake at the desk and by reason of that the word "now" was scratched out and that it should appear and would appear if it hadn't been erased by mistake at the desk. I told him if it was a mistake of one of the secretaries I would offer no objection to putting the word "now" in. I find it was a mistake, if a mistake it be, of the gentleman offering the amendment, and that has been demonstrated here by an examination of the original paper where it shows his pen went through the word "now". I grant you that there is not very much substantive value in leaving the word "similar" in or putting the word "now" in or out, but it seems apparently, from the numerous letters I have received, that others think there is something in it. They think with the word "similar" in or the word "now" not in that this license proposal will receive thousands of votes more than it would otherwise. Now let us analyze the difference between putting the word "similar" in and taking it out, the word "similar" applied to the prohibitory and regulatory temperance laws. There cannot be any other kind except prohibitory and regulatory. Consequently the word "similar" in no manner affects the descriptive part of the law, but with the word "similar" in and the word "now" in, it would prevent the legislature from permitting any larger unit than the county to vote on the wet or dry question. Now, mark it, it would prevent the legislature from passing laws that would permit a wet or dry vote upon any larger unit or political subdivision than a county. In other words the legislature—I don't think the legislature ever would—is prevented from giving us as a legislative enactment statewide prohibition. It never has in sixty years. In connection with this I want to read a letter from a man with whom a number of the delegates are acquainted, the superintendent of the schools at Youngstown, Mr. N. H. Chaney:

Hon. D. F. ANDERSON,
Constitutional Convention,

Columbus, O.

My Dear Mr. Anderson: The congregation at Trinity church last Sunday morning passed a resolution to request the Constitutional Convention to strike out the word "similar" in the Anderson proposal for the regulation of the liquor traffic, and appointed me to memorialize the Convention in its behalf and to that end. Therefore I am sending you this statement praying your careful and favorable attention to this point, hoping that the removal of the word will clarify and strengthen the measure among those who seem to feel that the word causes quibbling that tends to weaken rather than strengthen the public mind in regard to the whole splendid proposal. In fulfillment of my appointed duty and in full assurance of our hearty support of the proposal in form as it may finally issue to the people, I am, on behalf of the congregation, most sincerely yours,

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

N. H. CHANEY.

Dr. Chaney is not a minister, but he is a broad, liberal, educated, cultured gentleman. It merely shows that with the word "similar" out we will get thousands of more votes for this excellent proposal. That comes from the Trinity M. E. church, with a membership of over two thousand. You note that Dr. Chaney says they intend to support it. Now if those who represent the wets, and who have for years and years been clamoring for regulation and limitation, will do half as much as the church members have indicated for this measure there will be no question about the passage of this proposal.

Mr. KING: I want to say a few words on the question when you reach the point where that question is up to be voted on, but I rise for the purpose of objecting to the change in the title of this proposal as it goes on the ballot. It has been passed and the committee has reported it back, and therefore I move to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Mahoning on the table.

Mr. ANDERSON: May I ask you a question?

Mr. KING: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: What harm can the word "restricted" do in the form of the ballot so long as the proposal itself is for restricted license provided those who represent the wets really are in favor of restricted license?

Mr. KING: I hope that we can get through this without getting excited.

Mr. ANDERSON: I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT: The question is shall the amendment of the delegate from Mahoning, inserting the word "restricted," lie upon the table.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 56, nays 56, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

The roll call was verified.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I ask leave of absence—

Mr. DOTY: Regular order.

The PRESIDENT: If there is objection the leave cannot be granted.

Mr. DOTY: I object.

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer an amendment.
The amendment was read as follows:

In line 42 after "License" insert the words "to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

In line 43 after "License" insert "to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move that the rules be suspended and that I be granted leave of absence for—

The PRESIDENT: The delegate from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] has the floor.

Mr. LAMPSON: I have offered this amendment to make it correspond with the action already taken by the Convention in adopting the report this morning, which will be found on your pink slip where it reads "in the title strike out all after dash and insert "License to traffic in intoxicating liquors". That is adopted and is decided, and the report will be made by the committee on Submission recommending the title for every proposal, together with the article and section that it is supposed to amend, and the supposition is that if it is adopted that the article and the section, together with the title, will go upon the ballot. I think there should be no exception made in this case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY] to an amendment offered by the delegate from Stark [Mr. WEYBRECHT].

Mr. COLTON: I call for a division of the amendment offered by Mr. Doty.

Mr. DOTY: That is a subject by itself and you cannot divide it.

The PRESIDENT: The secretary will read the amendment.

The amendment was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. WINN: Relative to the vote just taken on the adoption of the amendment offered by the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY] let us understand what it means. I will read it lest some of you may not have your books before you, that part of the paragraph to which the amendment of the member from Stark [Mr. WEYBRECHT] applies:

Where traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local subdivision while any prohibitory law is operative therein.

Now it can be seen by what has already been said that by adding the word "now," as is proposed by the original amendment, the general assembly will be prevented from making any different regulatory or prohibitory laws as they may apply to any different districts from those which now exist. The word "similar," it is agreed all around, should be stricken out, but I do not believe that the word "now" should be inserted and the word "similar" stricken out at the same time. An amendment has been prepared to strike out the word "similar" only, so I trust that friends of this measure, and I mean those who would have it adopted at the polls and those who would have it made effectual, as it was designed to be when it was passed on second reading, will now vote against this amendment and vote it down, and when it is voted down an amendment will be immediately offered striking out the word "similar" and doing nothing more than that. Then we shall have this whole proposal in what I believe to be first-class shape. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. KING: When this proposal was adopted on second reading I know it was the general understanding of most of the delegates who voted for the proposal, and they, I think, were all of those who were present, that this word "now" at the place where it is now asked to be inserted was then in the proposal. This was adopted the last day of the discussion of the question and motions were made rather rapidly. But the amendment finally adopted with the proposal as it now is, was one offered by the gentleman from Huron [Mr. HARTER]. He had prepared it rather hurriedly and dictated a part of the amendment to the clerk at the desk. He asked the clerk to strike out certain words which I think were "or hereafter", or he thinks he did, and the clerk struck them out and also struck out the word "now", and it was not until after it was printed that anybody saw that the "now" was out. I agree with the gentleman from Mahoning that it perhaps does not make much difference whether either word is in or out, but at the same time I disagree with him when we come to this proposition that as to the wording of both propositions the word "now" ought to be there. The friends of temperance, if they are honest, in my judgment ought to be satisfied with the local option laws of the present day, which include every possible district up to and including the county line. If they want any broader districts they can have state prohibition by submitting by a petition through the initiative an amendment to the constitution to be voted upon, and also by applying to the legislature, and that will always permit that question to be submitted, but as to local subdivisions the county is the largest division we have in the state and this amply protects that. Why should the word "now" honestly be written in this proposal unless the question whether we shall have statewide prohibition or not, is squarely and honestly presented to the people of the whole state? I am not opposed to submitting the question to the vote of the people, but I am opposed to putting any subterfuge in here by which somebody is to be cajoled into voting for this license proposal without understanding its whole tenor and effect. Therefore the word "now" should go in, and if that goes in I do not care whether the word "similar" goes out or not.

Mr. ANDERSON: I do not believe I have spoken upon this particular part of this matter and I would like to have a little fairness extended to me even if it is painful. This whole thing is a trick hatched up premeditatedly and presented here upon the floor of the Convention. The gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY], the eminent "dry" advocate, is so anxious to do that which the dries seem to want done that he moves to strike out the word "similar" and he becomes the champion of that side and draws up an amendment to take out the word "similar", but with the distinct understanding with the president that Mr. Weybrecht was to be recognized first and then Mr. Doty, so that the situation can be a sort of nunc pro tunc.

Mr. PRICE: Why doesn't the gentleman come to his point? I cannot understand what he is driving at.

Mr. ANDERSON: I am not responsible for your understanding.

Mr. PRICE: It doesn't seem to me that the gentleman is in order.

The PRESIDENT: The member is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON: And I do not want that taken out of my time. I want this Convention to have an opportunity of voting separately upon taking "similar" out of this proposal. I do not want any trickery or chicanery hatched up and foisted upon this Convention by any set of men. We have got along with the liquor question splendidly and it is too near adjournment to resort to trickery. Therefore I demand a separation and I call for the yeas and nays, so that we may have an opportunity of voting upon taking the word "similar" out of the proposal and then determining in a fair and honest way whether we shall put the word "now" in it.

Mr. FESS: The only regular way that I can see is to vote on it, and I hope every temperance man will vote against this amendment as amended. Then an amendment can be introduced to strike out the word "similar". I think Mr. Doty very well understood that this was a very crude move. I saw it at once and I called the attention of the members to it. I do not find any fault with Mr. Doty. I would have done it if I had wanted to defeat this thing. It seems to me the temperance people should stand together and vote down this amendment as amended and then let the word "similar" be stricken out. I do not want to get into any controversy where ultimately we won't know what we have done when we are through doing it.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment can be divided in any way the Convention desires. If the Convention desires to vote as to whether "now" shall be inserted they can do that, or they can vote on taking the "similar" out first.

Mr. PECK: Why don't we take a vote in the order in which they come.

The PRESIDENT: There is an amendment pending before the Convention. The amendment provides for the insertion of the word "now" and the striking out of the word "similar." A request has been made that this amendment be divided and the president has ruled that it is susceptible of division. If the Convention is willing to have the question put it will be first upon the motion to insert the word "now" and the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move that the proposed amendment and the amendment to it be laid on the table.

Mr. DOTY: On that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 58, nays 54, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Cassidy,	Farnsworth,
Antrim,	Colton,	Fess,
Baum,	Crites,	Fluke,

So the motion was carried.

Mr. WINN: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 22 strike out the word "similar".

Mr. WINN: I believe that the members all understand what this is and I shall not consume time in debating it. The amendment strikes out, and does not do any more than strike out, the word "similar".

Mr. PECK: Was not that involved in the amendment just voted on?

Mr. WINN: No; not exactly in that form, and I now move the previous question on that amendment.

Mr. TALLMAN: I would like to talk on the question.

Mr. WINN: The gentleman is out of order. I have demanded the previous question and it was seconded by not less than thirty or forty.

The PRESIDENT: The previous question was regularly demanded.

Mr. TALLMAN: I ask unanimous leave of the Convention, without being cut off in this way, to present the other side.

DELEGATES: Objection.

The PRESIDENT: Objection is made. The question is, Shall the debate close?

Mr. DWYER: Does that embrace the entire proposition?

Mr. WINN: On the amendment only.

The previous question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is, "Shall the amendment prevail?"

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 65, nays 46, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Harter, Huron,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and substitute the following:

"The manufacture, sale and free distribution of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall never be permitted in this state."

Mr. WATSON: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: This is the greatest question of the age. It is the great question in this Constitutional Convention, the question whether or not the great state of Ohio shall put her seal of approval upon that which leads men and women down into degradation, misery, want and woe. I hope, gentlemen of the Convention, that you will realize that there is a power above that is greater than all earthly power and that is He whose spoken words were that righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. He will stand as judge over this Constitutional Convention and the seat which He occupies to pass judgment upon the members of this Convention is high above the dais where the president of this Convention presides. I look to Him as the one who possesses judgment in all things. You may talk about doing this for the interest of labor, for the interest of the farmer, for the interest of society, but no one thing can you do that will benefit the laboring man, the farmer and society at large as much as the striking down of this accursed liquor traffic in the state of Ohio.

We are told that Haman offered the king ten thousand talents if he would give him the privilege of killing the Jews. That sum of ten thousand talents would be $5,- 383,000. The liquor traffic would offer millions to destroy this posthumous babe of ours. I ask you in all seriousness, gentlemen of the Convention, are you going to put the seal of your approval on this father of crime, mother of shame and the child of the devil?

How can you kneel around your sacred altars and offer up your prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in Heaven," and then vote for this monster to be turned loose upon the state? Day after day from that dais has prayer gone up to God to guide the work of the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio, and if you start out to license this accursed evil you are not approving by your actions the prayers that have been offered up. I ask for the yeas and nays on this and I demand the previous question.

Mr. ANTRIM: I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the motion to table.

Mr. EVANS: I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane and is out of order.

Mr. WATSON: I insist that the question is germane and is in order.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the motion to table the amendment.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded; taken, and resulted—yeas 87, nays 24, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hahn,	Miller, Ottawa,
Antrim,	Halenkamp,	Moore,
Baum,	Harbarger,	Norris,

Johnson, Williams,	Peters,	Wagner,
Kilpatrick,	Read,	Walker,
Kramer,	Smith, Geauga,	Watson.

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. WATSON: I offer another amendment.

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

The amendment was read as follows:

'In line 43 strike out "against license" and insert "for prohibition to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Mr. DOTY: I rise to a point of order. That amendment is not germane.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment is out of order.

Mr. KING: I offer an amendment.

Amend Proposal No. 151 as follows:

In line 18 after the word "districts" insert the word "now". I move the previous question on the proposal and the pending amendment.

Mr. WINN: I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall debate close on the amendment and proposal?

The motion for the previous question was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment, to insert the word "now" in line 18.

Mr. PECK: I thought we were through with that an hour ago.

The PRESIDENT: The proposition we are now voting upon was virtually laid on the table.

Mr. KING: We have not had a vote on this question yet.

Mr. PECK: Your amendment was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. KING: Yes.

Mr. FESS: The other amendment was to line 22 by striking out the word "similar".

Mr. DOTY: Mine was on the word "similar" in line 22 and Mr. Weybrecht's was in line 18, and they were coupled together and laid on the table.

Mr. PECK: And now we start it all over again.

Mr. DOTY: No.

Mr. FESS: Was not yours an amendment to an amendment?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. FESS: Was that amendment to the proposal?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the amendment and the yeas and nays have been demanded and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 60, nays 51, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 151 — Mr. Anderson. To submit an amendment to article XV, section 9, of the constitution. — License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal shall be submitted to the electors to amend article XV, section 9, of the constitution and that at the time when the vote of the electors shall be taken for the adoption or rejection of any revision, alterations, or amendments made to the constitution by this Convention, the following section, independently of the submission of any revision, alteration or other amendments submitted to them shall be separately submitted to the electors in the words following, to-wit:

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors—Question of Personal Privilege.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local sub-division while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word saloon as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

Resolved further, That at said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

	For License to Traffic in Intoxicating liquors.
	Against License to Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License" if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the words "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

If the votes for license shall exceed the votes against license, then the article above mentioned shall become section 9 of article XV of the constitution, and the present section 9 of said article, also known as section 48 of the schedule shall be repealed.

Mr. KING: I move that the vote by which Proposal No. 151 was passed be reconsidered and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was carried.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I rise to a question of personal privilege, especially as the Convention seems to be in such a good humor. Yesterday afternoon during a controversy of the most pleasant character between Damon and Pythias of the Convention, Judge Peck and Judge Dwyer, on one side and myself on the other—

Mr. DOTY: I rise to a point of order. He has not stated his question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT: He has stated it to the president.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I have the floor.

Mr. PECK: I have a more personal question than that; I want my dinner.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: The question, in the most diplomatic manner imaginable, was that I was mistaken in some statements that I had made.

Mr. PECK: State the parliamentary language you used to us.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I desire the record to show that the mistake was not on my part and therefore I read a clipping from a Columbus paper of this morning:

DON'T LIKE SETTLEMENT—BRITISH MINERS ILL-PLEASED WITH WAGE COMPROMISE—FEDERATION TO INTERVIEW GOVERNMENT.

London, May 23.—The national conference of the National Federation of Miners late yesterday passed a resolution indicating that the miners are dissatisfied with the settlement of their difficulty with the mine operators and are apparently ready for another strike. This action was taken after an all-day session devoted to discussion of the recent strike and its settlement. The resolution strongly protests against the awards which are being made by the district wage boards. These boards, the resolution declares, fix the minimum wage for miners at a figure below the reasonable living wage which the government led the men to expect. The executive committee of the federation was instructed to interview the government at once for the purpose of securing immediate action on this point and to report to the national conference.

As I forgave the gentlemen yesterday I also forgive them today.

Mr. DOTY: Inasmuch as there is no question of privilege I move that all reference to that matter be stricken from the record.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I mentioned the question of privilege. I said that my statements had been impugned, and I refer to this to show that the questions of fact were just as I said they were and just as they were impugned.

Mr. DOTY: In the interest of peace and harmony in the Cincinnati delegation I withdraw my motion.

Mr. FESS: I offer a report.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, to which was referred Proposal No. 170—Mr. Worthington, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended:

In title strike out all after dash and insert: "Taxation of state and municipal bonds, inheritances, incomes, franchises and production of minerals."

Between lines 3 and 4 insert subhead: ARTICLE XII.

In lines 4, 7, 21, 23, 30, 34 and 36 change "Section" to "Sec".

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "The levying of taxes by the poll is grievous and oppressive; therefore"; capitalize "n" in "no" in line 5.

In line 5 strike out "therein," and change "nor" to "or".

In line 9 after "money" insert a comma.

In line 10 change capital "S" to lower case "s".

In line 17 insert a comma after "dollars" and insert a comma after "may".

In line 23 change "enacted" to "passed".

In line 24 insert a comma after "receive".

In line 24 insert "to" before "succeed".

In line 24 insert a comma after "to" before "estates".

In line 24 change "tax" to "taxation".

In line 25 insert a comma after "receive".

In line 25 insert a comma after "to" before "estates".

In lines 26 and 27 eliminate paragraph.

In line 27 strike out "a"; strike out "or higher"; change "rate" to "rates".

In line 28 strike out "inheritance than" and insert "and".

In line 28 insert a comma after second "inheritances".

In line 29 change "tax" to "taxation".

In line 30 change "enacted" to "passed".

In line 31 change "which tax" to "and such taxation". Strike out "either general or confined" and insert "may be applied to".

In line 32 change comma to semicolon.

In line 32 insert "annual" after "each".

In line 33 strike out "in any one year".

In line 33 change "tax" to "taxation".

In line 35 after the second "and" insert "other".

In line 36 insert comma after "state".

In line 37 strike out comma after "legislation".

In line 37 insert a comma after "unless".

In line 38 after "payment" insert "each year".

In line 40 change "same" to "outstanding principal".

In line 40 strike out "each year".

The report was agreed to.

The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time tomorrow.

Mr. DOTY: I now move that we recess until 1:45 o'clock p. m.

Mr. KNIGHT: I move to amend that by making it 2 o'clock p. m.

The amendment was accepted.

The motion was carried.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer a report.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Claims Against the Convention, to which was referred Resolution No. 115—Mr. Cassidy, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendment, and recommends its passage when so amended:

Add thereto the following:

"Carl A. Mutschler, postage, $15.00."

The report was agreed to.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer an amendment to that resolution as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following items:

Andrew Earl, supplies, $17.40.

T. J. Dundon & Co., supplies and hauling $5.00.

Mr. LAMPSON: At the time one of our invited guests was here, Colonel Roosevelt, a reception committee was appointed consisting of Mr. Brown, of Lucas, and myself and perhaps one other member. I am not certain who it was, but I think it was Mr. Beatty, of Wood. Mr. Brown and myself acted and we were to make arrangements in this hall for the more comfortable seating of our guests. Tickets had been issued to the guests and we authorized the sergeant-at-arms to make arrangements to put in benches so that the guests back of the railing could see over the railing and so that the speaker could see the guests and thus avoid confusion and it operated to the entire satisfaction of everybody. There was a bill for that work of $22.40, which I personally feel under obligation to see paid, but I do not think any one or two delegates to the Convention ought to be responsible for that kind of a bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 76, nays 4, as follows:

Those who voted in the negative are: Partington, Wagner, Walker, Watson.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. STOKES: I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

Consent being given the resolution was offered as follows:

Resolution No. 130:

WHEREAS, This Convention on the 2nd day of February, 1912, passed a resolution of tribute and respect to Judge Dennis Dwyer of Montgomery county, the dean of the Convention, on reaching the eighty-second milestone of his life; and

WHEREAS, On the first day of May, 1912, this Convention paused one minute in its deliberations in deference to the gentleman from Ashland, Mr. Fluke, and his bride; and

WHEREAS, There was born to the gentleman from Hamilton, Mr. Starbuck Smith and wife, on the 8th day of May, 1912, a bouncing baby boy; now therefore,

Be it resolved, That this Convention extends its congratulations to the parents, and adopts this Buckeye boy as its ward, and will ever watch his course in life with continued interest.

Mr. STOKES: I move a suspension of the rules, to consider this resolution at once.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The rules were suspended.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move that this Convention remain in session over tomorrow.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move that when we adjourn today it be until two o'clock p. m. Monday.

Mr. DOTY: I move that when we adjourn we adjourn until nine o'clock tomorrow and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT: The president would like to depart from custom and make a speech from the stand upon this question. He very much hopes that the amendment of the delegate from Cuyahoga will be carried and that the Convention will remain and continue its work the rest of the week.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 47, nays 59, as follows:

So the motion of the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty] was lost.

Mr. HALFHILL: Now I move that when we adjourn we adjourn until Monday at two o'clock p. m.

Mr. DOTY: I move that when we adjourn we adjourn until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. KNIGHT: The motion just voted down was Mr. Doty's motion and the motion of the delegate from Allen is still pending.

Mr. DOTY: The motion to adjourn to a special time takes precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Allen.

Creating the Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the member from Allen that when the Convention adjourn it adjourn until Monday at two o'clock p. m.

Mr. DOTY: A motion to adjourn to a time previous to that takes precedence to that under the rule.

Mr. PECK: You have had your say and lost.

Mr. DOTY: But this is another one.

Mr. HALFHILL: A point of order.

Mr. DOTY: All right; I will see if you can make a point of order.

Mr. HALFHILL: The gentleman from Cuyahoga is debating a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT: Well that motion is debatable.

Mr. DOTY: And I demand the yeas and nays on my motion to adjourn until 10 o'clock Monday. I am willing to withdraw that motion and take a division as between ten o'clock Monday and two o'clock. All I ask is a division.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I do not consent to withdraw. I want to see how long Mr. Doty will obstruct the Convention.

Mr. PECK: That is what he is doing.

Mr. DOTY: I rise to a question of privilege. I want to say without egotism that I have done as much as any member in the Convention and far more than the member from Highland to keep the work of the Convention going.

DELEGATES: Agreed.

Mr. DOTY: You will never find any obstruction coming from the members from Cuyahoga. All I want is a division upon the question, whether we shall meet at ten or two. It is simply gaining two hours' more time for work.

The PRESIDENT: The president will put it that way. First, Shall we meet at ten o'clock?

The motion was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is, "Shall we meet at two o'clock?"

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The next matter of business is reading of Proposal No. 96 as amended by the committee.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. TAGGART: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

SCHEDULE NO. 5.

That in the event the above proposal passed by the Convention, be adopted by the electors of the state it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913."

Mr. TAGGART: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: There is nothing in the proposal that fixes the time when this is to go into effect. It was the desire of the Convention that the present incumbent should not be legislated out of office and the committee on Schedule, or a portion of them, presents an amendment that has been read from the secretary's desk that this article should go into effect on the second Monday of July, 1913, at the expiration of the present incumbent's term of office. That was somewhat arbitrary. It was thought that perhaps the different political parties might make nominations at the approaching convention for election this fall if this part of the constitution would not go into effect until 1915, but we call the attention of the Convention to that to let them settle the question whether it shall go into effect on the second Monday of July, 1913, or the second Monday of July, 1915, thus giving the nominees at the approaching Convention an opportunity to be elected to serve their term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the proposal.

Mr. FESS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 8 after "as" insert "are or".

Mr. FESS: The proposal as it was written here would necessitate legislation before the commissioner or superintendent would have any power at all, and it was suggested by some of our legal friends that we ought to put in here that the powers shall be what are now given to the commissioner of common schools, and such other powers, etc. I hope this amendment will carry because we want to have some powers without resorting to the legislature.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I would ask the author of the proposal if it contemplates that the legislature must repeal the law providing for the school commissioner?

Mr. FESS: This provision repeals it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Not necessarily; it suggests it. I think the suggestion is an excellent one, but at the same time it must be conceded that if the office created by statute known as the school commissioner, which has been for so many years in Ohio an elective office, is not distinctly repealed, while those duties might be assigned to some other office, still that office might remain.

Mr. FESS: In line 4, a superintendent of public instruction to "replace" the state commissioner of common schools. You cannot have both of them.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Then you intend by your amendment to take care of that?

Mr. FESS: That is the way it was passed originally.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: You mean in line 5 instead of line 4?

Mr. KNIGHT: The text of that amendment as first read simply covers the intent to transfer the duties of commissioner of common schools to the superintendent of public instruction when appointed, but a careful reading will disclose the fact that it would tie up in the constitution so that it could not change by law all the duties that are now by statute exercised by the state commissioner of common schools. It provides that the superintendent of public instruction shall have all of those present duties and such additional ones as may be conferred, but it would not leave it within the power of the lawmaking body to take away or change in any particular the powers and duties now by statute enjoyed and exercised by the commissioner of common schools. I have not had time to formulate the change of phrasing, but it seems to me what was intended must have been this: That the powers now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools, until otherwise changed by law, and such other powers as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. KING: Does not the expression "and such powers as may be prescribed by law," cover all the power which the present commissioner has or that can be given?

Mr. KNIGHT: But would it leave operative the laws now imposing the duties on him?

Mr. KING: The laws now enforced shall remain and apply to this office.

Mr. KNIGHT: But you would lock it up in the constitution.

Mr. KING: Until amended.

Mr. FESS: I think we can meet this difficulty by using the phrase, "such laws as are or may be prescribed." Would not that do? The point is I want to allow the superintendent of public instruction to have the power that the commissioner now has.

Mr. PECK: That will do it.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that we take a recess for five minutes to permit the professors to fix up the phraseology of this their proposal.

Mr. FESS: I move to amend Proposal No. 96 as follows:

In line 8 after "as" insert "are or".

Mr. PECK: That is all right.

Mr. MAUCK: What powers are now prescribed by law for superintendent of public instruction? I don't think you have corrected it.

Mr. FESS: Where we speak of replacing the school commissioner.

Mr. MAUCK: It replaces the officer, but it does not replace his power. It seems to me the amendment of the gentleman from Franklin is entirely necessary to accomplish the purpose desired.

Mr. Leete, the delegate from Lawrence, here took the chair, as president pro tem.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The gentleman from Greene has not withdrawn his other amendment.

Mr. FESS: I ask the privilege of withdrawing the other amendment and offering this one.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment of the member from Greehe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. READ: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "two" and in lieu thereof insert the word "four."

Mr. READ: This amendment simply restores to that original proposal by the gentleman from Greene the word "four," which was amended out and very hurriedly carried. I think it should be inserted. The office we have here created is as important an office as can be held by anyone in the state of Ohio. No man can lay his plans and perform his work properly if he feels that he is only going to hold the position for two years. This is work that strikes at the very vital interest of the state, and I therefore hope that this word "four" will be reinserted where it was originally.

Mr. DOTY: I trust this amendment will not prevail. The term of office of the governor of Ohio is two years. If this is made four years every once in a while we will have a man charged with responsibility of the common school system with a subordinate that somebody else appointed. That is a very bad situation.

Mr. READ: If the governor is not re-elected the appointment of the superintendent of instruction will hold, and thus the office will be above politics.

Mr. WINN: I hope that the amendment will prevail and the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Cuyahoga should impress upon all of us the importance of the amendment. He would have a two-year term to the end that every time we have a new governor there will be a vacancy in this important office and filled by political appointment by the governor. If there is any reason in the world why the term should be longer than two years it is that we may take the office as far as possible out of politics. I wish it were longer. I wish it were so that when the governor comes into office he would not look at the office of the commissioner of public schools to see whether he can appoint a democrat or a republican, as the case may be, to repay him for political work.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I would like to have the view of the proponent as to what influenced him in fixing that time?

Mr. FESS: I made it four years for the purpose that was suggested a while ago. I thought it would be a pretty good thing not to have the term of office expiring at the same time as that of the appointing power, and I desire this to avoid possible political influence in the appointment. That is one reason, and then another reason—and this is the supreme one—I believe two years is a little too short to develop any definite constructive policy in the school department, and I really think we do not need to fear the political phase of it, for I do not think any governor would regard any advantage in the appointment of any political head because of his politics. I hope the Convention will adopt the amendment.

Mr. ELSON: I have just come in and did not hear the early part of the debate. I want to say it is very desirable that the term of appointment shall be four years instead of two. It is very important. Here is one argument that seems to me is absolutely conclusive in itself, although it may have been offered before I got in. Presumably the governor will want to appoint the best school man he can find, and for the brief period of two years he cannot secure the best talent. Very few men who would adorn the place would accept an appointment for two years, but if the appointment is for four years he can get the best. It seems to me that almost any school man in the state, or even out of the state, could be induced to accept the position, and I would say that by all means we should not confine ourselves in such appointments to men who live in the state. Such an appointment will be attractive to any school man. I suppose we all know that the governor of New Jersey has appointed a man from Indiana at a salary of $10,000 to be the head of the public schools in New Jersey. They have a man they are proud of and they went out of the state to get him. We cannot do that unless we make the term sufficiently long to make it attractive to a first-class man.

Creating the Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAUCK: I offer an amendment to make it clear, as explained by the member from Franklin, that the powers of the present commissioner shall devolve upon this new officer. I am satisfied under the provision as it now stands no such powers will be granted.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out line 8 as amended and insert: "with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law".

Mr. ANDERSON: I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. ELSON: I do too.

Mr. ANDERSON: The professors could not get it into proper shape and an attorney has got it in proper shape for them.

Mr. KNIGHT: I think the object that we are trying to get at is that the office of superintendent shall carry with it these duties until the time comes that the legislature shall act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: Just a word: I do not know the status, but I think we are approaching a vote on the main proposition. Has the Convention stopped to realize what we are doing? You are creating a constitutional office that has never been anything but a statutory office. The present constitution does not provide for any such state officer as commissioner of the common schools. This office was created by the legislature pure and simple and we are attempting to write into the constitution an office that has never been a constitutional office heretofore. My point is that, laying aside the question of whether it should be called commissioner of common schools or superintendent of public instruction or whatever you may call it, it is purely a legislative matter and legislative business can be corrected from time to time. I am opposed to legislating into the constitution a matter which should be taken care of by the legislature. I have no objection to this amendment. I believe that the term should be two years instead of four, but that is a matter that ought not to go into the constitution. Many of us have believed that we should submit as few amendments as possible, so that the people may have a clear understanding of every amendment that goes before them. Every amendment that is unimportant or that could be taken care of in the legislature should be left out. It does that much more to complicate matters, and as it is purely legislative it should not be written into the constitution.

Mr. FESS: Just a word in reference to Mr. Hoskins' remarks: It was for the purpose of making this a constitutional office instead of a legislative office that I offered this proposal. I do not understand why any member here would want to regard the most important function of government outside of that of the governor himself as a matter to be left in the legislature and not a good one to go into the constitution. I do not know whether the member knows anything about the sentiment in the state in comparison with other states in regard to the way this matter has been left, but my understanding has been that it is considered that the department of education should be next to that of the governor. There is no department equal to it outside of the governor's. Why should you ignore the development of education in the state and say it must go along with the board of public works and such things? I think it is little short of an outrage to so regard the department of education. The department of education ought to be in the constitution and that is the whole purpose of this.

Mr. HOSKINS: I do not know whether I know or not—I say I do not know what the sentiment is outside of Ohio, but are the public school people here—not the college professors, but the public school people of Ohio—in favor of writing this in the constitution?

Mr. FESS: Almost to an individual they are asking that this be done. The department now headed by Frank Miller wants it done and so far as I know the people who are directly interested in the welfare of the schools are asking for this change. That is the one reason why it is offered. I am getting tired of hearing references to college professors as if they were the butt end of ridicule. My friend from Mahoning has made such a remark three or four times and I am getting weary of it. The amendment of Mr. Mauck was originally as I desired it. It was suggested in order to make it iron-bound and I am willing to take that and then I hope you will adopt the proposal. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MARSHALL: I would like to vote intelligently on this question and in order to do that I ask the gentleman who introduced this proposal to explain to the Convention what defects it will cover and in what way these defects will be remedied by the change. If I am convinced there are defects in the present school system and that they can be remedied by the professor's proposal I am going to vote for it, and if I cannot I will not. I want to be convinced what is right and just and what is for the betterment of every man, woman and child in the state of Ohio—

Mr. DOTY: White or black?

Mr. MARSHALL: Will the gentleman from Greene [Mr. Fess] point out the defects in the system?

Mr. DOTY: A point of order. The gentleman from Greene has spoken once and he can't speak again.

The president resumed the chair.

Mr. FESS: The only thing I wanted to do was to give the present head of the school department more power than simply to be a statistician. Our school head has done a great amount of work with very little authority. We want to give him authority commensurate with the office. I am sure you would be in favor of this if you knew what it is.

Mr. HOSKINS: Why do you use the expression "superintendent of public instruction" instead of retaining the title commissioner of common schools?

Mr. FESS: That was done because Ohio is the only state in the Union that uses this term in connection with the head of the school department. It is superintendent of public instruction everywhere else, which means superintendent of instruction, including public schools, normal schools and any school supported by taxation.

Mr. HOSKINS: What would be his authority over the State University?

Mr. FESS: None whatever. This refers to public schools. He is the superintendent of public instruction. He hasn't any jurisdiction over the university.

Creating the Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction—Depositions by State Etc., in Criminal Cases.

Mr. FOX: Just a word in reply to what the professor said. I thought everybody was in favor of this system, but we had an ex-school commissioner at our place last Tuesday and he talked very strongly against this. He said all the people of the state of Ohio were opposed to it and he asked that we vote this down. I don't understand where the good points of it are.

Mr. WINN: Is the gentleman you refer to a candidate for renomination to that office?

Mr. FOX: No, sir.

Mr. WINN: Is he not?

Mr. FOX: I do not know.

Mr. FESS: Do not ask that question, it is delicate. But that is the situation exactly.

Mr. WINN: Do you know whether or not he is an agent for the American Book Company?

Mr. FOX: No.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move the previous question. The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Gallia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 84, nays 17, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harter, Huron,	Peters,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 96—Mr. Fess: To submit an amendment by adding section 4 to article VI, of the constitution.—Creating office of superintendent of public instruction to replace state commissioner of common schools.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor, for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE NO. 5.

That in the event the above proposal passed by the Convention, be adopted by the electors of the state it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 15 is next in order.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. THOMAS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the semi-colon in line 17 and all of lines 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22.

Mr. PECK: I hope this will not prevail. These depositions should be taken and this was all discussed and determined on the second reading.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move to table the amendment.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. READ: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 8, strike out the words "a capital" and insert the word "homicide".

Mr. READ: This does not in any way change the sense, but it takes out the words "a capital" and inserts "homicide." If capital punishment is abolished we will have no capital crimes.

Mr. PECK: These words that you want to strike out have been in the constitution for fifty years.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. KERR: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out beginning with the word "but" in line 24 to and including the word "counsel" in line 25.

Mr. KERR: I claim that that is in contradiction to line 23. When he does not testify, to allow comment to be made on it compels him to testify or the fact that he fails to testify will be taken against him and that is not according to the spirit of our constitution.

Mr. TALLMAN: It is well known to everybody that where the prisoner goes upon the witness stand the prosecuting attorney comments upon his interest in the case. If the accusation against him involves imprisonment in the penitentiary and they are allowed to comment upon the fact that he does not go upon the witness stand, it is equivalent almost to a conviction whether he is guilty or innocent. If he is guilty he should be allowed to stay off the witness stand. He has a right to be convicted upon the testimony of the state outside of himself without the temptation to commit perjury being put before him. It will only lead to two crimes instead of one in a majority of the cases. I insist that the prisoner at the bar should not be placed under that handicap, that the temptation to commit perjury on the one hand or go to the penitentiary on the other should not be submitted as an alternative. If he chooses to stay off he has a right to be convicted upon outside testimony, but if he goes upon the witness stand and testifies in nine cases out of ten his testimony goes for nothing with the jury because the court charges that they are to look to the interest that the prisoner has in the case, hear his testimony and view his interest in the result of the trial. His testimony, if he goes upon the stand, will count but for little, and if he stays off the stand it counts for absolutely nothing at all. If they are allowed to comment upon that the same as in civil cases, in all these cases we lay before the unfortunate prisoner one of two things—he goes to the penitentiary or goes on the witness stand and commits perjury. Those are the only two alternatives offered, and I submit it is unfair to the prisoner and it will lead in nine cases out of ten to the commission of two crimes instead of one.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Madison: Did you ever in your experience find any innocent man who was afraid to go upon the witness stand?

Mr. TALLMAN: Sometimes circumstances are such that an innocent man cannot go upon the stand.

Mr. PECK: We had a great deal of discussion on this and this is the same speech that was made by the gentleman on the second reading. Certainly it was made by others also. His whole view of the matter is from the standpoint of the criminal. I think this Convention is here in behalf of the state of Ohio and in behalf of the people of Ohio and in behalf of the society of Ohio. We want to make our laws so as to prevent crime.

Mr. HALFHILL: That is the same speech made two or three times by Judge Peck.

Mr. PECK: Yes, and I am following the same habit that somebody else has and I am having the same idiotic interruptions. The quickest way to get through with me is to let me alone. We want to have this matter viewed from the standpoint of the people and not from the standpoint of Mr. Halfhill and other professional defenders of criminals. That is the kind of speech we have just heard made. It is the poor criminal, but you never have any sympathy for the poor victim. Your misplaced sympathies are always for the poor fellow in jail, who should be punished, and not for the victim. I sympathize with the victim and society is the victim. I would like to have this fixed so that we could not have this lagging and delay in criminal jurisprudence, so that matters can be brought out properly and promptly on the trial.

Mr. HALFHILL: I want to ask a question.

Mr. PECK: I decline to answer. I move the previous question on this amendment. We are all talking over the same thing that we talked on the second reading.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall debate close?

Mr. FESS: I move to lay the amendment on the table before the motion for the previous question is put.

Mr. PECK: Then I withdraw the motion for the previous question.

Mr. FESS: The motion to lay on the table takes precedence on the motion for the previous question, and I hope the Judge will not withdraw the motion for the previous question.

Mr. PECK: All right, I won't then. The motion to lay on the table takes precedence anyway.

The motion to lay on the table was carried.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. HALFHILL: I desire a question of privilege, and I desire to put it to the gentleman from Hamilton. Did I understand you to remark that I was either a professional criminal or professional criminal lawyer?

Mr. PECK: I said you were a professional defender of criminals.

Mr. HALFHILL: I deny the charge anyway.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall debate close?"

The SECRETARY: No, the question is on the proposal.

Mr. FESS: The Convention has ordered the main question. That was done just after my motion to table was carried. The motion to table was carried and then the previous question was carried. If the previous question had been voted on the motion to table would have been out of order.

The PRESIDENT: The question then is on the adoption of the proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 66, nays 30, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 15.—Mr. Riley. To submit an amendment to article I, section 10, of the constitution.—Depositions by state and comment on failure of accused to testify in criminal cases.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance can not be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 212 is next in order.

Proposal No. 212—Mr. Johnson, of Williams, was read the third time.

Mr. President.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 212—Mr. Johnson, of Williams. To submit an amendment to article II, section 16, of the constitution.—Limiting veto power of governor.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject; which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor nor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the repassage of a bill.

The PRESIDENT: The next is Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce.

Mr. PIERCE: I desire to have that proposal laid over for the reason that there are some twenty-two or twenty-five members absent and a good number of men tell me that they expect to go within a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT: Without objection the proposal will be informally passed. The next is Proposal No. 51—Mr. Miller, of Crawford.

Mr. STEVENS: It is my intention when this matter comes up to introduce the amendment referred to as the state insurance proposition. The Convention will recollect that there were fifty-four to forty-seven against it, a total vote of one hundred. I think the same reason that Mr. Pierce suggests applies to this and I move that it be informally passed.

The PRESIDENT: Without objection that will be done.

Proposal No. 184—Mr. Peck, was informally passed.

Mr. MARRIOTT: In view of the fact that we are going to adjourn until Monday at noon and some of the gentlemen who want to go home want to leave on the 4:30 and 4:40 trains, I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. FESS: I understand the Judge wants to adjourn for the 4:15 train. There are one or two here that we can get through before that easily.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Then I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT: The next proposal is Proposal No. 322, by Mr. Bowdle.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. HOSKINS: I would like the privilege of asking Mr. Bowdle a question. The point is not that I have any opposition to it, but I wish somebody would tell me why a constitutional provision of this sort is necessary. It does not provide anything to regulate a certain class of testimony by witnesses. Is not that matter entirely within the discretion of the legislature and haven't they as full power as they will ever have if this is passed? I do not see any reason for it at all. I wish some one would tell me.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. HOSKINS: I would ask that the author would explain that.

Mr. FESS: I did not know that there was any opposition to it. I think it would be entirely wrong to vote upon this when Mr. Bowdle is absent.

Mr. HOSKINS: I will not say that I am opposed to it, but we are doing a number of things or a good many things that some members think unnecessary. There is no use of crowding the ballot and I am in favor of a short ballot.

Mr. DWYER: I agree with the member from Auglaize that the courts have now the power that is provided here. I have seen a number of cases where expert witnesses were limited.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do you know of any limitation on the present authority of the legislature to do just what this says it can do?

Mr. DWYER: No; the courts exercise that power now.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is not there some doubt on this point? At the present time is not there a doubt as to whether the courts will not hold that the courts and the courts only have the right to determine that and that it is not within the power of the legislature to regulate? In other words, it is a judicial question. I know some courts have held that the legislature cannot touch it. Is not that the motive of this?

Mr. DWYER: I agree with you thoroughly that the legislature can fix and control the introduction of expert testimony.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. ELSON: I have been waiting for many days to come up to something where the gentleman from Auglaize was on the right side and I think he has finally got on the right side.

Mr. DOTY: That's not so sure just because you are on the same side.

Mr. ELSON: I do not see the necessity of this and if we can cut down forty-two proposals to a smaller number it would be a right thing to do. Of course we do not wish to keep out anything that should be placed in, but for my part I would like to see this kept out.

Mr. MAUCK: I do not think it is clear, as the member from Athens and the member from Auglaize assume, that the general assembly has the power to provide against such testimony as we at present use expert witnesses in criminal cases. Section 1 of the bill of rights provides that any one accused of crime may have compulsory process of witnesses. If that means anything it means that it may not only compel the attendance of the witnesses, but that those witnesses may be compelled to testify to any question raised by the indictment or plea thereto. I doubt very much whether under the existing constitution a man accused of crime has the power under the bill of rights to compel the attendance of expert witnesses, say upon the question of insanity, or could be prevented from using those witnesses to establish the fact that the accused was at the time the offense was committed insane, not because it may not be necessary, but for an entirely different reason. It limits the regulation of expert witnesses' testimony to criminal trials and proceedings. In other words, if we had a civil will case, where the question was as to the capacity of the testator, those interested in that question could bring in all sorts of experts to establish simply the fact, but when it came to something that was far more important, as to whether or not a will was a forgery, you would limit the accused to such experts as the court by appointment of a commission or otherwise might provide. In other words, you are throwing an obstacle in the way of a man defending his life or liberty that you do not throw in the way of a man who is merely defending his property rights. I see no reason why experts should be eliminated from criminal prosecutions and continued in civil cases.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I am as anxious as any member of the Convention to expedite the work of the Convention, but I believe it is a discourtesy to my colleague [Mr. BOWDLE] and I move that the matter be informally passed.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I move that further consideration be postponed until tomorrow and that it retain its place on the calendar.

The motion was carried.

Mr. LAMPSON: Here is Proposal No. 331 to abolish the board of public works, passed by practically a unanimous vote, and I now call that up.

The PRESIDENT: Without objection Proposal No. 331 will be called up.

Mr. TAGGART: I have no particular objection, but I am prepared to present an amendment and the Convention will have to decide whether to legislate one member of the board of public works out of office or to legislate two in, and that is a question that has not been before the Convention yet.

Mr. LAMPSON: I withdraw the request then.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. Bigelow presented the petitions of H. C. Smith and eighty other citizens of Liberty Center; of E. J. St. Clair and ten other citizens of Dresden; of the Rev. Frank Hall and twenty-three other citizens of Columbus; of E. E. Ditch and forty-five other citizens of Mansfield; of P. L. Snyder and fifty other citizens of Springfield; of J. M. Anders and seventy-five other citizens of Leesburg; of P. P. Schell and one hundred forty other citizens of Cleveland; of Florence Hartsock and fifteen other citizens of Alliance; of A. C. Gray and fifty other citizens of Coshocton; of C. W. Penn and sixty-five other citizens of Fredericktown; of F. R. James and fifty other citizens of Franklin county; of C. G. Atterholt and forty other citizens of Youngstown; of T. Myers and twenty-five other citizens of Lorain county; of Park A. Soule and twenty-five other citizens of Ashland county; of B. Gilson and fifty other citizens of Lorain county; of C. A. Beebe and fifty other citizens of Norwalk; of J. B. Poole and fifty other citizens of W. Clarksfield; of Al Gibson and sixty-five other citizens of Wakeman; of Wm. Thorton and ninety other citizens of Washington C. H., protesting against the passage of Proposals No. 65 and 321; which were referred to the committee on Education.

Mr. Bigelow presented the remonstrances of the Rev. W. J. Young, of Piqua; of the Rev. John Montgomery, of Piqua; of F. B. Neel and many other other citizens of Piqua, asking that the word "similar" be stricken from the liquor proposal; which were referred to the committee on Liquor Traffic.

Mr. Bigelow presented the petitions of the Rev. Oliver L. Utter, of Eaton; of the Rev. M. I. Comfort, of Eaton; of the Rev. McD. Howard, of Eaton, asking the Convention to carefully consider home rule Proposal No. 272, section 3, relative to temperance laws; which were referred to the committee on Liquor Traffic.

Mr. Bigelow presented the petitions of H. J. Perks, of Toledo; of Frank E. White, of Salem; of George Wilson, Akron; of Geo. Van Atten, of Newark; of O. M. Corson, of Middletown; of M. T. Evans, of Youngstown; of J. C. Unzicker, of Hamilton; of F. W. Flowers, of Columbus, asking the delegates to secure the Ohio Federation of Labor amendments to the initiative and referendum proposal; which were referred to the committee on Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. Bigelow presented the petition of Jacob Katz and eighty-five other citizens of Cleveland, relative to a weekly pay day clause in the new constitution; which was referred to the committee on Labor.

Leave of absence for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday was granted to Mr. Tallman.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. Cordes and Mr. Eby.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I now move that we adjourn.

The motion was carried and the Convention adjourned until two o'clock Monday, May 27, 1912.

SEVENTY-SIXTH DAY

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MONDAY, May 27, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the Rev. D. A. Clark, of Columbus, Ohio.

The journal of Friday was read and approved.

Mr. DOTY: I want to call your attention to an error in the printed journal that is correct in the journal itself. In Proposal No. 151 you will find the order of the vote given "Against License" first and "For License" below. That is just the other way and the journal itself is correct, but the printed journal is wrong.

Mr. Harbarger asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Knight.

Mr. DOTY: I now move that we proceed with third readings.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection the Convention will proceed to third readings.

THIRD READING OF PROPOSALS.

Mr. TAGGART: Proposal No. 340 should be moved along by reference to the committee on Phraseology.

Mr. DOTY: Is not that the schedule that provides the time for the schedule to go into effect?

Mr. TAGGART: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: Do you not think it is better to wait and see all the proposals that are passed before we go into that?

Mr. TAGGART: The only purpose that I had in view was that it might go to the committee on Phraseology and come back and be ready for third reading and amendment.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 62 is the next in order.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. CRITES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 10 after the word "life" add the following:

" , without pardon unless at some future time found to be innocent."

Mr. CRITES: The only objection that I have heard from my people on this proposal is that they say there would be too many pardons and I think this amendment will make it difficult and secure more votes for our work.

Mr. DOTY: This amendment says "found to be innocent." By whom found? Do you mean a trial? If you take the pardoning power away, there is little hope of their ever getting out.

Mr. ANDERSON: Why would not this cover it: Shall be imprisoned for life unless the innocence be made to appear beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt.

Mr. DOTY: To whom?

Mr. ANDERSON: To the pardoning board or to whatever board it may be.

Mr. DOTY: We haven't any board to pardon anybody.

Mr. ANDERSON: It may mean the pardoning board, subject, I suppose, to proper revision.

Mr. DOTY: I would not want to be guilty of living in a state that denied the pardoning power to its governor. That would be barbarous. My friend from Pickaway could not have thought that out. That is a perfectly barbarous proposition, and I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. OKEY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In the sixth line after the word "of" strike out the word "homicide" and in lieu thereof insert the word "murder".

Mr. OKEY: My reason for offering this amendment is that the word "homicide" is an improper word from my standpoint to be used in this connection. The word "homicide" has a legal significance, and it includes any kind of killing whether accidental or otherwise. I had a couple of judges call my attention to this: Under this proposal, as we have it, nobody could be admitted to bail, and the word "homicide", as I stated before includes all grades of killing. It is the killing of a human being, but it does not necessarily imply an unlawful killing. Homicide does not necessarily mean a crime. That has received judicial construction, the meaning of it is well defined and for that reason and that only, in order that the proposal may mean something, I offer this amendment.

Mr. PECK: "Homicide" is all right. It has always been there, and we don't know whether it is murder or something else until the man is tried.

Mr. HOSKINS: I believe that the amendment of the delegate from Noble [Mr. Okey] should be adopted. It never struck me until just now, but if that proposal passes as here written there will be no such thing as bail in a case of homicide.

Mr. PECK: That is the way the constitution has been for years.

Mr. HOSKINS: No, sir. A "capital offense" it was, which means one where the death penalty is provided. We have abolished capital punishment now.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would not your amendment or the amendment of the gentleman from Noble prevent bailing of persons accused of murder in the second degree?

Mr. PECK: How are you going to determine whether it is murder, manslaughter or merely excusable homicide until the man is tried? The bail has to be given in advance. A homicide may be a murder and it may be something less. And there is where they say, when the proof is clear and the presumption great, bail may be denied. I do not see what other words you could use.

Mr. KING: I do not like the word "homicide", and "murder" would not be much better. The common law crime of murder is divided into two degrees and always was. "Manslaughter" is another offense. If the word "murder" were inserted, I do not see how bail could be granted in all cases where the charge is second degree. I understand these charges are usually first degree, but at the same time murder in the second degree has never been a capital offense and the phrase "capital offense" is used in our present constitution and the one preceding that. If you insert "murder", say "murder in the first degree", which has a common law definition.

Abolition of Capital Punishment.

Mr. WINN: Do you make any distinction between the word homicide and murder?

Mr. KING: Yes.

Mr. WINN: I notice Webster does not, and I wondered whether the lawyers differed from Webster.

Mr. KING: There is a well-defined difference.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I would like to make a few remarks defining my position on this question. It is the duty of the state to protect its citizens, and if the capital punishment or the fear of it would deter criminals from committing murder it should not be abolished. I do not like to hear the assertion that the state commits murder when it executes a criminal for the protection of society. It seems to me that such an assertion is unjust to the state and too sympathetic for the criminal. If society is better protected because of capital punishment it is the duty of the state to execute the criminal. In my opinion the recent execution of Richeson in Massachusetts was not only better for the criminal but better for the citizens of the state. It is said by many that they would rather be executed than imprisoned for life. If criminals as a rule were of that opinion I think that capital punishment might safely be abandoned, but the worst sort of criminals would rather have capital punishment abolished and take their chances of making an escape. Only yesterday I met a gentleman who said that he would have murdered his family at one time if it had not been for a fear of death. He told me that he knew plenty of criminals that were deterred from committing murder because of their fear of death. One man told the gentleman to whom I have just referred that he would have murdered his whole family if it were not for the fear of being executed.

Is there anybody in the United States who does not believe that we have better order and protection than in Italy?

Mr. DOTY: And more murders.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I dislike capital punishment as much as anybody here. I was foolish enough and silly enough until I was twenty-five or thirty years of age to say that if it were a question of my killing somebody or somebody killing me I would be willing to die. I have gotten over that. If a set of bandits rushed into this room and commenced trying to kill us I would be the first one to shoot them and I would not have any compunctions of conscience. I dislike the sentiment connected with this. Then there is one more objection. It has been admitted by everybody that this is statutory, that it could all be accomplished without a constitutional amendment. I might be in favor of submitting this question because I am not afraid to let the people rule, but if the legislature of the state has the same authority to do this that we have and there is no great demand for it, why should we take it up? I dislike this proposal being mentioned along with other proposals to weaken the work that we have done here. I am not opposed to capital punishment. I repeat that I would be willing to let the people have an opportunity to vote for or against it if this thing were needed to correct the constitution, but it is not. All of you can see that there is something wrong with this provision, because here they are attempting to amend it right and left already. Now if we put anything in the constitution it will be beyond amendment. Why do a foolish thing when we can do the right thing at the proper time? I only rose to defend my position and not to take up time.

A reading of the amendment was called for and it was again read.

Mr. OKEY: That ought to have "murder in the first degree" inserted. I agreed to that when Judge King mentioned it.

The SECRETARY: It was not sent to the secretary's desk.

By unanimous consent the words "first degree" were added to the amendment, and the amendment was then read as follows:

Strike out the word "homicide" in line 6 and insert in lieu thereof "murder in the first degree".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer an amendment. The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the proposal add: "Neither the governor nor the legislature shall have power to grant a pardon to any person convicted of murder, unless upon the written recommendation of the majority of the judges of the supreme court."

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I voted for this proposal believing that the state was not justified in taking human life, but we ought not to let our compunctions override the rightful protection of society. It seems to me that the pardoning power should not be used except under extenuating circumstances. This amendment of mine is copied from the constitution of California where a person is convicted the second time of a felony and I believe this amendment will strengthen this proposal before the people.

Mr. WINN: Does your amendment propose that the supreme court of the state of Ohio shall be a pardoning board?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: If they find a party was innocent they would be authorized to say so.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNN: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 10 after the word "imprisonment" insert the words "at hard labor," and at end of line 10 change period to a comma and add the sentence "and part or all of his net earnings may be paid to the dependents of his victim."

Mr. DUNN: I would like to see the proposal abolishing capital punishment adopted, but I believe there is a great deal of sentiment throughout the state against it. I believe it needs a little strengthening to make it popular with the people. I believe it would have been better if we would have permitted eleven out of twelve jurors to convict where a life will not any longer be at stake. This would prevent the bribery of one juror resulting in a mistrial and would bring about fewer mistrials, and by my amendment the people of the state will understand that those persons convicted for life are not going to be put into the idle house, but are going to work. If a person who meditates murder understands that he is almost sure of conviction and that he will be compelled to work for the dependents of his victim the rest of his life, he will be apt to hesitate, and it will be a blessing to the dependents of his victim if he be imprisoned for life instead of being executed and made to work for their support. I know some will laugh because you will say there will be no net earnings, but there ought to be. The state of Ohio ought to be able to make a man earn his own living and a little for the dependants of his victim. I am sure that this amendment will add popularity to this measure before the farmers.

Mr. DOTY: I am very grateful that the member has said what he has and it marks him as humane, but the only trouble is there is no definition of "net earnings." We talk about gross earnings and net earnings on things that we can figure. And even bookkeepers differ greatly on these. What is "net earnings" of a man? I do not believe that the member himself has worked out what that means. It does not mean anything.

Mr. WINN: Suppose that the proposal now pending before us, which does away with contract prison labor, is adopted and the prisoners are confined in a particular institution and are required to work only for the state, will there be any net earnings?

Mr. DOTY: That is a question of bookkeeping. The question of net earnings is a very hard one to get at, and if that proposal goes through it will be more indefinite than under the contract system. To put that word in, in my opinion, is worse than useless.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: As I understand the amendment of the member from Clermont [Mr. DUNN] there are two questions involved. First, that the prisoner shall not be subject to pardon. Is that correct?

Mr. DOTY: No.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: The governor cannot pardon him?

Mr. DOTY: That was another that has already been voted down.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Then with regard to the proposition of net earnings, I agree for once with the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY] and the gentleman from Defiance [Mr. WINN] that this is altogether too indeterminate to be a part of the constitution. What may be determined in the future about it we do not know, but we cannot make any provision about these net earnings under present conditions.

Mr. LEETE: I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was carried and the amendment tabled.

Mr. ANDERSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "life" in line 10 insert: "and no such person shall ever be pardoned or released unless his innocence shall be made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt."

Mr. ANDERSON: The presumption of innocence under the law surrounds everybody. In other words, no person can be convicted of a crime unless his guilt is made to appear beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt. Consequently what is meant by "beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt" is well understood in law and has many times been defined. So before you can find a person guilty who is accused of a capital offense you must establish his guilt beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt. After that guilt has been established and since we have taken away the right of the state to take his life, it seems to me that before he should be pardoned his innocence should be made to appear beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt. In other words, the state as such has to carry the burden of proving him guilty beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt, and next, if this amendment be adopted, it seems to me that the burden should shift and rest upon the shoulders of the prisoner, requiring him to prove his innocence beyond the existence of a reasonable doubt before he could be pardoned. I suggest this. I have not much feeling about it one way or the other, but it seems to me that if we take the protection away from the state, as we have done, we should give the state some protection in the matter and let it be reasonably certain that when a man is once found guilty of a capital offense his innocence must be made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt before he can get clear.

Mr. ELSON: If this amendment is adopted I fear that it will tend to popularize the proposal. I hope it will not be popularized because I hope it will be killed by the people.

Mr. ANDERSON: Then your position as to the amendment is that the amendment does improve the proposal?

Mr. ELSON: Yes. I have heard most serious objection to this proposal. Now, in spite of the fact that our friend from Cincinnati [Mr. BOWDLE] may ridicule me as he did the preachers because of their inhumanity, I want to express myself on this. I think this is nothing but maudlin, morbid sentimentalism.

Mr. DOTY: Did you vote for it?

Mr. ELSON: I do not remember, but if I did I have changed my mind. I believe that we should look to the welfare and protection of society rather than the murderer. The first law of nature is self-protection, and that applies to society as a whole just as much as to an individual. The state is merely society organized. The state can go into a man's home and can take him up from his fireside and put him in the forefront of battle with a musket in his hand there to lay down his life for the preservation of the state, and yet here we are trying to forbid the state from taking the life of a miserable scoundrel who violates the law of the state when he knows that the penalty is death. Take those auto-bandits of Paris a few weeks ago. They have killed a half hundred people and what does society owe them? Life? Certainly not. We are told that "if thy right arm offend thee cut it off and cast it from thee." Why should not these creatures be executed? Take the McNamara case in California. Would those men ever have confessed that crime if there had been no capital punishment? They would doubtless have gone to prison protesting innocence and thousands and thousands would have believed them innocent.

Take lonely farmers and outrages against them. We don't have many of them in this state, but in New York and New Jersey it is not an unusual thing for a criminal to come along and murder the inmates of a farm house. Do not the farmers want all the protection that they can get from organized society?

Mr. DWYER: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not talking to his amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL: I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I trust that the Convention will adopt the amendment of the member from Mahoning, not because it is popular or unpopular, but because it is essentially just and wise. The conscience of the people of the state has been aroused since the Convention first adopted the proposal, and it has received more hearty commendation from the great majority of the people than any other proposal that we have adopted. We can judge from the editorials of the leading newspapers of the state. The public conscience is aroused; and the carnivora are running to cover; the people of the state will appreciate that this Convention is not blood-thirsty, no matter what else some of its detractors may say of it.

Mr. FACKLER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the last four words of the amendment.

Mr. PECK: I want to call the attention of the gentlemen who are offering these amendments to the fact that the clause that they are amending is only a temporary one and their amendments will pass away as soon as the legislature passes upon this. If they will read that clause to which Mr. Anderson's amendment applies they will find it reads that until otherwise provided by law persons convicted of crime heretofore punishable by death shall be imprisoned, etc. The expectation is that the general assembly will take up the matter and determine about these things and thus all of these amendments will be to something that does not longer apply.

Mr. LAMPSON: The Fackler amendment means nothing. Strike out and leave it that the innocence must appear! To whom and how proved? With what degree of proof would it be satisfied?

Mr. FACKLER: It would be the ordinary proof by a preponderance of the evidence.

Mr. ANDERSON: I want it stronger than that. When the accused is found guilty before a life sentence is imposed his guilt must appear beyond a reasonable doubt; not by a probability, but beyond a reasonable doubt. Consequently, after the state has overcome that great burden and handicap in convicting him, I say that the prisoner ought to have the same burden placed upon him before he can be pardoned. In other words, not by a mere probability to show his innocence, because that is just exactly the object of my amendment, to get away from any probability in letting a man out after he is once convicted. I want his innocence to appear beyond a reasonable doubt, and I move to table the Fackler amendment.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. DOTY: We have the authority of the member from Mahoning that the amendment of Mr. Fackler was meaningless and we voted that down. We now have the statement of the chairman of the committee that the amendment of the delegate from Mahoning is meaningless in that it amends the wrong part of the proposal, as I understand.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: By whose authority did you say you had that.

Mr. DOTY: The member from Hamilton, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Well, well.

Mr. DOTY: You may learn something from him if you try. I have. The member from Hamilton [Mr. PECK] says that the amendment of the member from Mahoning amounts only to a temporary thing.

Mr. ANDERSON: I didn't hear Judge Peck say that. Was not Judge Peck's statement that the legislature can do what I proposed? That is true. The legislature can do it.

Mr. DOTY: I didn't understand the judge to say that. Your amendment is tied on to the last sentence and that reads "until otherwise provided by law persons heretofore convicted of crime punishable by death shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life", etc. The chairman of the Judiciary committee and three other members have explained and spoken against this, and if the member from Mahoning consults the professors he will find out that he is wrong about it. I move that his amendment be laid on the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. MOORE: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the period in line 8.

Mr. MOORE: This proposal abolishes capital punishment in the state of Ohio, but the latter part is legislative. It does not belong in a constitutional provision and I think it should be dropped.

Mr. DOTY: Then what would you say would happen to a man who committed murder in the first degree the last day of August and is tried and convicted on the tenth of October if this amendment is adopted the third day of September and promulgated the first of October? What becomes of him? Would not you have to turn him loose? This takes care of it in the meantime.

Mr. FACKLER: I move that the amendment be tabled.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. COLTON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 5 strike out "in cases" and in line 6 strike out the first word "of" and insert "those charged with".

Mr. COLTON: The intent of this amendment is to overcome the objection raised some time ago that we do not know at the start of what degree of murder the man is guilty. If this amendment is inserted it will read "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient surety except those charged with murder in the first degree".

Mr. HOSKINS: I call attention to the fact relative to the amendment just offered that if you insert "those charged with" it simply refers to the charge and not to the remainder where it says "the proof is evident or the presumption great."

Abolition of Capital Punishment.

Mr. DOTY: Is not that the time when we ought to begin to define what should be bailable and what not?

Mr. HOSKINS: Those charged with, where the proof is evident or the presumption great. You charge him with it. I take it that the meaning is that whenever the charge of first degree murder is in the affidavit it shall not be bailable. I cannot see what else Mr. Colton means.

Mr. FACKLER: He must be charged with murder in the first degree and where the proof is evident or the presumption great.

Mr. PIERCE: I think the amendment of Mr. Colton should carry. I believe it is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODS: Gentlemen of the Convention: I only want a minute of your time. You know I am against this proposition. But there are a couple of points here that I do not think the Convention has fairly considered. There is not a man on this floor who, while in favor of abolishing capital punishment, does not admit that it is a statutory matter. It is not a matter that should be taken care of in the constitution. I say to you, in all fairness, you have tried in this proposal to take care of existing statutes if this becomes part of the constitution, but I do not think that you have done it. You cannot do it except by taking out of the statutes the first section and setting it right in the constitution. I believe that if you put this in the constitution and the people ratify it at the polls you will find that no man can be convicted of first degree murder who has been committed between the time this is adopted and the time the general assembly makes the statute. You say in this proposal that the first degree murder statute is in addition. You certainly do that, do you not?

Mr. DOTY: No.

Mr. WOODS: You do. You say "nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime." How are you going to hold that first degree murder statute is constitutional in the face of this provision of the constitution? I say you cannot do it, and if you pass this proposal you cannot punish a man for first degree murder committed between the time this is adopted and the time the legislature passes the law.

There is another thing in this proposal to which I wish to call attention. The three lines "until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable"—not now, but heretofore. When was that? Was it one hundred years ago when a man lost his life if he committed burglary? I want to say that you are interfering with a great deal here and you are going to leave the matter in such shape that no man can be convicted of first degree murder until after the general assembly has enacted a law. I don't think you ought to do this. You have the initiative and referendum and if the people of the state of Ohio want to abolish capital punishment and the general assembly will not do it, why do you not do it through the initiative and referendum? Let us not get in such shape that men cannot be punished for first degree murder. Why should this Constitutional Convention spend its time trying to lessen the punishment for the most serious of all crimes? Nobody has been clamoring for it. I think you will lose ground if this thing is passed. Most all of you know it is very unpopular. The people of the state of Ohio are not anxious to have anything like this done. I am not afraid that it cannot be taken care of at the polls, but if we should happen to pass it the murder statute will be balled up and in about as bad shape as possible.

Mr. STEVENS: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 65, nays 39, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Fox,	Miller, Crawford,
Antrim,	Hahn,	Miller, Ottawa,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 62—Mr. Pierce. To submit an amendment to article I, section 9, of the constitution.—Abolition of capital punishment.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with murder in the first degree, where proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime. Until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary during life.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 51—Mr. Miller, of Crawford, is next.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the word "fire" in line 10.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: In the report from the committee this word "fire" was stricken out, but in re-submitting it and in the substitute offered the word "fire" was left in. We have three or four strong mutual companies in the state that insure against storms and I would like the word "fire" cut out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the period at the end of line 13, add the following:

"Laws may be passed to establish and maintain a bureau of insurance for the purpose of furnishing fire, life, accident, and other insurance to the citizens of the state."

Mr. STEVENS: I do not desire to say anything further than to state this is what has been known on the floor of the Convention as the state insurance proposal. It gives the lawmaking authority in this state at any time it so desires the power to establish and maintain a bureau of insurance for the purpose of furnishing fire, life, accident and other insurance to the citizens of the state. I do not care to discuss it further than that. I think you understand it and I think the subject has been thoroughly discussed.

Mr. WINN: At the time this amendment was offered before I took occasion to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that while Ohio heretofore has been backward as far as the insurance business is concerned, different companies are now being organized in the state, and it will not be many years before Ohio will take front rank in the insurance business, both life and fire. I know of at least four splendid life insurance companies that have just entered upon what promises to be successful business.

Mr. STEVENS: Do you not suppose that those four insurance companies just being organized will do business in exactly the same way that all the rest of them have been doing for twenty-five years?

Mr. WINN: I undertake to say whenever it is known to the people of the state that the legislature of Ohio has authority to go into the insurance business there is not the remotest possibility of the organization of either a life or a fire insurance company in Ohio until that possibility has been removed. I cannot think of anything that is more serious than this amendment. Therefore I move that it be laid on the table.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded; taken, and resulted—yeas 61, nays 41, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

The roll call was verified.

So the amendment was tabled.

Mr. DUNN: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Add after line 13 the following: "The state may insure citizens against sickness, invalidism and old age."

Mr. DUNN: Gentlemen: Just a moment. I suppose a great majority of the members of this Convention are fully aware that we are creatures of prejudice. Our surroundings in life affect our views of things. If you have noticed what I have been trying to do in the way of proposals during my service in this Convention you will conclude that it has all been in the direction of the betterment of the poorer class, or common people. If there is any class of persons in Ohio who look up, who are ambitious, and who are trying to climb over difficulties in life's pathway, if there is any man who deserves help, it is the man who loves his family and rushes into debt for the sake of having a home for his wife and children, and if there are any people in the state who deserve sympathy it is the father and mother who are anxious to be able to send their children to college. There are hundreds of such people in Ohio. If you will notice we have been talking of classifying property for taxation and one would think certainly now the poor man is going to have some chance to live, that he is going to have some hope in life's struggle. But it is in favor of the rich man to take the burden from the money of the rich and place the entire burden on the poor. It is not in favor of the poor man at all, and I want to say now that there are some people in Ohio that do not want anybody to pay their taxes. It is said on this floor or hinted that there is no man who would not be willing to escape his taxes if he could. I know there is one man who is going to pay his own taxes and pay far more than his own taxes. I have tried in some way or other in different ways to relieve the struggling farmer and home-owner who is in debt. I have tried in some way to relieve him of paying more than his own taxes, and yet I am laughed at and scorned because I say such a thing. Some of my best friends on the floor laugh at the idea of finding any way at all to relieve the man who is in debt of paying taxes on his debts as well as on what he owns. I have tried to get a proposal through for an old-age pension, because the poorer common people have been paying more taxes all along than they ought to and more than the very rich, the dishonest men who are hiding their property and are not paying taxes. The main work of this Convention has been toward the common people. In fact, a graduated income tax—

Regulating Insurance—Change in Judicial System.

Mr. PETTIT: I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT: State the point.

Mr. PETTIT: He is not talking to the amendment he offered at all. He is talking on taxation.

The PRESIDENT: Under the limitation of time under which each member speaks the chair does not feel that he should hold any member down too closely to the subject and the member will proceed.

Mr. DUNN: I would rather have the proposal passed for an old-age pension, not as charity, but as giving to the common people something that has been taken from them, and if this Convention looks at this matter right and provides an old-age pension fund, as you have already passed a graded income tax, you would be returning in some degree the money taken from the common people by the very rich and passing it back to where it belongs.

Mr. DWYER: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The amendment of the delegate from Clermont was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 97, nays 4, as follows:

Those who voted in the negative are: Messrs. Doty, Henderson, Hoskins, Moore.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 51—Mr. Miller, of Crawford: To submit an amendment to article VIII, section 6, of the constitution.—Regulating insurance.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. Ulmer arose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce. His name being called, Mr. Ulmer voted "aye."

Mr. HOSKINS: I rise to a point of order. As this roll was called I watched and saw that a large number of votes were cast from behind the railing. This has been done on a great many proposals and there is no assurance from the secretary's desk that the votes are votes of the members. I make the point that no member can vote unless he is in his seat or where the secretary and the Convention can see him.

The PRESIDENT: The point of order is well taken. A member must be in sight or his vote will not be received. The only way to vote is by being where the rest of us can see you. The next proposal is Proposal No. 184 and the question is, Shall the report of the committee be agreed to?

The report was agreed to.

The proposal was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time at once.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection the proposal will now be read for the third time. The chair hears none.

Proposal No. 184 was read the third time.

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. PECK: It is necessary to amend this proposal somewhat and I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the period in line 44 insert the following: "Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years."

Mr. PECK: That was made necessary by an omission in transcribing the proposal as originally introduced. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PECK: I offer another amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of section 2, line 34, add the following:

"All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law."

Mr. PECK: It was thought at the time this proposal was voted on before that this matter of pending cases might be provided for in the schedule, but upon consultation with some of the members of the Phraseology committee and some of the members of the Judiciary committee, it was thought best to put it in here to take care of pending cases in the supreme court, because if this amendment should be adopted and nothing is said about those cases it would deprive the court of jurisdiction and the court could do nothing but dismiss them and they ought to proceed to judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 55, after the word "appeals," insert: "and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be".

Mr. JONES: The purpose of this amendment is to take care of cases that may be pending in the circuit court at the time of the taking effect of this proposal. The language now is that the pending cases shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals subject to the provisions hereof. That would deprive of a trial a party who had a case pending in the circuit court which had been brought there on appeal. He may have tried the case in the common pleas court formally only. Now, when this provision goes into effect cases in the court of appeals can only be heard upon record. They cannot be heard as we have been hearing them. The object of this provision is simply to preserve the present procedure with reference to all cases that may be pending in the circuit court at the time this provision goes into effect, and that all cases coming into the court of appeals after this constitutional provision takes effect will be subject to the provisions of it. I might explain that this language with reference to the supreme court is inserted here so as to provide for a review by some other court of a case that is in the circuit court at the time of the taking effect of this constitutional provision. In a case that was pending to be tried in the circuit court on appeal, unless this provision is made that it might be reviewed in the supreme court, the party would be deprived of his right of review.

Mr. KING: Is it your understanding that this amendment is to affect any case that will be pending in the court of common pleas at the time of the taking effect of this amendment?

Mr. JONES: No.

Mr. KING: Why should it not? Why should not the cases pending in the court of common pleas when this goes into effect be entitled to the same procedure and trial in the court of appeals that they are entitled to now and when they were commenced?

Mr. JONES: That matter was fully considered and this conclusion was reached in regard to it, that the cases pending in the circuit court at the time this constitutional provision takes effect would clearly be entitled to the same procedure we now have or else the parties would be cut out of their right of review in many cases, but cases in the common pleas court could be tried with reference to this constitutional provision. Parties in trying a case, if it were an appeal case, could try it in the common pleas court in anticipation of the adoption of this judiciary proposal.

The PRESIDENT: The member's time is up.

Mr. MAUCK: I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. MAUCK: Then if I cannot ask a question I will make a statement. It seems to me that parties ought to be protected in cases where they are now entitled to a trial. Suppose they try their case in the court of common pleas, what becomes of it then? The court has rendered its decision, but the time within which they may appeal or have a bill of exceptions signed or file a petition in error has not expired. They can do either or both under the present law, and if this amendment goes into effect where does it leave such cases? Why should they not have the right they now have to retry in the appellate court?

Mr. JONES: Those cases that were tried in the common pleas court that would be error cases in the reviewing court could be prosecuted to the court of appeals just as effectively in the way of securing their rights as they could to the circuit court. They could not be prejudiced. Only equity cases could be tried in the common pleas court, and it was thought that parties with the knowledge that this proposal might be adopted could, without much inconvenience, try those cases so that if it were adopted they could go to the appellate court with a full record and have a review just as they would with cases after that time.

Mr. KING: I think we can take care of that better in Proposal No. 340, for we have made that absolutely general, covering every case in every court.

Mr. JONES: It does not cover these cases.

Mr. KING: "All cases pending in the courts at the time this amendment takes effect shall be heard and tried in the same manner and with the same procedure as now exists by law."

Mr. PECK: If that fixes it, why worry about it here?

Mr. KING: You are taking it away line by line. I do not think it would affect this if this is not adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON: The Convention needs no better evidence of the confusion that would exist provided this amendment prevails than the confusion among the gentlemen here discussing it. It will only confuse and not clarify. If anything this Convention has done has received more praise than everything else it has been Proposal No. 184. And it has received more critical examination than any other proposal. There are very few attorneys who have not received copies. I move that the amendment offered by Mr. Jones be tabled.

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. JONES: Will you allow me to ask a question? It is suggested that it is taken care of in Proposal No. 340. That is a separate proposal. Suppose Proposal No. 340 does not carry and this does; where will you be? It is absolutely necessary to have this provision adopted as part of the Peck proposal or you leave in very bad condition every case pending in the court of appeals at the time of the adoption.

Mr. ANDERSON: And if you do pass it every pending case, provided it goes to the supreme court and then back again, years from now, will have a different rule of procedure provided the Jones amendment carries than the other cases, provided the Peck proposal carries, which will mean endless confusion. I maintain every case that has been tried in the common pleas court and determined and then goes to the circuit court has gone exactly the same way as if the Peck proposal was a law when tried in the common pleas court and no hardship is entailed at all. All we have in the Peck proposal is one trial and one review and all litigants will get that. I move to table the amendment of Mr. Jones.

The motion to table was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the amendment of the gentleman from Fayette prevail?

Mr. KRAMER: I want to ask the member from Mahoning a question.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Mahoning has not the floor and his time has expired.

Mr. KRAMER: Take these two circuit courts where they have not been requiring a record be taken. That is the way in our county and circuit. Suppose there is a murder case that has been tried and it has gone to the circuit court on appeal. The people have absolutely no chance at all to have that case even reviewed, because our circuit court has always been allowing us to try the second time or de novo.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM [Mr. Doty]: That is out of order. The delegate from Highland [Mr. Brown] is not here.

Mr. KRAMER: Under this we would be shut out, because the attorneys have made no effort to prepare the record below for the purpose of having the case reviewed in the circuit court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALFHILL: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "jurisdiction" in line 59 insert: "in the trial of chancery cases, and,".

Mr. HALFHILL: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: The amendment I offered is for the purpose of giving to the circuit court the right to retry chancery cases that have been heard and determined in the court of common pleas. There was some attempt to present an amendment of that kind at the time this proposal was at the stage of second reading, and at that time it was discussed here or suggested here that in the larger counties of Cuyahoga and Hamilton the circuit court had for some years past adopted a plan of having these cases which under the law are retriable by introducing the witnesses, heard by these courts by review upon the printed record. This in no way interferes with that arrangement in those counties because they are doing that under a rule of court and are actually usurping the law in that respect, but so far as the client and parties are bound by acquiescing therein, it answers the same purpose. We do the same frequently in other circuits, but that is by agreement of parties, usually made by their counsel.

Now many a time where I have had a client who was financially able to have the testimony printed out as it was heard in the court of common pleas, I have by agreement with the party on the other side, had that testimony extended and presented to the circuit court as a basis for the trial there, but we always had a right to supplement it with oral testimony. We have been used to this right of appeal in chancery cases for a great many years in Ohio. By inserting the amendment I in no way whatever conflict with the principal workings of this proposal as framed, because what I propose by this amendment, is simply a method of review. You are not giving an additional trial. You are giving only the two trials, a review by way of a trial instead of a review by way of printed record, and there is no chance to take that case any further unless it is within the exceptions named in the proposal or unless it is a felony or a case involving a constitutional question, and of course a felony case is not a chancery case. A constitutional question is only occasionally raised in a chancery case, so this does not at all interfere with the proposal as framed. There is no reason why it should be objected to. It was argued by the chairman of the Judiciary committee on second reading that nobody wanted this right of appeal but the lawyers, and "when did the the lawyers ever do anything for the purpose of reforming judicial procedure?" That is a loose and reckless and slanderous statement, doing a great wrong to our profession, because the lawyers have at all times been to the very forefront in the changing and reforming of judicial procedure. Why, David Dudley Field, of New York, framed the code of civil procedure, joined the common law actions and equity procedure into a civil action commenced by filing a "petition", and we followed that plan in 1851 in this state and that is our court procedure in Ohio today, and every bar association, not only of our own state, but of every state in the Union as well as the American Bar Association, as is known to everyone of any observation, has its committees constantly looking after judicial procedure and reforming it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PECK: I wanted a word before that was put. This is an important matter and I move to reconsider the vote by which that motion was carried.

Mr. WINN: I make the point of order that the member who makes the motion did not vote in favor of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The point is not well taken. There was no record vote. No man knows how the Judge voted and nobody has a right to ask him. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Allen was adopted.

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. PECK: I want to be heard and I want to answer the objections of Mr. Halfhill. There has been so much discussion of so many things that probably a good many of the members have forgotten that this matter was all fought out on the second reading of the proposal and fought out at considerable length. The amendment that Mr. Halfhill puts forward was considered and voted down.

This simply gives two trials to one class of cases, and a large class of cases, and it violates the fundamental principle of this proposal, that a man shall have one trial and one review. It puts in a large class of exceptions to that principle. If this amendment prevails those cases will have two trials, one in the common pleas court and one in the court of appeals, and will have no review.

Mr. HALFHILL: Does it not go simply to the method of review? We review it by a trial.

Mr. PECK: It goes to the method and you ought to leave it alone. My method is as good as yours. The review now would be just the same sort of review that every man who has any sort of a case at law has, and there is no earthly reason why that review is not as good as any other. It is now resorted to in nearly all sorts of cases. They nearly all review on the record taken by the shorthand writer. It has become a very rare thing that the circuit court hears any oral testimony in many of the circuits of the state; so the amendment ought not to prevail. It merely weakens the proposition and is a step backwards. It introduces two trials and no review instead of one trial and a review in a large class of cases.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: On the contrary, I think this amendment ought to pass.

Mr. PECK: Well, what do you know about it?

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: A good deal; and that is the trouble with the lawyers, that they think laymen do not know anything about anything connected with the law and that the lawyer knows everything. The fact is what the lawyer knows is partisan knowledge. The fact that I have been dubbed "a de novo" brings to my mind that in the second reading I tried to get this thing in by advocating an amendment giving a right to trial de novo on the ground that a party might not have secured a proper trial in the court below or that the court below was probably unjust by reason of certain influences, and further, on the ground that witnesses may have testified that were credible and witnesses may have testified that were not credible, and that fact could not be known except by actual contact and analysis of the individuals who testified; that the upper court, if the case were submitted on the record, would be utterly unable to give proper consideration to it; that it would probably give to discredited witnesses as much credit as accredited witnesses and that would result in injustice.

Mr. CROSSER: There are several reasons why I would like to see the amendment adopted. This is not proposing any more trials than the present proposition because it simply provides a different means of having the second trial. If the proposal is adopted as it stands at the present time there are innumerable persons who will never be able to go to the court of appeals simply because they are not able to buy the record. A record costs anywhere from thirty or forty to several hundred dollars, according to the length of time the case takes to be tried. That is one reason why the amendment should be adopted. It will help the poor man and it will let him have a chance to have a retrial as well as the man who can pay for the record.

Another reason is that the upper court has an opportunity to see the witnesses, watch their behavior and determine how much credence should be placed in the statements of any particular witness in the case on trial, an opportunity it cannot have by the plain old printed record. I think for these two reasons the proposition should be passed.

Mr. KING: I do not think the question of whether we shall allow appeals of trials in the appellate court of cases that have been once tried in the common pleas court is of such great importance that those who believe in that method of procedure should undertake to force it into this proposal so as to destroy the whole proposal. I believe it will have that effect. At least it will contribute largely to it. Personally, having had experience at both ends of the game, both in trying cases and hearing them tried, I have no prejudice one way or the other, but my contention has always been that one trial was enough. I know that the legal profession of Ohio generally, outside perhaps of the larger cities, are wedded to the theory of a trial on appeal, and the only objection that has been urged to me to this proposal has been the objection of the lawyers because the right to try their cases upon an appeal has been taken away. But do not let anybody make the mistake that the lawyers of Ohio, if they make up their minds on this question, have no influence. They will call in their clients and explain the proposition and get them to vote against it. I think there are more important things in the proposal than the question of whether you try a case on appeal, and therefore I am in favor of leaving the appeals where they stand right now. Let the court of appeals enforce them and let the trial be by new witnesses where the court wants them. Therefore I hope that the vote by which this amendment was carried will not be reconsidered.

Mr. JONES: Since we are by this proposed amendment establishing the court of appeals as the court of last resort in practically all of the cases, would it not be an anomaly to have a court of last resort a trial court? Did you ever hear anywhere in any jurisdiction in this country of a court of last resort being a trial court in any sort of a case except one of original jurisdiction?

Mr. KING: It is not usual, but we are doing some things differently here from what they are doing them in other states. This whole proposal is based upon a different proposition than you will find in force in most of the states of the Union, but I am for the main feature of it and I believe it should be adopted. It will benefit the legal procedure in this state, and I would not hazard the success of that by taking out of it the right to appeal which the people enjoyed. That is too small a thing to be talked about a moment.

Mr. PETTIT: I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Halfhill for reasons I have given heretofore, but which I will repeat briefly. It does not take any longer time under this amendment to try a case on appeal than it will on error. I do not want the laymen of the Convention to forget that proposition. It has been discussed by the gentleman from Hamilton that it will consume more time and will cost more. I do not assent to that. I say it will cost less. What is the transcript worth telling what a man testified to? One man's testimony on paper looks as well as another's, although it may be all perjured, and when the judges come to charge the jury with reference to the testimony they hear they say, "Look at the witnesses, scrutinize their conduct and behavior and see whether they know what they are testifying about." I say that is all in the interest of the people. There was a howl before that only the lawyers were in favor of this. That is a base slander.

Mr. BOWDLE: I am opposed to the amendment and I am in favor of the proposal as it stands. It is a mistake to suppose that it is of very great value in the administration of justice for courts to look into the faces of witnesses. In the first place about half of the witnesses who get on the stand are accomplished liars, and the more accomplished liars they are the more impressive is their testimony. It would be a fine thing in all trials if all testimony were taken down in advance and carefully reduced to typewriting and presented to the judges. I am opposed to seeing the witnesses generally, and one thing that is particularly offensive to me is for courts to have the ability to easily see whether the lawyer before them is a democrat or a republican.

In the administration of justice in Athens in the court of the Areopagus, the Athenians held court in outer darkness so that the judges could not see the witnesses or the lawyers, and when people went to hold court they carried a lantern and their night clothes. I believe one trial is quite sufficient and I believe it would be a mistake to have two trials.

Mr. OKEY: I am in favor of the Peck proposal and also in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allen county [Mr. HALFHILL]. When this proposition was before us a few weeks ago I discovered that a great many men voted under a misapprehension of what this proposal means. The amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Allen does not injure in the least degree the Peck proposal, but it only strengthens it. I realize that a man frequently views legal procedure from the custom that prevails in his time, but I tell you when you are taking away from the rights of the people of this country the right to appeal you are doing something that we ought not to do. Sometimes we want a retrial and we have a right to bring the witnesses before the appellate court. It sometimes happens that a man is not able to procure the record to go up, and if he is compelled to have the record and is not permitted to use witnesses he cannot go up. Therefore I hope that the members of this Convention will see the object that we have in view and the sole object of giving the right to the people to appeal. I would like to appeal a case when I want to, and it will not only be less costly, but it will give the right we want the people to enjoy and will not impair the proposition in the least.

Mr. HOSKINS: Just a word on this subject. It has not been made evident here and for the benefit of those who do not practice law I hope you will understand what is meant by a chancery case. We will have, if this amendment prevails, the right to appeal a chancery case to the appellate court where there has been no trial by jury and where you have no right of trial by jury. In hundreds of cases we are compelled to try the cases before the common pleas judges, who are the sole judges of facts. All judges are not perfect. Justice can be arrived at only approximately at the best, and we are compelled to try cases in a local community where there may be political or personal prejudice. That does not cut much figure where you submit to twelve men, but in a chancery case you submit to only one man. Now, under the proposal as it stands, you must pay the expenses of the record to take that up in printed or typewritten form to the appellate court. I will state for the benefit of the laymen that that is more expensive than the right to take your witnesses before the court of appeals and have your witnesses heard originally, a right we have enjoyed for sixty years. You are not increasing the number of hearings or the cost. You are decreasing the cost, making litigation more simple and arriving nearer at justice, because you can hear your case before these three men and they are not subject to the prejudice which the single man may be subject to who hears the case in the court below. Now we have had that right for sixty years. There has not been any complaint about that right. It is the dragging of the cases along that makes the complaint, but when you realize you have not increased the cost, but have preserved to the litigant a right he has enjoyed for sixty years, the right of having an appeal to the upper court, where he must submit his controversy in the common pleas court to a single man—the judge—we ask you, gentlemen, to give us this right of appeal and nothing short of this will meet the demands of the people.

Mr. HURSH: You remember that Mr. Halfhill in the original argument said that it was charged that lawyers did not—

Mr. HOSKINS: I cannot have you taking up my time.

Mr. HURSH:—generally properly prepare the case on the first trial?

Mr. HOSKINS: I don't think that happens. You could not provide against that anyhow. That has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. NYE: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: It seems to me that the nearer you can get the courts to the people the more satisfactory your courts are to the people. I am therefore in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Allen, because if the litigants and their witnesses can go before the circuit court and can be heard by the circuit court they get nearer to the court and the court is nearer to the people than it would be if they tried the cases in any other way. I do not believe that you can do anything for this proposal that would make it more popular with the people and get more votes for it than to adopt this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Allen. I have just come from the people and I have talked with the people and with the attorneys about this amendment and about this very proposal. They are in favor of having this appeal where you can try the case originally and have the court hear the witnesses testify. The gentleman from Hamilton [Mr. BOWDLE] said that he believes that witnesses generally are liars. From my experience on the bench for ten years I do not concur in that opinion. I believe generally that witnesses are honest and as a general thing are seeking to get at the truth, and I know of no better way in which they can get at the truth than to hear the witnesses and see them face to face. I am therefore in favor of the amendment.

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. JONES: Gentlemen of the Convention: It seems strange that in so short a time since the second reading of this proposal and its passage there could be such an apparent change of sentiment. The main purpose and object of this judiciary proposal is to facilitate the administration of justice and make it possible to cheapen it. Therefore the slogan has been adopted, one trial and one review. No lawyer, I think, if he would consider for a moment, would say that any case should be finally tried without an opportunity for a review. That is a thing we have had in English jurisprudence for hundreds and hundreds of years, and there has been no jurisdiction that has adopted the plan of finally disposing of cases without an opportunity for review. There is good reason for that, because in reviewing cases, with the whole record before the court, the court can sift out and determine the questions of law involved and arrive at a correct solution of the facts better than in the hurry of a trial with witnesses before it. Here is a trial in the common pleas court of two or three weeks, and for the purpose of facilitating these cases through the courts you say that you are going to have a repetition of that three weeks' trial in the court of appeals and call all the witnesses back again and have them say the same things over again which they have once said and which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred has been reduced to typewriting. We do not any longer try cases without having them reported. All the evidence is taken, and for the purposes of the second trial, as we now have it, the second trial is merely a review of the case on the evidence taken in the court below. Now, if we do not want to thwart the purpose of this proposal—and I at first had some prejudice against it, but upon further reflection have taken a different view—if we want to accomplish the main purpose of this proposal, we should facilitate the prompt disposition of the case, so that if a litigant has a controversy with his neighbor he can have the one good trial and the one good review and get through with the matter in a year.

Mr. WINN: Gentlemen: I quite agree with the member from Fayette that where one good trial has been obtained litigants and counsel should be satisfied, but my objection to this proposal and my reasons for favoring the proposed amendment are that sometimes, yes, many times, litigants are deprived of one good trial. I have in mind a judge who declined to vacate the bench when affidavits of prejudice were filed against him under the provisions of the statute. He persisted in sitting on the bench and deciding the cases when the parties objected to him because of his alleged prejudice.

Mr. PECK: Under this proposal you could go into the supreme court and get a writ of prohibition against him.

Mr. WINN: And yet there was no method by which that judge could be removed. Now suppose a litigant has a case of that sort and brings it before a judge where he knows the judge is biased or prejudiced. What is he to do? Must he submit his case whether or no? Some one says that is all we have in a jury case, but that is not so. In a jury case we examine every juror and want to know in advance whether or not he has prejudged the case, whether he has any opinion upon it and whether he has any bias or prejudice, but we never examine the judges, who are just common men, who sit here and hear testimony as jurors do, and who are influenced by the same considerations that influence jurors. Judges are men after all, and so it is that in many cases a good trial is not obtained. Now it will not hurry litigation to an end to provide for this trial and review as is this proposal. The member from Erie [Mr. KING] said when the subject was under debate that after a long term of experience on the bench he found to meet the witnesses face to face hurried the business rather than retarded it. Lately I had a trial in Northwestern Ohio and there were just thirty-one hundred pages of typewritten record. It cost a little more than $600 to obtain a transcript of the record for the purpose of review in the circuit court. The one who was defeated below and who finally succeeded upon review of the case was totally unable to pay any part of that. That is not an unusual occurrence. In that instance one whose rights should have prevailed and that did finally prevail, because others came to her assistance, was then unable to pay the cost of the transcript. Now that happens many times. I have known a good many cases in which litigants were unable to pay the expenses of the transcript, and so the business may be hurried along if the appeal and retrial are allowed, and besides all that it does give litigants at least one good trial.

Now I am not surprised that there are a good many that have changed their opinions, because the member from Fayette told me just before he told you that when this debate opened he was of the same opinion that I am, but he changed his mind upon the subject, and it is not surprising, therefore, that others changed their minds.

It has been urged that this in no wise injures this proposition. I said when this final vote was taken that thus far there was but one proposition to which I could not give my hearty support and that was this one. It was because I believed that the litigants of this state had been deprived of their most valuable right, the right of one fair and impartial trial. That appeal will not be asked in many cases. It is only when counsel for parties believe that the client has not been given one fair trial that he will ask by appeal a retrial upon the evidence. Otherwise he will be satisfied with the ordinary review that prevails.

Mr. FACKLER: I notice that all the speeches that have been made upon this amendment have been made by those who previously were of the same opinion which they expressed here, and I noticed from page 4 of the journal of April 10 that the men who were opposed to this proposition at that time have spoken in opposition to it today and those who at that time spoke in favor of it are still in favor of it. I do not believe that the Convention can gain anything by a further rehash, and I move the previous question on the motion to reconsider and on the amendment. I demand the yeas and nays on that question.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the vote be reconsidered by which the amendment was carried? The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. HOSKINS: May I make a statement? We have the matter mixed around here and we would like to have the chair straighten it out.

Change in Judicial System.

The PRESIDENT: An amendment offered by the gentleman from Allen was carried. The member from Hamilton moved to reconsider that action. That is the question now before the Convention. The yeas and nays have been demanded and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 38, nays 59, as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was lost.

Mr. MAUCK: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 74 strike out the words "and courts of appeals".

Mr. MAUCK: The purpose of this is to prevent the requiring of the courts of appeals to report all of their cases. Something like eighteen hundred to two thousand cases are disposed of by the circuit courts of Ohio each year. A publication of all those opinions would result in a needless multiplication of useless books. There are no reporters for those courts. There is no way provided by law for their publication and the publication depends solely upon private enterprise. I doubt whether anyone engaged in the book publishing business cares to get out all of these opinions, and therefore I suggest that that be stricken out. I entertain grave doubt whether the Constitutional Convention ought to require the supreme court to publish all of its opinions, but any one familiar with the circuit court practice knows that a large part of the business in the circuit courts goes to review and with it the testimony of the lower court. It would be absolutely nonsensical to require that the judgment of all the circuit courts be published.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAUCK: I offer another amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of section 2 add:

"No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court."

Mr. MAUCK: The supreme court has very little original jurisdiction. It is fair to assume that the purpose in giving the supreme court this original jurisdiction was for the benefit of the litigant and not for the benefit of the court. The supreme court has been laboring with congested dockets and for a number of years has required anyone seeking to invade the jurisdiction to first get the consent of the court to file his appeal. The result has been in quo warranto and mandamus and other cases in which original jurisdiction has been invoked, the court has required suitors to go to the circuit court. One result has been that in many cases brought by the attorney general he has been required to go to the circuit court of Franklin county. This has, therefore, added largely to the work of this circuit, and after all it has not put on the supreme court any considerable amount of work because cases of that kind generally wind up in the court of final resort. We have taken from the supreme court one-half or more of all its jurisdiction when we have secured a ratification of the Peck proposal, and that being so there is no longer any reason why the supreme court cannot exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it by this amendment to the constitution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after the period in line 73 and all of line 74 and insert:

"All decisions of the supreme court and courts of appeals, declarative of principles not previously adjudicated by the supreme court, shall be fully reported."

Mr. STEVENS: If you will notice after the period in line 73 is the matter concerning the reported cases, and the language in the proposal is that the decisions in all cases in the supreme court and courts of appeals shall be reported. It will be easily seen that the multiplication of reports is going to reach tremendous figures. There will be no end to it. All that is necessary is to have the decision in the cases announcing new principles of law properly adjudicated and reported and that is what this amendment seeks to do. Whenever the court of appeals announces a principle that has not been previously adjudicated by the higher court it will be the duty of the court to have that case reported. I think the amendment explains itself.

Mr. PECK: Are you not aware that an amendment striking out the courts of appeals has been adopted so that we now do not have to deal with that?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. PECK: Now who is going to determine about this?

Mr. STEVENS: The judges themselves.

Mr. PECK: How many cases are there in which there are a great many questions in which some principles, some principles new, some partially new and some old, are mixed up?

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. STEVENS: I would rather miss an occasional new principle than to have my office filled with books that contained nothing but chaff. This refers only to new principles.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would it not be simply the application in a somewhat different way of an old principle?

Mr. STEVENS: Substantially that. This has constitutional sanction and it has been the practice in the supreme court of avoiding repetition of principles adopted from time to time.

Mr. PECK: That is what the supreme courts say they have been doing.

The amendment was lost.

On motion the Convention here recessed until seven o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of Proposal No. 184.

Mr. TAGGART: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 9 after the word "of" insert "a chief justice and".

At the end of the proposal add the following:

"The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court."

Mr. TAGGART: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: At the time of the second reading of this proposal I voted against the proposal, but I am satisfied that this proposal in some form will carry at the approaching election. It is my desire that it be as efficient as it is possible to make it, and therefore I have presented the amendments just read from the desk. I presented them to the chairman of the Judiciary committee and I beg leave now to state my reasons for these amendments. The proposal as passed and as it will be adopted by the people creates at least eight courts of last resort. There is no union between those eight courts. Each court is independent and separate from every other court. There is no means of communication between the two. Under the present system of the circuit courts of the state the circuit courts meet in the fall of the year and elect a chief justice. He has supervisory power over the judges of the courts of the circuit, but he has no power to enforce any of his orders. He may assign a judge from Cleveland to Hamilton county, but if that judge does not see fit to go the chief justice has no power to make him go.

Now the amendment I suggest at the end of this is making the supervisory powers over the courts of appeals vest in the chief justice of the state. He then can supervise and direct the judges of the various courts to hold courts in any county of the state, and this will be effective and will add efficiency to the court. I know from experience that there are certain judges of circuit courts that have refused and declined to leave their own circuits even with the admonition and direction of the chief justice of the court. It is not desirable that the chief justice be elected from the courts of appeals. He should be a chief justice outside of the courts of appeals, so that a power that could be enforced would be vested in some other person. That being true, the efficiency of your court will be increased. Therefore you must have a chief justice. The chief justice now is simply a legislative office. It ought to be a constitutional office so as to conform to the provisions of this proposal. In addition to that the proposal introduced by the gentleman from Allen county provided that the chief justice of the supreme court shall supervise the judges of the courts of common pleas. Therefore it is only reasonable and rational that he would supervise the judges of the courts of appeals as well, and having this all under control he can bring these courts in direct connection with and bring them close to the people and have them under his control. In order that this chief justice should have this control he should be a constitutional officer and he should be a member of the supreme court, supervising the business of the court and of the courts of appeals and of the common pleas courts, and therefore the other amendment that I suggest is that there should be a chief justice and six judges which will constitute the supreme court. I know that this will add efficiency to this proposal. I know it will be to the great advantage of jurisprudence in this state. I am sure the tendency would be, instead of having eight courts in a state, one court deciding a matter one way and another court deciding it another way, that the chief justice by circulating these judges would bring about uniformity in jurisprudence, which is a great and desirable result to be accomplished.

Mr. PECK: I agree to this motion to amend. I have no objection to it. This matter of a chief justice has been under consideration for a long time and has been adopted and rejected by the committee two or three times. There is a great difference of opinion about it, but finally, due to the conservative feeling perhaps, it would be better to leave the court just as it is. But I have always felt that a chief justice is very desirable and I concur in the motion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Change the period in line 74 to a comma and add: "and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals."

Mr. KNIGHT: This afternoon the Convention adopted an amendment offered by the delegate from Gallia [Mr. MAUCK] striking out the words "and courts of appeals" in line 74 where it was made mandatory that all cases in the courts of appeals should be reported. However, with the adoption of that amendment, it leaves the constitution this way, that no laws, no matter how many may be adopted by the lawmaking power of the state, can force the courts of appeals to report any case because the courts have uniformly held that the question of the matter of reporting cases was entirely within the control of the judiciary department. This amendment now offered simply makes it clear that, on such terms and conditions as may seem wise to the lawmaking power, laws may be enacted for the reporting of cases, which is different from making it mandatory that all cases shall be reported. It seems to me unwise to leave it to the courts of appeals to decide whether they will report any case, and it seems to me that the lawmaking body should have the right to make provisions.

Change in Judicial System.

Mr. DOTY: I demand the previous question on the whole proposal.

The main question was ordered.

The amendment of the delegate from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] was agreed to.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 184—Mr. Peck, to submit an amendment to article IV, sections 1, 2 and 6, of the constitution.—Change in judicial system.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

SEC. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, in case of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court.

SEC. 6. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold sessions shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The courts of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and, to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction, and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its record to that court. No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decisions in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. Knight arose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce. His name being called, Mr. Knight voted "aye."

Mr. Nye arose to a question of privilege, and asked that his name be recorded on Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce. His name being called, Mr. Nye voted "aye."

Mr. COLTON: Since Proposal No. 184 was considerably changed by amendment, I move that the usual number be printed.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The next business is Proposal No. 322—Mr. Bowdle, which the secretary will read.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. BOWDLE: This matter was thoroughly discussed the other day. There was a good deal of debate and I am not inclined to add anything to what has been said. I was apprised, however, that the gentleman from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS] had asked questions in my absence as to what reason there was for this proposal. The answer is this, that the supreme court of Michigan has passed upon an effort of the legislature of Michigan to control medical expert testimony. The legislature of the state of Michigan attempted to do just what we are now empowering the legislature to do, and the supreme court of Michigan said it was unconstitutional under a constitution precisely like ours in Ohio. The difficulty seemed to be, at least as detected by the supreme court of Michigan, that any effort of the legislature of the state to do the thing that we are now seeking to empower the legislature to do, amounted to the creation of a new order of witnesses. To make that clear to those who have not studied law and whose minds have not, therefore, become narrowed as the gentleman from Highland implies our minds have become, let me say just a word. In a trial, especially a criminal trial, the state offers its witnesses and in offering its witnesses it vouches for those witnesses, that they are worthy of belief, that they are credible men. When the accused comes on with his testimony he vouches for his witnesses, that they are worthy of belief by the jury. Now, a law of the legislature of Michigan sought to create a board of experts, allowing the court to appoint experts to testify in such cases, and the supreme court held that such a law as that brings into being a special order of witnesses that is not vouched for by the state, because the state does not offer the testimony, nor by the accused, because the accused does not offer the testimony, but it brings into being a class of witnesses vouched for by the court or the judge, and the supreme court of Michigan said that is absolutely contrary to the common law, the Declaration of Independence, the constitution of the United States, Washington's Farewell Address to the Army, Plymouth Rock, Liberty Bell and all the other things that we are bound by. It is, therefore, necessary for us, if we are going to stop the scandal of high priced expert witnesses paid for by the state in given cases, to free the hands of the legislature and allow the legislature to pass just such an excellent act as the legislature attempted to pass in the state of Michigan. Of course, even in the state of Michigan there was no effort on the part of the legislature to prevent the accused from bringing on such expert testimony as he cared to bring on, but the act accomplished this good at least, that it allowed the twelve jurors the satisfaction of hearing men who had been appointed by the court and who were unbiased, men who had no interest in the money of either side, and allowed the satisfaction to the jury of hearing men who have no interest in the case other than to tell the truth.

Regulating Expert Testimony in Criminal Trials.

Mr. ANDERSON: Would it not clarify this case to say where the accused had a number of experts and the state had a number and the jury could not decide, that the court might appoint a certain number to clarify the situation?

Mr. BOWDLE: Very well stated, and that is the reason for this proposal. Without further discussion I am willing to leave to the Convention this proposal. It is an effort to get ahead in the administration of the criminal law.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move to amend Proposal No. 322 as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "criminal" and insert the word "all."

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: No one realizes the necessity of the control of expert witnesses more than I do. I have had considerable experience with experts in criminal cases and I wish to confess that in criminal cases or any other cases the expert witness is hired to pettifog the case just like a lawyer, and if we allow them to testify freely in criminal cases and allow both sides to have the unrestrained use of experts where there is both a civil and a criminal case growing out of the same matter we would have a different kind of testimony in each of the two cases. I think if we allow them in one case we ought to allow them in all.

Mr. ANDERSON: The lawyers that Dr. Brown mentioned must have been the kind of lawyers he read law with. But let me direct your attention to this amendment to the amendment. Let us see the situation. Say there is a question of who signed a note or check for a good many thousand dollars. If Mr. Bowdle will permit me I will try to give an example. Say Mr. Bowdle is notified by the bank that a certain note is due for several thousand dollars. Mr. Bowdle claims he didn't sign the note. What is the question to be decided? Whether or not that is his signature. Now the court under Dr. Brown's amendment could appoint two experts on handwriting, the testimony of those experts would be conclusive and those two experts would end the case one way or the other. I am only using this as an illustration of what could be done in civil cases, and many cases where experts are used in civil cases will come to your mind. We threshed this amendment out and it was overwhelmingly defeated. It seems to me extremely dangerous to have this rule prevail in civil cases, and therefore I move that the Brown amendment be tabled.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. HOSKINS: Just a word on this proposition and to follow up the argument of the gentleman from Mahoning on the amendment to eliminate this from civil cases on which you just voted and for which I voted. I wanted to vote to eliminate the entire matter from the constitution. I do not think it is a constitutional matter. Suppose Mr. Bowdle is charged with forgery. Are you going to allow the court to appoint two experts to say whether or not that is his signature on the note? The main argument of the gentleman from Mahoning would apply in a criminal case as in a civil case. I raised this question the other day in the absence of the proponent of this proposal for the reason I did not see any necessity for the adoption of a matter of this kind. It doesn't do anything except to authorize the legislature to pass legislation of a certain character which I am thoroughly convinced there is nothing in the constitution now to prevent them from doing, and it seems to me that it is a proposition that is not necessary to be brought up to the people.

Mr. DWYER: I believe as the gentleman from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS] suggests, that the law is ample to authorize the court to appoint experts in all matters, whether civil or criminal. I know during my term on the bench I had experts in many cases, especially on one where a man was accused of poisoning his wife. He was tried for murder in the first degree and the embalming fluid in which she was embalmed contained some of the same poison he was accused of having administered to her. I had some of the very best experts in Ohio in that case. I remember I had Dr. Reed, of Cincinnati, one of the most prominent men in the whole state. These witnesses were called. We recognized our power to call them as experts to testify in the case and they did testify, and no one said that we didn't have the power. I think the court has the power and can exercise it whenever it desires.

Mr. BOWDLE: It cannot be that Judge Dwyer wants the Convention to understand that a court today in Ohio in a criminal case where the defense is insanity can call experts and foist those experts with their testimony upon the accused and upon the jury. There is no such power. Gentlemen, the great defect in our administration of justice in the matter of crime is that the court seems to have lost control of the cases. The great thing in English jurisprudence, especially as relating to the criminal side of it, is that the courts have control of the cases. You never hear of any scandals surrounding the introduction of expert testimony in a criminal case in England, and the reason is that the courts have just the control over experts that we seek to give the courts here through the process that I have suggested.

Mr. DWYER: Do you claim the courts have not the power under the present law to call experts in all cases that they desire to?

Mr. BOWDLE: I never heard of such a thing in the state of Ohio or any other American commonwealth. The only effort made to do that was in Michigan and Oklahoma and the courts declared it unconstitutional. Neither party, plaintiff nor defendant, in Ohio or elsewhere, has power to exclude such witnesses as a party thinks beneficial, and a party cannot have foisted on him a class of witnesses that he does not vouch for. I am absolutely certain under our present constitution that cannot be done.

Mr. DWYER: I have done it and I have seen it done in other courts.

Regulating Expert Testimony in Criminal Trials.

Mr. BOWDLE: But were not those witnesses called by the prosecuting attorney?

Mr. DWYER: Certainly.

Mr. BOWDLE: Exactly so, and that is the distinction. I desire the Convention to bear in mind that I would call them for the defense, just as well for the defense as for the prosecution, and as far as insanity is concerned, anybody is an expert in insanity. I can now call here anybody as an expert on insanity.

Mr. HARTER, of Huron: Does this preclude the plaintiff from calling expert testimony?

Mr. BOWDLE: No, sir; it does not preclude anything of that sort. It does not commit the legislature to any scheme of things. This is just the permission to the legislature to take up this matter and investigate it and pass some sort of reasonable provision.

Mr. HALFHILL: Was it your idea that a law might be passed whereby a corps of expert witnesses might be brought into being and they could arrange as to these matters?

Mr. BOWDLE: That is somewhat my idea, but that is not wrapped up in the words used. This power we give the legislature does not commit us or them to any kind of process. They may adopt the Michigan scheme, and the Michigan scheme did not preclude the parties from introducing such expert testimony as they might desire.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would this proposal of yours lead to putting it into the hands of the court to determine who these expert witnesses for the defendant should be?

Mr. BOWDLE: It might lead to that. It would lead to the court appointing some expert, but that would not be to the exclusion of those that the defendant wished. In case he was not satisfied with such experts he might call those that he deemed proper. And I might say that this proposition is framed because of the original demand in the medical literature of the country and the demand from medical societies of all sorts for just such a provision.

Mr. PECK: Is that an unusual practice?

Mr. BOWDLE: Yes.

Mr. WINN: Before we recessed for dinner, in the discussion of some case you said that half, or more of the witnesses who appeared in the trials are liars. Are you of the opinion that that term will apply to experts, especially medical experts?

Mr. BOWDLE: I say the ordinary medical expert purchased by a fat pocketbook is not worthy of belief, and I want to cross-examine him with great care before I accept him as a witness at all. He is a special pleader seated in the witness box.

Mr. HALFHILL: I believe that this proposal before us is absolutely unnecessary under the present constitution. I have not heard any argument advanced here at all that could not be met by a law which would be perfectly competent to be passed under the existing constitution; that is to say, the legislature prescribes all rules of evidence so far as competency of evidence is concerned. The legislature now says on this great question of reputation and on the question of whom shall testify in a suit against the administrator and the situation is such that the legislature can define rules as they apply to expert witnesses or expert testimony in criminal trials or anywhere else. I maintain if it is the intention, as I heard it by the proponent to a question put to him, to create a board which will pass upon the questions of fact, that that would plainly be contravention of many other provisions of the constitution, because the jury passes upon the questions of fact, and if you are going to create a board which is suggested here you usurp the province of the jury. Now it is true that expert witnesses testify to certain conclusions and to a certain extent each expert tells what his opinion is, and the reasons for his opinion. I submit that all of the argument that has been advanced here for the necessity of this thing falls under existing power.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is not this the fact, that as the constitution now stands in any criminal case the accused can call any witness he pleases and the prosecuting attorney may do the same? Do you mean to say that under our constitution the court or any one else can say to this, that or the other person, "You can be a witness in this case?"

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not understand that is the duty of the court.

Mr. ANDERSON: The prosecuting attorney calls any witness he pleases and the state pays?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: The accused can call anyone as an expert that he chooses?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Under the present constitution the court as such can not appoint any person to testify?

Mr. HALFHILL: And the court ought not to have authority to appoint a board, and I understand that the proponent says certain eminent medical gentlemen have suggested that. I know that is true. It has been suggested by the American Medical Association that there ought to be a board appointed for the purpose of shutting off the employment of expert witnesses, and when you create that board for the purpose of shutting off the employment of expert witnesses then you have created something extra constitutional, over and above and beyond the jury, and you are piling on the jury, which is bound to decide upon the evidence, evidence of a creative board, and that is in direct conflict with other provisions of the constitution.

Mr. PECK: You don't find anything of that kind here.

Mr. HALFHILL: I find that in the argument for the defense.

Mr. PECK: I am speaking of the language of the proposal.

Mr. HALFHILL: Now another question, and I want to preface it by a statement. As I understand it the practice in England is very reasonable. If a party wants an expert witness in either a civil or a criminal case he applies to the court. He says, "I would like to have two or three doctors"—or experts on penmanship, or this, that or the other thing—"and I would like to have the court designate the persons who will testify on the matter." The court makes the order designating an expert or experts, and they are called on by the party. Is not that good practice? It furnishes experts who are not under suspicion all of the time of being tampered with by the party calling them. Would you contend for a moment that that power does not exist and that the legislature could not provide for it now?

Mr. PECK: I rather think they could.

Mr. HALFHILL: Do you not admit that they could do it?

Mr. PECK: We passed a proposal the other day which provides that laws may be passed prescribing the rules and regulations for the conduct of business, and I think under that the legislature might act.

Mr. HALFHILL: I think we have ample power to do this under the existing constitution. That is why I object to this.

Mr. STAMM: In the Richeson case did the governor or the court appoint experts?

Mr. HALFHILL: I am unable to answer that question because, notwithstanding the declaration that I am a criminal lawyer, I do not know much about it in this state or in any other state.

Mr. STAMM: Under the present constitution can an expert be examined in insanity cases that is appointed by the court?

Mr. HALFHILL: My contention is that the legislature under existing circumstances has a perfect right to prescribe such a rule and if such a rule is not in existence the power is here to create it.

Mr. STAMM: Is it done in Ohio?

Mr. HALFHILL: It has been by some courts.

Mr. STAMM: Has there not been a demand for years by the medical profession to have it done, and isn't it a fact that the legislature hasn't done it?

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not know whether the legislature has done it or not.

Mr. STAMM: For fifteen years the medical profession has fought for this and no attention has been paid to them.

Mr. HALFHILL: Certainly there is not any rule laid down in the proposal to meet the suggestion you make.

Mr. STAMM: Could it not be put in the constitution so that every one will know it can and ought to be done?

Mr. NORRIS: What has the medical profession to do with it?

Mr. HALFHILL: Of course, the medical profession has nothing to do with the trial of a criminal case, any more than they would be called as expert witnesses, and while they may have their own ideas how they would like to be called or upon whose part, I do not know that it would assist the medical profession. I understand that they recently tried to get a national board of health, very much to the disgust of the Christian Science people.

Mr. CASSIDY: I demand the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the passage of the proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 74, nays 32, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Bowdle,	Cordes,
Antrim,	Brown, Highland,	Crosser,
Baum,	Cassidy,	Davio,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 322—Mr. Bowdle. To submit an amendment by adding section 39 to article II, of the constitution.—Regulating expert testimony in criminal trials.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

The PRESIDENT; Proposal No. 64, Mr. Miller, of Fairfield, is next.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. MILLER, of Fairfield: I do not think it is necessary for me to go into any extended argument for the passage of this proposal. I believe that with this body of men in this day, when conservation congresses are being held at the call of the president and with the assistance of the governors, and when it is considered that this proposal reaches to all corners of the state of Ohio and appeals to every man who builds a home and to every man who burns electric lights or who has to supply food in the future, no argument is needed to convince them of the necessity of adopting this proposal. We have no right to waste our natural resources and thereby deprive the people of the future of that which belongs to them. I have an amendment to offer and I understand that there will be one or two others. I leave this with you and hope you will see the necessity for its passage.

Mr. LEETE: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Conservation of Natural Resources.

In line 10 after the word "including" insert: "streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and".

And in line 11, after the second "of", insert: "drainage and".

And in line 13, strike out the words "all minerals" and insert in lieu thereof the words "coal, oil, gas and all other minerals."

Mr. LEETE: Mr. President and Members of the Convention: I think these amendments are necessary. These are the same words that were stricken from the original proposal as it was originally written. After consulting with a number of the best attorneys here I find it is their unanimous opinion that the words "streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands" should be inserted after the word "inclusive". Further, in line 11, after the second "of," insert "drainage and". In line 13 strike out the words "all minerals" and insert in lieu thereof the words "coal, oil, gas and other minerals."

In the proposal, as we have it here, it reads "Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempt in whole or in part from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including the development and regulation of water power and the formation of conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing all minerals." This amendment in line ten would change the reading as follows: "Also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands, and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts." That will, beyond question, give the power to the state to control the drainage problems of the state, especially swamp districts where several counties are involved. There the state can control and govern the drainage system. Furthermore, the last amendment is made necessary by the passing of the Worthington amendment, Proposal No. 170. I believe in section 9 authority is conferred for the enactment of laws providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes on the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals. So it is necessary for this proposal to have the same language. I hope this amendment will pass and I think it strengthens the proposal very much.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEYER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 9 after the word "purpose" insert "by the state or counties".

Mr. BEYER: When we had this proposal before us on second reading we were trying to go too fast. We were in too much of a hurry. We granted the right to the state to have the poor worn-out land planted into forest reserves as state reservations, but we did not give the counties the right to do so. Now I read from the official report of the department of agriculture about some of our counties. Adams county, for instance, has 6,110 acres of worn-out land and 20,000 acres of waste land. Gallia has 10,000 acres of worn-out land and 20,000 acres of waste land. Hocking has 14,000 acres of worn-out land and 20,000 acres of waste land.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: What are you reading from?

Mr. BEYER: From a report of the department of agriculture of the state of Ohio.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you not think this would result in a conflict as to forestry between the states and the counties, giving to both the state and the counties power to do the same thing?

Mr. BEYER: I understand the state has the paramount authority, but if the state does not do it then the counties can.

Mr. LAMPSON: You propose to amend it so as to give both the state and the counties a right which will necessarily result in a conflict of authority.

Mr. BEYER: No, sir; but if the state does not take hold of this matter and any county does want to take hold of it, it seems to me that the county should have the right. Indeed, I think the county should have the first right.

Mr. LAMPSON: But suppose the state wants to control the whole system. We are providing a system of conservation to be under the control of the state, and under your amendment you would make it possible for a system of conservation under the control of each county.

Mr. BEYER: I understand that it can be done, but the county should have the right. If the state will replant the land and maintain it forty years, the state will get the timber, sell it and distribute the money for the benefit of the whole state, and the rich counties would have the benefit and the poor counties would have to pay taxes all through the forty years and get nothing from their lands. This is done in other states. The state of New York has a provision in this direction and the state of Pennsylvania has such a law. I have the figures and reports here from Harrisburg and they show that they have fine young forests planted by counties.

Mr. LAMPSON: Are the counties allowed to do that over there?

Mr. BEYER: Yes.

Mr. LAMPSON: Independent of the state?

Mr. BEYER: The county has the first right over there and then the state.

Mr. ANDERSON: Your idea is wherever a county wants to go into the timber-raising business, it as a unit could do so?

Mr. BEYER: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Entirely independent of the state or any other counties?

Mr. BEYER: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is it not true that the best lands for this purpose are the poorest lands and the counties would have to tax themselves to go into the business?

Mr. BEYER: Yes.

Mr. LAMPSON: The poorest county would be the least able to tax itself?

Mr. BEYER: Yes.

Conservation of Natural Resources—Contempt Proceedings and Injunctions.

Mr. LAMPSON: Wouldn't that put the burden on them?

Mr. BEYER: Yes; but there would be an income from it finally.

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, in the third generation.

Mr. BEYER: It could not do any harm that I see.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would it not cause an extra burden to be upon the poorest counties of the state and the counties least able to expend a large amount of money?

Mr. BEYER: They are not forced to do it. They only have the right. If they don't want to do it the state can do it, but we should not take the right from the counties. We should not make them give their land to the state and get nothing themselves. I hope the majority will consider this question and pass it.

Mr. HARBARGER: I move that this amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 109, nays 1, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Halfhill,	Norris,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 64—Mr. Miller, of Fairfield. To submit an amendment by adding section 36 to article II, of the constitution.—Conservation of natural resources.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Proposal No. 134—Mr. Halenkamp, was read the third time.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 94, nays 9, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 134—Mr. Halenkamp. To submit an amendment by adding section 21 to article IV, of the constitution.—Contempt proceedings and injunctions.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the Contempt Proceedings and Injunctions—Abolishing Prison Contract Labor.

constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 21. Laws may be passed, prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the state, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to punish for contempt. No order of injunction shall issue in any controversy involving the employment of labor, except to preserve physical property from injury or destruction; and all persons charged in contempt proceedings with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall, upon demand, be granted a trial by jury as in criminal cases.

The PRESIDENT: The next is Proposal No. 34, by Mr. Thomas.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. STILWELL: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 17 change the period to a semi-colon and add the words: "and the products of such labor disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof shall not be marked 'prison made.'"

Mr. STILWELL: Just a word of explanation. It was not the intention of the framers of this proposal that in the interchange of the products of prison labor between the several state institutions the products should be marked "prison made," and this simply eliminates that objectionable feature.

Mr. ELSON: I am not quite sure that I understand you. Do you mean it would eliminate these from the products of the reformatory?

Mr. STILWELL: It eliminates the marking of the goods "prison-made" when there is an interchange between the institutions of the state.

Mr. ELSON: You mean where goods are made, in one public institution and are sent to another institution for use?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: I do not like the wording "to the state or any political subdivision thereof". Would it not be better to have it any public institution, or is it broad enough to cover a specific case like that which confronted the institution with which I happened to be connected two years ago? The printing of all the bulletins and catalogues for the State University was the matter involved. I think two years ago that was intended to be done at the Mansfield Reformatory, and of course there was a contract between the trustees of one institution, namely, the State University, and the trustees and board of managers of the other state institution, the Mansfield Reformatory, by which they printed these bulletins and furnished all the material and did all the work on state account, but the State University and its board of trustees paid for the matter. Now, the practical question is this: Is this proposal, even with this amendment, such that it is certain that if the lawmaking power of this state should reenact such a law in the future it is clear that the catalogues and bulletins, amounting into thousands of dollars each year, that are sent to the young men and women seeking admission to the university or inquiring about it—and the same would be true with reference to the institution with which the gentleman from Athens is connected—is it clear that this proposal with this amendment would not require all of those catalogues sent out to those people wanting to enter college to be marked "prison made" on the cover? If there is any doubt about that I do not think any proposal should be adopted that will make it mandatory to put such words as that on literature sent out from the colleges. Here this proposal says "no institution owned or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof"—I would prefer to have inserted after the word "thereof" "or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof."

Mr. STILWELL: That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. KNIGHT: It was an oversight on my part that I did not call attention to that before.

The PRESIDENT: Is this an amendment or a substitute.

Mr. STILWELL: A substitute, but I accept it.

The amendment of Mr. Stilwell with this amendment was then read as follows:

In line 17 change the period to a semi-colon and add the words: "and the products of such labor disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof shall not be marked 'prison made.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAND: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 10 strike out the word "sold" and the comma following it.

Mr. McCLELLAND: I want to call attention to the title of this proposal, "Abolishing prison contract labor." It not only does that, however, but a good deal more. That will prohibit the state selling any prison-made goods in the state outside of selling them to other state institutions or the different subdivisions thereof. The state cannot sell it in the open market no matter what surplus may be made or what the laws may be otherwise. You will notice if this were a law and had such a title and such contents, every court in the state would pronounce it unconstitutional and this Convention cannot afford to go before the voters of the state with a title which is so utterly misleading in regard to this proposal. The title specifies that it is to abolish contract prison labor. We are all in favor of that—every one of us. No one will object to abolishing contract prison labor, but if the state in the manufacture of certain goods should overstock, this absolutely prohibits that overstock of goods being sold in the open market under any consideration whatever.

Then the next sentence is "contracted". So that it simply on the face of it seems to be out of harmony with that just given "and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory either within or without the state of Ohio shall not be sold within this state unless the same is conspicuously marked "prison made." That is placed there, no doubt, to avoid having this declared unconstitutional, under the interstate commerce provision of the United States constitution, but if this word "sold" were stricken out very little advantage would result in the manufacture in our penal institutions and it would avoid that seeming conflict as well as avoid the difficulty which results in the penal institutions from occasional overstocking of goods. It would avoid the construction which would be necessarily placed on that succeeding sentence which any court or lawyer would say is an attempt to dodge the interstate commerce provisions of the United States constitution. Therefore, it seems to me desirous, in the interest of the proposal and in the interest of our people and of the structure of the proposal, that that word "sold" after the comma should be stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS: The whole object of the proposal would be destroyed if this amendment were agreed to. The object of this proposal is to abolish contract prison labor and protect the citizens and workers of the state against the competition of prison labor in the open market. The amount sold in the state is not one-tenth—probably far less than that—of one per cent of the goods that are manufactured in the state, but the fact is where contract prison labor is used it is used in one or two lines of business and drives from those lines of business everybody else in the state. New York has had this in its constitution since 1894 and has worked it out to the entire satisfaction of that state. The prisoners are worked for state use, supplying other state institutions, and the thing has worked out admirably and to the satisfaction of everybody and we want the same thing to be put in vogue here. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. FESS: I was absent when this was discussed on second reading and I would like to have an interpretation of one line. It seems to me that it is in contravention of the constitution of the United States. Suppose goods were made in Elmira, New York, in the reformatory there. Do we say that they cannot be sold in this state? I do not think we have any authority to do that.

Mr. THOMAS: Under the present status of United States law we would not have the right here to say that, but a bill has passed the national house of representatives prescribing that any convict-made goods that are being sent from one state to another shall be subject to the laws of that state. I have a letter from the chairman of the National Consumers League which states that he expects the bill to pass in the near future, and if that bill passes this provision in our constitution will become applicable.

Mr. KNIGHT: Then the constitutionality of this clause depends upon whether there is an act of congress?

Mr. THOMAS: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: Unless congress enacts that law this is not constitutional, and if congress afterwards repeals that law our provision will become unconstitutional?

Mr. THOMAS: It hardly goes that far.

Mr. KNIGHT: One other question: It was stated a moment ago by the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr.

THOMAS] that this was substantially the provision of the New York constitution. Is there anything in the New York constitution touching the subject of labeling goods "prison made"?

Mr. THOMAS: No, but there is in the New York law.

Mr. KNIGHT: Then that is not derived from the New York constitution?

Mr. THOMAS: No.

Mr. COLTON: There is no class of proposals against which I dislike to cast my vote more than the proposals introduced by the labor delegates. I concede to them earnestness of purpose in doing that which they think is best for the working men. With that I am in hearty sympathy, but I was compelled to vote against this proposal on its other reading and I shall vote against it again. It appears to accomplish two things:

1. It forbids the use of contract prison labor.
2. It avoids the competition of convict labor by providing that the goods must be branded "prison made."

I agree with the gentleman from Athens that the value resulting from all this is too small to be made the subject of constitutional enactment. There are twelve hundred thousand voters and in the penal institutions there are two thousand, so that there is about one man in six hundred working in the penal institutions of the state. I submit that the product of one in six hundred is too small a matter to be taken care of by a constitutional amendment.

Mr. THOMAS: Suppose these six hundred were engaged in one industry?

Mr. COLTON: While the supposition is not true I still say the same thing. There is no use of having a big stick to kill a flea.

Mr. THOMAS: Well, suppose you had been trying for twenty years to kill the flea?

Mr. COLTON: We have a law prohibiting convict labor. A constitutional provision is no more forcible than that?

Mr. KRAMER: I would like to vote for this, but I am afraid of the first part of the proposal as against the latter part. The first part absolutely forbids the sale and then the second part comes along and says that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing for the sale of goods to the state or any political subdivision thereof. I can readily see if this constitutional provision is adopted that the inmates of the penal institutions will be absolutely forbidden from engaging in any industry. That is what is bothering me. It says "unless laws are passed."

Mr. THOMAS: The laws are on the books now.

Mr. KRAMER: There is another thing that bothers me. In Richland county we have the finest shale in the state of Ohio and we have eight or nine hundred men that ought to be engaged in making brick for the purpose of making good roads. I cannot see how that can be done. They cannot be sold. If they cannot be farmed out and if they cannot be contracted how can the reformatory at Mansfield make bricks and give them to any contractor or sell them to any contractor or contract with any contractor for the use of those bricks? If I could see any way under this provision for the good roads system to go forward I would support it. Does Abolishing Prison Contract Labor—Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

the state of New York make good roads with their prisoners?

Mr. THOMAS: They use them in manufacturing school desks.

Mr. KRAMER: Can they make good roads?

Mr. THOMAS: Yes.

Mr. KRAMER: Do they?

Mr. THOMAS: They do to a certain extent.

Mr. KRAMER: Well, here is a gentleman who says he knows they do not.

Mr. THOMAS: This provision is word for word as in the constitution of New York with the exception of the marking, "prison made".

Mr. KRAMER: Well, what I can't understand is that they have a provision absolutely forbidding the sale or the giving away in the first part and then in the latter part it says it shall not be construed to prevent the passage of laws allowing that.

Mr. KING: Did you read that exactly right?

Mr. KRAMER: It says in the tenth line "or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out," etc.

Mr. KING: The prohibition is on the working, not on the goods.

Mr. KRAMER: If a man cannot work at making bricks, that is what I object to. It says positively here it shall not be sold.

Mr. KING: You cannot find that in the provision.

Mr. KRAMER: Let us read it:

No person in any such penal institution or reformatory shall be required or allowed to work while under sentence thereto at any trade, industry, or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory, either within or without the state of Ohio, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made".

Mr. LEETE: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the passage of the proposal.

Proposal No. 34.—Mr. Thomas. To submit an amendment by adding section 41 to article II, of the constitution.—Abolishing prison contract labor.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory shall be required or allowed while under sentence thereto to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory either within or without the state of Ohio shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made". Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political sub-division thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof; and the products of such labor disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof, or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof shall not be marked "prison made".

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Proposal No. 93—Mr. Earnhart, was read the third time.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer an amendment. The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all of the proposal after the word "first" where the same occurs in line 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

"and thereafter in each year at the times provided by law for reports from state banks, submit to the superintendent of banks and banking a sworn statement in detail showing that they have a paid in and unimpaired capital of at least $10,000.00, and that they are worth in the aggregate, above all liabilities, not less than $50,000.00, in addition to the $10,000.00 paid in capital. And the superintendent of banks and banking is authorized to make the necessary examinations for the purpose of verifying the correctness of such statements, and if found incorrect he may cause the business of the parties so offending to be discontinued."

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I think this is a very proper amendment. Many of the strong, safe private banks in the state are doing just exactly what this amendment provides for. These banks have adopted certain rules and maintain certain policies and this would not inconvenience any private banks at all, but only afford means whereby the state will prevent irresponsible persons from going into the banking business. Now with this proposal and the other provisions of the law by which we provide for supervision by the state banking department, it seems to me that we have not only protected the depositors, but the good banks of the state as well, and my interest is entirely in the state banks. I do not want to impose impossibilities on the state banks and I hope this amendment will prevail.

Mr. LAMPSON: I am unable to understand by what authority the state can proceed to inspect private business. The United States never makes rules for an inspection of private banks. It would be an infringement upon their constitutional right. I think that we have as much right to say that a dry-goods merchant should not use the term "dry-goods store" and place it over his place of business unless he at first submitted to certain inspection as to say that a man engaged in the private banking business must submit to an inspection before he uses the word "bank" or "banking institution." I think we are undertaking to do something that we have no authority to do if we attempt to pass this amendment. If we keep on, after a while the individual will have no rights at all. I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 12 after the word "shares" strike out the remainder of line 12 and all of lines 13 to 17 inclusive."

Mr. LAMPSON: That strikes out all after the period in line 12.

Mr. ELSON: I fully agree with Mr. Miller that there is no disposition on the part of the Convention to annoy the private banks. It is true that many private bankers are perfectly honorable and responsible men and there is no intention to annoy them, but the idea is to get at the business of the private banks. In answer to Mr. Lampson I would say that there is a great deal of difference between a private bank and a dry-goods merchant. The private banker calls upon the people for deposits of their money. Why should such a thing be permitted unless there is some sort of notice taken of it by the state? We do not permit the medicine vender under the pure-food act to sell what he pleases and make whatever claims he chooses as to the effect of taking his medicine. I believe the individual ought to be protected by this examination. Under our present laws no examination whatever can be had of the private banks and if the people are foolish enough to put their money in them they run the risk of losing. I believe they should be protected and that every institution of that sort ought to be under state supervision. I am perfectly willing for my part to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Crawford, but as to the amendment of Mr. Lampson I hope it will be voted down and the other amendment adopted.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you not know that under the amendment offered by the delegate from Crawford [Mr. MILLER] a private banker would have to have a larger capital than is now required by a national bank? There would necessarily have to be $60,000, whereas any five men can organize a national bank with $25,000 capital.

Mr. WOODS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the amendment add: "provided, however, laws may be passed to further regulate private banks or the use of the words "bank", "banker", or "banking".

Mr. WOODS: Gentlemen of the Convention: I only want to say a few words. I have talked about this since it first came up. I have no interest in this except what I think is best for the people.

We have three kinds of banks:

National banks, organized under the laws of the United States.

State banks, organized under the laws of the state. Those banks are subject to inspection and regulation of national and state officers.

Private banks.

Now, I do not believe that I need to argue to these one hundred and nineteen men that we should regulate and protect the public as against persons that hold themselves out and ask the public to leave their money with them. I do not care who goes into that sort of business, in my judgment they should be subject to the laws of the state regulating that business. We protect the public in so doing. I do not believe that half the people of the state of Ohio ever stopped to think or know that there is a difference in banking between state banks and private banks. For instance, I think it is perfectly ridiculous that the state of Ohio in the year 1912 should allow me when I may not be worth two cents to have an office on a main street and a sign up "Farmer's Bank" or "Woods' Bank" or any other person's name similarly fixed, and thus try to get the people to come in and leave their money. I think that is all wrong. All I want is to have these banks subject to state regulation, and I think this Convention ought to do it. I know the private bankers don't want it, but nobody wants his own business regulated. It is like paying taxes—let the other fellow do it. I believe we should do something here. I believe we ought to say in this constitution that the general assembly shall have the right to regulate this matter. Now, if the bank is right, it is not afraid of regulation. I do not want to hurt any private banker, but if somebody is doing a private banking business and is not good, I do want to hurt him. We all want to hurt that sort of a fellow and under the laws now it is a great question. We tried to do it in the general assembly when we passed a state bank inspection bill. We tried to figure out some way that we could regulate private banks. We came to the conclusion that we did not have a right to do it without authority in the constitution. Now when I put this amendment in this proposal the other time the amendment didn't go far. It does not put out of business any private banker, but simply says if he wants to use the word "bank" or "banker" he must submit to an inspection and regulation. If they don't want to submit to an inspection and regulation they can keep on doing the banking business, but they can not use those words. That amendment didn't go as far as it ought to go to protect the people. I have been up against this proposition in a legislative body before. I was here once before when we tried to take care of those private bankers in a small way, and we could not touch that proposition without stirring up a hornets' nest, and when this went in we did stir up a hornets' nest and the private bankers are asking that it be taken out. I do not like the amendment of the gentleman from Crawford because there are things in it that ought not to be in the constitution. If you are going to adopt Mr. Miller's amendment you ought to adopt the amendment I sent up to the desk, which simply provides that the general assembly may further regulate bankers or anybody else using the word "bank" or "bankers." That cannot hurt anything. Do you think that the general assembly of the state of Ohio is going to put private banks out of business? The state banks simply stood up and hallooed when we passed the Thomas bank inspection bill. You would have thought we were going to put out of business all of the state banks. Yet it was a good thing for them as well as for the people of the state, and the private bankers, after they got to working under the regulation, found out it was a good thing for them. I would not for a minute stand on this floor and ask you to put the private banks out of business, because I know there are as many private bankers as there are state and national bankers, and I say anybody who is advertising himself to the world as a banker ought to submit himself to regulation and examination, and I insist that the general assembly should have the right to pass laws for inspection and regulation.

Mr. KING: I want to ask Mr. Woods if the last two lines of the proposal as reported back are not substantially what he has in his amendment?

Mr. WOODS: Yes.

Mr. KING: Then in the interest of phraseology, if the Miller amendment is voted down, it would be in better shape, would it not?

Mr. LAMPSON: Does the gentleman not know that in a great many country places, back ten miles or more from the cities, there are merchants who do a little banking business for the accommodation of the community and who would be put out of business by this?

Mr. WOODS: They would not be put out under this amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to speak for a moment to the amendment of the gentleman from Crawford [Mr. MILLER].

In the first place, it makes a constitutional officer of the superintendent of banking. He is now purely a legislative officer, absolutely unknown to the constitution, and yet it proposes to insert him in the constitution, and, therefore, the legislature could not abolish the office of the superintendent of banks. Then it puts private concerns out of the right to use the word "banker" and also from the right to do business. All the original proposal undertook to do was to forbid the use of the word "bank" or "banker," and this amendment forbids the carrying on of any business like a banking business. Not only forbids the use of the name, but stops the business. This is pure legislation.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: Would that not apply to Mr. Wood's amendment as well?

Mr. KNIGHT: I think that the purpose of both the proposal and amendment can be accomplished by striking out one word from the present proposal instead of adding anything, and that would be to strike out the word "first" in line 16. Doing that accomplishes in principle everything which is undertaken by both the amendments of the gentleman from Crawford and the gentleman, from Medina, because it provides then that they cannot use the term "bank" or "banker" unless they shall submit to an inspection and examination and regulation as is now or may be hereafter provided by law. The only thing it does not do is to provide the minimum capital stock or the minimum of reserve, and it seems to me it accomplishes all that is undertaken by this much larger number of words and that it is preferable. If it is in order I move that both the pending amendments be tabled.

Mr. LAMPSON: I desire a yea and nay vote on my amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT: I move that the amendment of the gentleman from Medina and that of the gentleman from Crawford be laid upon the table.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Before that motion is made may I make a statement?

The PRESIDENT: It is not in order except by unanimous consent.

By unanimous consent the gentleman was allowed to make a statement.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: This amendment is what the private banks of Ohio have asked.

Mr. WINN: Where do you get that information?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: From their organization.

Mr. WINN: Where do you get your information?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: From the private bankers in the Convention and they have handed this amendment to me.

Mr. WINN: Who handed you the amendment? Was it Mr. Jones, a member of the Convention?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Mr. Harter was one. Under the proposal in the book the small banks cannot make the loans that they are required to make and they have asked for this amendment to be substituted for the one in the book.

The motion to table the amendments offered by the delegate from Medina and the delegate from Crawford was carried.

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

Mr. LAMPSON: Now I demand the yeas and nays upon my amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON: Before that I want to ask Mr. Lampson a question. If your amendment carries will it permit any private banks using the word "bank" to go without inspection?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes. It leaves the proposal as originally reported by the committee, simply making a double liability against the bank.

Mr. ANDERSON: I want to give an example to the Convention of what happened in Youngstown since this Convention has been in session. The highest-priced property in Youngstown is along Federal street, where the property is worth $5,000 to $6,000 a foot. The Commercial National Bank, which did business in a building for years and years, moved out to other quarters. A firm or a few men came in there and put up the word "bank." Hundreds and hundreds of our citizens deposited their money in that place because it was centrally located and a big building and well advertised and because it had the word "bank." What was the result? They lost every penny. These people would not have put their money in there but for the word "bank." Now we passed the blue-sky proposal and why? To protect the citizens of Ohio against buying stocks that were worthless, and yet now, apparently, you refuse to protect the people against depositing their money in a bank that is worthless—the same kind of advertisement, the same thing on the window, and people hunting a bank to put their money in where it will be kept safely. It is a poor man who deposits his money. The rich man invests his money and he knows where to put it.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you not think it would increase the credit of that bank to have it reported that it was investigated and that the state certified to its soundness?

Mr. ANDERSON: I do not know whether the state would certify to its soundness or not. If that is true of a bank of this description it is doubly true of every other kind of bank.

Mr. LAMPSON: What authority has the state to be giving a certificate of soundness to a private banker unincorporated?

Mr. ANDERSON: What right had we to protect the people against buying worthless stock as we did in the blue-sky proposal?

Mr. LAMPSON: I say you increase the danger by giving a certificate of soundness to the kind of bank you are describing.

Mr. ANDERSON: The point I am making is this: that a place without inspection and without reasonable regulation and without laws passed by the legislature to protect depositors, has no right to use the word "bank." I apprehend that those people who deposit their money in a place of that kind will not know whether it has been inspected by the state or not, but will deposit because the word "bank" is on the window, and if the Convention has a right to prohibit such person from using that word, which means so much to the poor man, who has little money to deposit, the state ought certainly to do it.

Mr. LAMPSON: And then when you drive that sort of a concern out of business would not that very kind of bank that you describe change to a trust company or something similar?

The PRESIDENT: The time of the member has expired.

Mr. MAUCK: I have a hundred and forty-three reasons for objecting to private individuals using the word "bank", having recently lost that many dollars in that sort of an institution. It doesn't satisfy me at all that I am assured by the member from Ashtabula that the proposed regulation of these private institutions infringes some of the rights of the operators. The restrictions proposed by all of these amendments are in my judgment entirely unconstitutional. I shall offer an amendment to insert a period after the word "state" in line 15 and strike out all the remaining portion of the paragraph and the proposal, so that no man or combination of men may use the word "bank" or "banker" in connection with their institution unless it be incorporated under the laws of this state or of the United States. The suggestion that some merchants out ten miles in a village accommodates his neighbors by doing a quasi banking business is scarcely in point, because those men do not trade upon the word "bank", "banker" or "banking". But when men hold themselves out as bankers, as operating a bank exempt from inspection, and as I have unhappily learned exempt from the operation of the criminal laws that prevent incorporated institutions from accepting deposits under penalty of the criminal statutes when the institution is known to be insolvent, it seems to me time that we should put in not only the restrictions suggested by the gentleman from Medina [Mr. Woods], but very much more drastic ones, such as the one I now send to the secretary's desk.

Insert a period after the word "state" in line 15 and strike out all thereafter.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: It ought to be an axiom of public morality that the business of a private banker is a proper subject for public inspection. There ought not be any disagreement on the proposition. There is no intention here and should not be any to destroy the private banker who has his well recognized place among the banking institutions of the world. I think if the member from Ashtabula and the member from Gallia will withdraw their amendments I have an amendment which will probably cover the wishes of the private bankers throughout the state and meet their objections to this proposal and at the same time in no way cripple the proposal itself. The amendment I now offer to the original proposal is self-explanatory. In this connection I would add that the real objection of the private bankers to the proposal in its present form is that it would limit them in the amount of money they may be allowed to lend to any one individual firm or corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON: A national bank cannot lend any individual any more than ten per cent of its capital—

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: And surplus.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is there anything to prevent the legislature from changing that?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: That is a federal statute referring only to national banks, but the law in Ohio limits the amount any incorporated bank may lend to twenty per cent of the capital and surplus, and where the capital is small, say $25,000, and the surplus say $250,000, the bank could only at the present time lend to any borrower $55,000 notwithstanding that the banker's deposits might be a million dollars and the borrower's credit and necessities justified a loan of $100,000. I offer this amendment.

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

The amendment was read as follows:

Change the period at the end of line 17 to a comma and add: "save and except that the limitation of amount or amounts that may be loaned to any person, firm or corporation shall not apply."

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: It seems to be the opinion of the Convention that there are no good private bankers. Any bank is just as good as the people behind it and no better. It seems to me that this amendment is offered hastily and without understanding the functions of a private bank. Several gentlemen speaking here tonight have touched upon that matter and have covered it pretty well, but no one man completely. Now this is the situation: I do not want to name the town nor the people who make this objection to the amendment, but this is what it was. Down in the county that Mr. Elson is from there is a small bank with a capital of $25,000. They started a national bank in that place and some of the stockholders of the national bank gave up their accounts with the private bank and commenced to do business with their own bank. They found they could not borrow more than $2,500, whereas the other bank would lend them $15,000 of $20,000. The private bank had other funds besides its capital, which was $25,000, and they would accommodate their customers, and the result was they got all of the good customers of the community; the national bank does not pay, while the other bank is a good paying institution and lends money to accommodate the customers. The consequence was that the stockholders of the national bank had to go back to the private bank to do business or else go out of the community to borrow the money. That is one of the functions of the private banker.

Mr. LAMPSON: Is not the largest bank in the state of Ohio a private bank?

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: If you refer to the Society for Savings I can hardly answer that question, and I do not think that affects the question. I think the majority of the private banks of Ohio will be satisfied with Mr. Miller's amendment and I think it makes them safer than the amendment that Mr. Woods offers.

Not long ago the state banking department of the state of Ohio received from the state of Wisconsin a report to the effect that private bankers ought not to be given the privilege of doing business within their state, that it would make them all go into the state banking business. Now I want to say that if you will listen you will see what a fine state of affairs they have in Wisconsin, where they argue to this Convention that because the state banking superintendent of Wisconsin is against private banks they ought not to exist in the state of Ohio. Here are the state banks in Wisconsin: Six of $5,000; one of $6,000; one of $7,000; one of $8,500; 265 of $10,000; one of $10,200; one of $10,500; eleven of $12,000; two of $12,500; one of $13,000; seventy of $15,000.

There is the condition of the state banks of the state of Wisconsin. They have not been in existence long enough to know whether they can stand a panic or not. Behind the private bank there is a matter of pride to keep them running. Suppose those small country private banks are made up simply of stockholders comprising good farmers and merchants and some working people, and all have a little stock. Say a panic comes along and the bank gets in deep water; the stockholders would make a sacrifice for it. I know that private bankers have gone into their pockets to keep up. I know that a great many banks in the state of Ohio and in a great many other states have done that. The Miller amendment makes these banks as good as the average bank in Wisconsin or Minnesota.

Mr. EARNHART: I fear gentlemen lose sight of the object of this proposal. The object of the proposal and the amendment to it is to protect the depositors. It seems to me if a banker intends to do a fair business he ought not to object to inspection. Any man engaged in any business, if he is doing a fair, square business, ought not to object to having his business regulated if the business is one in which other people's interests are vitally at stake. Private banks will not be subjected to any hardship whatever. They continue to do business just the same. It does not interfere with the business, but protects the man with money, so that he may know when he wants his money he can get it. I commend the judgment of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology. I indorse the proposal as they have reported it here, and I hope the Convention will pass it without making any amendments to it whatever. It is good enough as it is and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. ELSON: I have an amendment that I would like to offer.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the debate now close?"

The motion to close debate was lost.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I am very much in hopes that this Convention may see its way clear to relieve private banks in this state from having to submit to the same regulation to which the national and state banks have to submit. That is all they are asking for. They do not ask for any exemption from regulation or inspection for soundness of their business, but the private banks of this state are on an average older and safer than any other banks in the state. I discovered when I went back to Highland county after inadvertently subscribing to the amendment of Mr. Woods to the Earnhart proposal, that our private banks in Highland county are decidedly stronger than the other banks and they have more behind them to make them stronger. The biggest bank in Highland county is the Greenfield bank. That has a capital of $25,000 and on the day that I looked at its books the deposits amounted to $873,000. This bank has behind it all the assets of the stockholders of the bank, which gives it a solidity equal to $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. They have a very large business in Greenfield and that business is conducted through its banks. It is absolutely necessary at times for some of the men who have large businesses in Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

Greenfield to borrow large amounts of money, and the way they do it is to take their collateral—municipal and national bonds—and go into this bank and deposit $100,000 as collateral and borrow $100,000 from this bank that has a capital of $25,000. That bank fills a business necessity that cannot be met by a national or state bank which has not an enormous capital. A bank would have to have $500,000 or $1,000,000 of capital to run the business of Greenfield if the business men of Greenfield secured from them the necessary accommodations. They say that would absolutely ruin the business of Greenfield, and the same objection exists in Hillsboro and Lexington and two or three other places. There the banks have a capital of $10,000—they do I know at Lexington—and they have behind that enough estates of stockholders to pay off a loss of $200,000 or $300,000, which no bank in the county under state or national regulation can do. Now I trust that this Convention will see this matter as I see it and take a reasonable view of it and protect those banks and will not alter their business methods to the extent of an entire revolution.

Mr. WOODS: Do you think it is safe to let a banker lend all of the money of the bank to one person? Is that taking a reasonable view of the matter?

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It is if the ability and business of the man who owns the stock is sufficient to warrant it. These banks are not objecting to proper inspection as to soundness, but they do not want to be subjected to the narrow limits of national or state restrictions. I hope you will see it that way.

Mr. JONES: Gentlemen of the Convention: As you all remember, upon second reading an amendment was introduced by Mr. Woods, a motion was made for its adoption and it was agreed to here without any opportunity for argument or discussion. Now the effect of that amendment is much more far-reaching than has been understood by the members who have spoken on the subject. The effect of it is to destroy every private bank in Ohio, and here is the way it will be done. It provides that no person or persons or associations can use the word "bank" or "banker" unless they submit to inspection and regulation as now provided by the banking laws of Ohio or those that may be hereafter provided. The result will be, as already suggested by the gentleman from Highland, that no private bank can conduct its business under the regulations applicable to state banks. These private banks are organized to meet a peculiar condition. In our county we have only one national bank and one state bank and we have nine or ten private banks. In my own little village the bank, with less than $10,000 of capital, has back of it fifteen or twenty farmers and there are more than half a million dollars behind every debt of that bank. Every bank in our county is similarly situated. They are organized in small villages where you could not have a bank of $25,000 or $50,000 capital, because the business would not enable the paying of dividends upon that amount of capital stock.

Mr. NYE: I want to ask you what you mean by saying that your bank has a capital of from $6,000 to $10,000. Is it a private bank or is it organized under the laws?

Mr. JONES: It is a private bank, with paid-in capital. There are a few private banks that have no paid-in capital, but there is not one in twenty that has not.

Mr. NYE: Is it a partnership?

Mr. JONES: Yes, sir; with paid-in capital, and in addition to that, with the individual responsibility of every member of the partnership back of it. Now what we have in our little county of Fayette exists in many other rural counties. We have more, as shown by the tax duplicate, behind the bank deposits in the private banks of Fayette county than there is in all the banks in Columbus and Franklin county, and that is due to the fact that all but two of our banks are private banks with the unlimited liability of the stockholders, making them so sound that no one can question them.

There has not been one dollar lost in private banks where there have been ten in state and national banks. There are a few instances like the one that the gentleman from Mahoning [Mr. ANDERSON] cited where there have been losses, and I concede that those cases ought to be provided for. Men who engage in the banking business should be required to make a showing that they have some capital behind their institution and some amount of assets in the way of property that will be liable for the debts of the bank. I submit that the Miller amendment thoroughly met that whole contention and objection made at the time, and this amendment if adopted will do all that can be reasonably asked. The ordinary private banker of Ohio has not inflicted any injury upon anybody. There have been practically no losses compared with the losses in the other institutions. Why can they not submit to this same regulation? First, they cannot because they have to lend more. In our community a man comes in and wants to borrow $25,000. He puts up absolute security. He may go in and get it on ground, a security that he cannot use in a state or national bank. Many banks lend on mortgages, the safest form of all collateral, better than municipal bonds. There are other and many other reasons why a private bank cannot exist that has to be subject to these regulations. It has been suggested there is no objection from the private banker as to the examination for soundness. Suppose he has a certain amount of property behind it and he must submit for the purpose of ascertaining whether that statement is true. There cannot be any objection to that, but what the banks object to is that they shall be subjected to all the regulations and inspections that obtain as to state and national banks, for that would put them out of the banking business. It would destroy their opportunity to do what they do now in the way of making large loans.

Mr. KEHOE: The discussion here has been largely on the theory that all of the private banks are absolutely secure and that nothing can be better, and that there is absolute security for every dollar deposited. I think Mr. Jones' bank and Mr. Harter's bank may be banks of that character, but while that is true there are some banks that a puff of wind will blow over. That is the trouble. The good ones are above suspicion and they feel that they ought to be above examination, while the poorer ones would not stand an examination or inspection. On such an examination and inspection they would have to make good or get out of the business. There is absolutely nothing of substance in some of them and they are not entitled to exist. There is the trouble. The two extremes are so widely apart.

Mr. ULMER: Do you not know that there are more private banks than any other kind of banks?

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Don't you think that any private banker would object to working under the regulations of the national or state laws with reference to the percentages as to loans?

Mr. KEHOE: That is the thing that the most of the private bankers object to, being restricted in the amount of loans as the national and state banks are. That is the principal objection to the proposition and the thing they feel would hurt them most. If that objection could be removed in any way there would not be much trouble about it, but it is that feature of the banking laws of the state and nation that they do not like.

Mr. WOODS: Do you not understand that under my amendment neither the federal laws nor the state laws would obtain, but that the general assembly would have to pass laws to regulate the private banks?

Mr. KEHOE: I understand the general assembly would have it under their control to do as they wished. That is what the private banks do not like. They don't like to be restricted in that particular—that is, the big banks do not. I believe the amendment offered by Mr. Miller, of Crawford, would be a hardship on some of the little banks, but they would simply stiffen up beyond the limit of some of the small national banks. It would not hurt the large private banks, but it would force the small private banks to stiffen up.

Mr. FESS: I move the previous question on the pending amendment of Mr. Harris, of Hamilton.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the amendment offered by the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. HARRIS] be agreed to?

Mr. ANDERSON: Are not there other amendments besides this one?

The PRESIDENT: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Assuming that this carries what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDENT: Debate is open on the rest of it.

Mr. ANDERSON: Then suppose the other amendment should carry?

The PRESIDENT: The last amendment carried would determine the matter. The previous question is upon this amendment.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. HARRIS] was disagreed to.

Mr. EARNHART: I move that all pending amendments be laid on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOSKINS: What are the amendments?

The PRESIDENT: By the member from Gallia [Mr. MAUCK] and the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON.]

Mr. HOSKINS: What became of the Miller amendment?

The PRESIDENT: That was tabled.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT: Very well. The question is,

"Shall the amendment of the member from Gallia lie upon the table?"

The motion to table was carried.

The PRESIDENT: Now the question is, Shall the amendment of Mr. Lampson lie on the table?

The motion was carried.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move that the proposal be laid on the table.

Mr. ELSON: I wish to offer an amendment. It is quite evident that neither of the two extremes can come together and that neither of the two extremes can carry a vote of the Convention. Therefore it seems to me a compromise is necessary, and I think the best thing we can do is to shift the responsibility on the legislature to make such laws—make it mandatory on the legislature to do it to get through with this debate.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Athens [Mr. ELSON] was read as follows:

Strike out all after "shares" in line 12 and insert "The general assembly shall pass laws to regulate private banks and trust companies."

Mr. KNIGHT: In an effort to try to bring the two extremes a little nearer I want to offer an amendment and take a moment to explain it.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 16 strike out the word "first". In lines 16 and 17 strike out "is now or,". In line 17 strike out the word "hereafter".

Mr. KNIGHT: That amendment would make it read as follows, beginning at line 15: "may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may be provided by the laws of this state."

Several gentlemen who have spoken this evening have spoken as if the regulation provided for in the proposal was the regulation now governing state banks. It is not. It does not so state. It says to be regulated by law, and in order to make it perfectly clear that it is not to be governed by the laws regulating state banks it puts it in the hands of the lawmaking power to make the kind of regulation for private banks distinct from that of state banks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer an amendment. The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out of line 14 the word "or" where it first occurs, substitute therefor a comma, and insert after the word "banker" the words "or banking".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FACKLER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "banking" in line 14 insert "or words of similar meaning in any foreign language."

Mr. FACKLER: That is to meet a situation that occurs in large cities where foreign banks are used.

The amendment was agreed to.

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders and Inspection of Private Banks.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the amendment of the delegate from Athens be laid on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. KNIGHT: I move the previous question on the amendments and proposal.

The motion was lost.

Mr. COLTON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert the word "twice" before the last word "the" in line 10.

Mr. COLTON: If this amendment were adopted it would read "to the extent of twice the amount of their stock therein at the par value thereof."

Mr. DOTY: Does that not amount to triple liability?

Mr. COLTON: I think not.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Are you aware that the language has been changed by the committee on Phraseology and that the liability now is copied word for word from the national liability for double liability? I would suggest that not a word shall be changed.

Mr. COLTON: In line 11, in adding to the amount invested in such shares, the question is whether they have bought the shares at fifty per cent of par value or whether the amount they actually paid might not be construed to be the amount invested.

Mr. DOTY: If a man subscribes for stock and pays half in he has to pay the other half. That is the situation now.

Mr. COLTON: I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOSKINS: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: Professor Knight and the president together shut me off a few minutes ago and did exactly what I wanted to do and a little bit more. I want to offer an amendment to restore what Professor Knight struck out and which I do not believe should be stricken out. It leaves doubt. I coincide with his amendment, but I want to insert in line 17 after the word "may" the word "hereafter" so that there can be no doubt of the proposition that the regulations applying to private banks are laws to be hereafter passed. The word "may" after taking out the word "hereafter," leaves that matter in doubt. I want the word "hereafter" in there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINN: Gentlemen of the Convention: When this subject was under discussion perhaps two or three weeks ago I gave it as my opinion that the enactment of this amendment would not in any way affect existing state banks. It was then stated that this question had been left to a committee and that the committee had reported that the terms and provisions of the proposal would apply to all banking corporations in existence. That opinion was based upon section 2 of article XIII of the constitution, which provides that corporations may be formed under general laws, but all such laws may from time to time be altered or repealed. The committee must have assumed that we are engaged in repealing or amending laws instead of making a constitution. Anyhow their premises must have been wrong for their conclusion is just as wrong as it can be. I was astonished when I looked up the law on this subject. I was not only surprised to find that the weight of authority is against the opinion of the committee, but I find that every single reported case is against it and that there are no cases recorded in favor of the report of the committee. I have prepared a brief upon the subject which I intended to inflict on you, but I spare you that this evening. I find that the decisions of the supreme court of Ohio are unanimous upon the question and that there are three or four decisions of the supreme court of the United States to the same effect, one of which went up from the state of Ohio, involving the state of Ohio as one of the parties to the controversy. There are two decisions from the state of Kentucky, and so far as I have been able to ascertain I find that no decision in any state under a similar provision of the constitution supports the opinion of the committee referred to, which is that the passage of this proposal now will bring within its provisions, if ratified at the polls, the existing banking corporations. I say now what I have said before, that this amendment will if ratified apply to banks hereafter incorporated, but has no application to existing state banks.

Mr. DWYER: This provides for a double liability in the interest of creditors of the corporation. That is the only way the courts have construed the double liability to affect the stockholders in the interest of creditors of the corporation. It is not a debt of the corporation, but it is to the interest of the creditors. Suppose a corporation becomes insolvent. The first inquiry is, Have the stockholders paid up the face value of their stock? That is the first thing. That is a debt of the corporation, and after that the creditors can go on and assess them at the face value of their stock a second time as security for the debts of the corporation. That is what we want it to be. Now that ought to be the law. Take that as the law and apply it to the language here. This language certainly needs to be amended. It says here that "Dues for private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable or otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares." Now the word "invested" there is an ambiguous word. In addition to the face value of their stock? Suppose the shares are $100 each and a man has invested only $50. Then there will be no provision to collect the other $50 before they proceed to the double liability. And suppose he has invested $105 a share, which is often done. Now he would not be required to pay another $100, but he would simply be required to pay an amount over and above what he has paid, so as to make the stock equal twice its face value. Now the word "invested" there is not a proper word and should be omitted. I have an amendment that I desire to offer striking out "the amount invested in" and inserting "the full paid-up face value of," so that his liability will be equal to the full paid-up value of the stock. First, they must pay the full amount and then proceed to the double liability, and the word "invested" does not cover that. I offer this amendment to cover that and make it plain what the provisions are, that is, that they will be liable for the stock fully paid.

The amendment was read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12 strike out "the amount invested in" and insert "the full paid-up face value of".

Mr. MOORE: I move the previous question on the amendment and the proposal.

The main question was ordered.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Montgomery [Mr. DWYER] was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 77, nays 27, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Hamilton,	Partington,
Antrim,	Harter, Huron,	Read,
Beatty, Morrow,	Hoffman,	Redington,
Beatty, Wood,	Holtz,	Riley,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 93 — Mr. Earnhart. To submit an amendment to article XIII, section 3, of the constitution. — Double liability of bank stockholders and inspection of private banks.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank", "banker" or "banking" or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

By unanimous consent Resolution No. 129 by Mr. Lampson was taken up and was read as follows:

Resolution No. 129:

WHEREAS, The contract of the official reporter was not made with any idea of night sessions other than Monday nights, and

WHEREAS, The Convention has held and intends to hold other night sessions; therefore

Be it resolved, That the official reporter be and is hereby allowed the additional sum of thirty dollars for each night session, other than Monday nights.

Mr. LAMPSON: I am informed by the official stenographer that there have been six of these night sessions. I will read his letter:

The letter was read as follows:

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 23, 1912.

To the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio:

GENTLEMEN: When I was requested to bid on the reporting of this Convention I made particular inquiry as to night sessions. I was told by Prof. Knight, the chairman of the committee, that the rules provided only for night sessions on Monday. My bid was based on Monday night sessions and no night sessions other than that. I gave the Convention a bid $20 per day lower than any other bid. I did this because having reported two constitutional conventions, and there never having been a man who reported more than that, I was anxious to hold the record by having reported three.

I knew when the days grew longer the sessions would correspondingly increase, but I did not contemplate a steady run of night sessions like we have been having.

All during the Convention my work has been up every Saturday morning until the rush of three weeks ago. So great was the mass of work piled on to me by the lengthened day sessions and the night sessions that although I worked night and day, including Sundays, it took the entire recess for me to catch up, and I only caught up on the Additional Pay for Official Reporter.

21st of May after noon lunch. And I got no pay for those twelve days and was under just as heavy expense as at any other time.

In examining the journals and debates prior to the time of my election, I made the discovery that discussing the question whether there should be an official reporter has cost the Convention something like $6,800, calculated on time consumed, while the reporter has received about $3,600. So I hesitated to ask the introduction of any resolution, not wanting to increase the $6,800 still further.

The union labor scale is double for night work and under that I could ask for $60 per night, but I only request $30 for each night session and do not ask anything for the extra sessions on Monday afternoons.

I respectfully ask that the roll be called on the resolution you have heard read.

Respectfully,
CLARENCE E. WALKER."

Mr. LAMPSON: There have been six of these sessions and I call for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. WATSON: Before we vote on that let us have the contract under which the employment was had. The contract is on file with the clerk of the committee on Claims. Let us have that and let us have all the light possible on the matter.

Mr. KNIGHT: I have no knowledge of the matter beyond the facts as stated here. I did make a statement in answer to the inquiry of the stenographer and I told him that the rules called for but one night session each week and that was on Monday. I have no knowledge as to what was put in the contract because the contract was drawn up and signed by others.

Mr. WINN: It seems to me that there have been many short sessions and it occurs to me that they would even matters up. I think we have had several short weeks in which the gentleman was paid his full weekly stipend for weeks that were short.

Mr. DUNN: I move that the matter be referred to the committee on Claims against the Convention and that that committee make a full report on it.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I move that Resolution No. 127 be referred to the committee on Employes.

The motion was carried.

Leave of absence for the afternoon session was granted to Mr. Knight.

On motion of Mr. Watson the Convention adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH DAY

MORNING SESSION.

TUESDAY, May 28, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. McClelland, delegate from Knox county.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. Pettit rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 93, by Mr. Earnhart. His name being called, Mr. Pettit voted "aye."

Mr. Kilpatrick rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 34, by Mr. Thomas. His name being called, Mr. Kilpatrick voted "aye."

Mr. Kilpatrick rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce. His name being called, Mr. Kilpatrick voted "aye."

Mr. Kilpatrick rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 134, by Mr. Halenkamp. His name being called, Mr. Kilpatrick voted "aye."

Mr. DOTY: I desire unanimous consent to make a statement: As near as can be ciphered out by those who are trying to close up business this week, the following appears to be possible: The Convention will consider and dispose of all of the proposals upon the calendar for third reading and the ones on the calendar for second reading tomorrow night. This gives us today and tomorrow for work, and then we can adjourn over until Friday so that the work of preparing the necessary resolutions and other documents that we have to prepare after this work is over can be done on Friday. The member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON], in whom we all have confidence, has canceled his engagement to speak on Memorial day so that he may be here Thursday and will be here on this work. Then we can meet on Friday and pass the necessary resolutions, one of which resolutions is the grand resolution, that is, the final exhibit of our work, including the directions to the secretary of state as to the manner of conducting the elections, and all of that sort of thing, and which has to be considered with care. That will be considered on Friday and will be amended. After it is passed, it is necessary to have one night intervene to have that resolution enrolled in printed form. Then it will be here ready for signature on Saturday morning and we can close our labors on Saturday. This, in the judgment of those with whom I have conferred, appears to be a program that can be carried out. There might something happen between now and tomorrow night that will change all of this, but as near as we can see it now this program is possible, and it is simply up to the members of the Convention as to whether they care to get through this week by doing it in the comparatively easy fashion I have outlined.

THIRD READING OF PROPOSALS.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 91—Mr. Kilpatrick, is the first business in order and the secretary will read the proposal.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. WOODS: I do not want to talk against the proposal, but before we vote on its final passage, we should determine how this is to be submitted.

Mr. PECK: I rise to a point of order. That question cannot be decided now with the proposal before us.

Mr. WOODS: I move that the proposal be put at the foot of the calendar so that the form of ballot may be determined before we pass the proposal.

Mr. KILPATRICK: I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. RILEY: I desire to inquire how it happens that the proposal as passed on the second reading is materially changed as it is presented now. The form of submission was agreed to as I well remember, as fairly as anything has been agreed to in the Convention, and I wonder whether the committee on Phraseology thought it had the right or whether it took the responsibility to leave out more than half of the matter agreed to by the Convention and presented the matter in this form.

Mr. DOTY: The Convention did it.

Mr. RILEY: When?

Mr. DOTY: The other day.

Mr. COLTON: The committee on Phraseology passed on that particular proposal which will be a portion of the constitution, if it is adopted, and not upon the preliminary or final matter concerning the submission. You will remember that this proposal was passed before the general rule was adopted that all proposals should be submitted separately. There was another reason for our action, and that was we thought the adoption of that proposal rendered the introduction and concluding matter referring to the method of submission of no account.

Mr. PRICE: Why did you act differently upon this proposal and the liquor proposal?

Mr. COLTON: That was an inadvertance.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: In voting upon this proposal, it was with the distinct understanding that this was to be submitted separately. If that is not made clear it might influence some of our votes.

Mr. KING: It does not seem to me that the committee on Phraseology had any authority to drop out four sections entirely from this proposal as it passed on second reading. They were appointed for the purpose of arranging the phraseology, and instead of that they deliberately dropped out four of the five sections of the proposal and reported the proposal back without those four sections.

Mr. KNIGHT: I think it is due to the members of the Convention to understand exactly the situation, and how it came to be so. The question was raised and distinctly raised in the committee on Arrangement and Woman's Suffrage.

Phraseology whether or not we had any business to strike out those lines which the report says we did order stricken out, "strike out lines 4 to 9 inclusive" and "strike out lines 16 to 29 inclusive." It will be noticed that the name of one member of the committee is not printed here. He subsequently signed the report in order that there might be a unanimous report from the committee on Phraseology. Personally I have never felt that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology had any right to strike out those lines, but I think it is due to the members of the Convention to know, and they shall know, that the question was considered there, and there was a division of opinion as to the right of the committee to do that. In the judgment of at least one member of the committee it is a distinct change in substance with which the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology had nothing to do. I state these facts without any desire or design to formulate an argument based upon them, but simply as telling the Convention the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I had thought I would not say anything on this question at this time. I had so much faith that I did not even examine the report of the committee on Phraseology. I feel that all of the questions will be fairly submitted, but after I had heard from the gentleman from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] that there has been some point of unfairness even in the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology—

Mr. DOTY: Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Not now—but I am willing to take my chances even with that, so that we can get through our work and get away from here. My opposition to the proposal, at any rate, is mainly because I do not believe that the women of the state of Ohio want it. I belong to a class that believes that woman's influence in the home is of immensely more benefit to the people of Ohio than when their influence is divided between the political arena and the home. I believe they can do more good. I believe I occupy the position I now hold because of the good influences of the women of Williams county. I know that because I have letters in my desk to prove it. Very few of those women are in favor of woman's suffrage. Less than one hundred of the women of Williams county have signed a petition asking for this. Williams county is dry, and, as you know, I do not take any stock in the "dry" people who vote "wet" in this Convention. I know that Williams county would never have gone dry by sixteen hundred majority if it were not for the women of Williams county. I am now and always have been in favor of women's rights. I think, speaking from memory, twenty-five years ago, when there was a bill in the general assembly to give the married women the same rights as men, I voted for the proposition. I voted for the proposition to give women the right to serve as notaries public, because they ought to have it, but I do not believe you ought to impose an additional burden on them by giving them the right of suffrage. If they are first-class women, such as we have in Ohio, they will feel it is their duty to vote, and I do not want to make them vote. I do not want to impose that duty on a million and a half without their consent, and when gentlemen stand up here and say they have more respect for their wives and mothers than to oppose woman suffrage I am not scandalized. I believe that sentiment is an excellent thing in the world if it has not gone to seed. I do not like to hear the president of this Convention traduced as being a wet man. The question is, is he honest and straightforward and a first-class citizen? I don't care whether he votes wet or dry, or whether he is a minister or not. Did you ever stop to think that it is our duty, whether ministers or not, to be first-class citizens, and that if we get the beams out of our own eyes, we won't have much time to pick the mote out of our brothers' eyes? I did not intend to speak a single word on this proposition, but when there is an arrangement to submit differently from that agreed upon I think I have a right to say I think it is wrong. I thank you for your attention. I would like to make a three hours' speech in twenty minutes, but I find I cannot do it. When I hear gentlemen in a convention talk for three or four hours to express what can be said in about three or four minutes, I think of the person who, when he was invited, instead of saying "I cannot come," replied, "I very much regret to inform you that the multiplicity of my engagements will make it impossible for me to accept your very polite invitation."

Mr. HALFHILL: I desire to supplement the statement of the member from Franklin that there was a difference of opinion among the committee on Phraseology as to the propriety of making this change. But I voted for it on the first reading, I voted for it on the second reading, I will vote for it on the third reading and I expect to support it at the polls. It passed the Convention in the nature of a compromise because it was well understood that some of those who seriously opposed it gave way in their opposition because of the peculiar wording of the proposal, which led everybody to believe that the separate submission, which was included in that proposal, meant a separate submission by way of a separate ballot cast in a separate ballot-box. That being so, we have not any right in my judgment to bring it back in this Convention so it can be put upon a straight ballot or upon any other form of ballot than that which was in the body of the proposal itself. I looked at it as a purely legislative matter, which we determined upon here in the nature of a compromise. I am satisfied if the president had not spoken as he did in favor of separate submission, and the understanding of the Convention being at that time that that meant a separate submission on a separate ballot in a separate ballot-box, there would have been a very great amount of difficulty in getting it through the Convention, although that would not have deterred me from voting for it. Now, gentlemen, this question of franchise is not, as has been sometimes debated and urged, an inalienable right; it is a conferred right, and it must be conferred under our theory of government and under our organization of society by the votes of those who can confer it, and those who can confer it are the electors of the state of Ohio. The present electors of the state of Ohio must have arguments addressed to them, and it is a question of such supreme importance that it deserves to be placed in a separate ballot-box. That was the reason why I believe it was altogether out of place to strike out those important sections in that proposal.

Mr. FACKLER: If suffrage is a conferred right and not a natural right, who conferred that right on us?

Woman's Suffrage.

Mr. HALFHILL: You will have to go back to the original organization of society to trace that up.

Mr. FACKLER: Do you believe in the social compact for society?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes, but not all the vagaries of Jean Jacques Rousseau.

Mr. FACKLER: Then are not women part of society?

Mr. HALFHILL: Let me ask you a question?

Mr. FACKLER: I am asking you a question. Are not women entitled to be a party to the social compact?

Mr. HALFHILL: Women are a party to the social compact unquestionably, but do you deny the fact that suffrage is a conferred right under our system of society, both national citizenship and state citizenship?

Mr. FACKLER: I make this answer to that, that one of the fights all through the ages has been the one side contending that suffrage was a special privilege and the other side that it is a natural right. I believe it is a natural right.

Mr. HALFHILL: I am dealing with established laws and with facts and not with theories, and I submit to you whether or not, under our theory of government, the law and the constitution, suffrage is not absolutely and unqualifiedly a conferred right, conferred by existing electors.

Mr. FACKLER: You may have treated it that way, obviously, in the law, but that is no reason why we should continue to treat it in violation of natural law.

Mr. HALFHILL: I did not know that we were dealing with natural law in making a constitution, but thought existing laws and customs were to be discussed in making changes and in reaching conclusions.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: State to the Convention whether or not you know or ever heard of any law of nature which gives a right to vote, or any other right, save the right to live, if you are stronger than your opponent. Do you know of any other law of nature? The law of nature is the destruction of the weaker by the stronger.

Mr. HALFHILL: Of course, that is enlarging the scope of this discussion quite a good deal. The law of nature may be argued just like the law of divine inspiration, so that you could make of it almost anything. You could prove almost anything by the law of nature, or by the divine law written in the Holy Scriptures.

Mr. LAMPSON: Is not the law of nature protection as much as destruction? We protect infants according to the law of nature.

Mr. HALFHILL: Are you getting into that economic question of protection and free trade?

Mr. LAMPSON: Are not infant industries a legitimate subject of protection?

Mr. HALFHILL: I submit this is not the time for a candidate for congressman-at-large to announce his platform.

Mr. DOTY: Do you not think it was the member from Coshocton who lugged the law of nature into this discussion?

Mr. HALFHILL: I know that the member from Coshocton [Mr. MARSHALL] solves everything by the divine laws as written in the Scriptures, commencing with the garden of Eden and coming on down, and that is a good law to prove things by.

Mr. WINN: Do you also understand some members are lugging in some organic law?

Mr. HALFHILL: We may have to have a committee of specialists to determine when we get through whether what we bring forth is organic law or the coming results of a session of the legislature.

Mr. NYE: As a member of the committee on Phraseology I want to agree in what was said by the delegates from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] and Allen [Mr. HALFHILL] as to the disagreement and the manner of return of the proposal to the Convention. I was one of those who was in favor of returning it to the Convention as given to us, and I think it should have been so returned. I do not care to discuss the proposition, but it seems to me it ought to have been returned to the Convention as it was given over to our committee. It was given over to us for a separate submission, and it is up to the Convention to say whether it shall be separately submitted or submitted with the other propositions of the Convention.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen of the Convention: I believe that this matter was entirely threshed out on the second reading, and I do not believe really that we are now of a temper to reopen all of this subject and discuss all of the pros and cons on the question of submission. That is perfectly clear to every member of the Convention. It was clear when we came into the Convention that the subject of discussion of matters of submission was whether we would submit a new constitution as a whole, including all modifications, or whether we would submit a new constitution with one or two proposals on a separate ballot; in other words, whether we would submit all as a whole or whether we would submit one or two questions separately. As I recall, Judge Winn, of Defiance, introduced a measure rather early; it was introduced first by Judge Okey and then after that, I think, it was introduced by Judge Winn—that the policy of this Convention should not be to submit the work in its entirety, but that the policy should be to submit every amendment separately; and that was agreed and fixed as the policy of the Convention. Now this contention of deciding to submit one or two amendments separately as being different from the policy already fixed upon, is, in my judgment, begging the question. We have decided to submit all of these questions separately. That does not mean that every one of the forty-two shall be submitted on a separate ballot, but so that you can vote for each one without any other. That is the policy already, and for us now to raise this question of whether you are to have a separate ballot is begging the question altogether. It is in the hope of defeating this proposal, and I do not think it is fair. We ought not to discriminate against one or against the other, and this question ought not now to be raised. In reply to my friend from Williams [Mr. JOHNSON] [who was seeking recognition], I just want to remind him that there is so much bad in the best of us and so much good in the worst of us that it does not pay either of us to find fault with the other. That is the answer to you, Mr. Johnson.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: But I haven't put any question.

Mr. DOTY: Oh, he answered your question before you got to it. He knew what was coming.

Mr. FESS: I notice that the Convention is seeming to confuse the issue, and reopen the whole thing; I do not believe it is wise at this time, and I therefore move the previous question.

Woman's Suffrage.

The motion was lost.

Mr. DOTY: It does seem strange what short memories we all have. We have heard from two or three members on the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology stating some things that occurred in our committee room. One very important point brought out which appealed to some of the members who voted to report this proposal as it was reported, seems to have been forgotten. The member from Greene brought it out partly when he said he wanted to follow the resolution calling for a distinct programme for a separate submission of the work. That resolution by Mr. Winn was passed after the Convention had adopted the woman suffrage proposal, and not before. I claim, and the majority of the committee claims, the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology ought to take that fact into consideration, and they did take that fact into consideration, and reported a proposal in compliance with the provisions of that resolution. Now, just remember that this also happened. After Judge Winn's resolution was adopted this Convention passed one proposal that had a provision for separate submission, and that proposal, notwithstanding it was passed after notice of this Convention, was reported by the Arrangement and Phraseology committee without provision for a separate submission. That proposal was submitted to the Convention and passed yesterday without the utterance of a single syllable against that end of it. It was the capital punishment proposal. Just see where you are landing. You are complaining—don't think nobody but the member from Washington has raised a complaint—you find the complaint coming largely from the members of the committee, and yet the very members who are complaining signed a report on the capital punishment proposal which was passed after Judge Winn's resolution, and was the only one passed after Judge Winn's resolution, and adopting a submission clause with it. Yet we assume the responsibility of submitting a report to the Convention which struck out that which was passed after Judge Winn's resolution was passed, and this Convention accepted that report and passed the proposal, and not a single soul on the floor ever raised that point on that proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: This proposal passed on the 7th of March specifying that there should be a separate ballot box. How was that changed and why?

Mr. DOTY: Because a majority of the Convention changed it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: A majority did not.

Mr. DOTY: Yes, a majority did. They passed the Winn resolution after this, and then the capital punishment was passed afterward.

Mr. LAMPSON: There was read before our committee the resolution which had been adopted by this Convention, which I took, and I think you did yourself, in the nature of instructions, and it was read by the chairman of the committee. I have not heard it read here, and I would like to know if the chairman has that resolution.

Mr. DOTY: Yes, the resolution by Judge Winn.

Mr. LAMPSON: I would like to have that read?

Mr. DOTY: I have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I didn't know anything about that change and I know nothing about this. I thought we were doing things fairly and that is what I want to do. That is my position, and I want to know if you agree to it. Why not pass this without discussing about the understanding? Then we can decide it in the future without giving this thing any prestige.

Mr. DOTY: This Convention can change or alter the manner of submission at any time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: We don't want to give it prestige as the report of a committee.

Mr. DOTY: The report of a committee cannot give anything any prestige. The committee has no power to amend anything. The committee on Arrangement and Phraseology went to very great length to prepare its report so that members of the Convention could not raise the question of fairness. We had our reports in so that members of the Convention would have ample opportunity to know what we recommended, and we did not ask the Convention to agree to a single report upon the question of the submission of the report.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Was not the previous question ordered?

The PRESIDENT: No, sir.

Mr. TANNEHILL: What was the vote awhile ago on that?

The PRESIDENT: Fifty to forty, and it requires a two-thirds vote to carry the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL: I believe you stated that this Convention had power to fix the question of submission at any time. Has the Convention that power right now? If so, let the Convention do it.

Mr. DOTY: Now, if you want to get anything in like that, get it in on your own time. Use your own time to make your statement. You don't know a question from a two-base hit.

Mr. HALFHILL: Are you able to give any light as to how this thing occurred in the transmission of the report when Proposal No. 151 is in here in the form in which it passed the Convention?

Mr. DOTY: I can explain that.

Mr. HALFHILL: I don't understand it.

Mr. DOTY: I think it was largely because it was the liquor question, and we had so many candidates on the committee we were all afraid to tackle it. I do not know of any other reason. It ought not to be there.

Mr. HALFHILL: Did we not vote to strike out that modified submission in Proposal No. 151?

Mr. DOTY: I don't remember it.

Mr. HALFHILL: My understanding was that the majority of the committee voted to strike all of that out. And how does it come through with none of that stricken out?

Mr. DOTY: I do not remember that. If you say it, I will take your word against my memory. My memory is faulty. I will confess I don't remember having taken any vote upon the submission of Proposal No. 151 at all. I should have voted for it if it had been made.

Mr. HALFHILL: I am thoroughly at a loss to know how it happened and I thought we were getting some co-operation from Professor Colton.

Mr. DOTY: I am satisfied it is a mistake, but I don't know how it happened.

Woman's Suffrage.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is it not true that on a careful examination of the liquor proposition there was nothing in the liquor proposition to say that it should be separately submitted in a separate ballot-box or on a separate ballot?

Mr. DOTY: I do not remember.

Mr. ANDERSON: While the liquor proposition was under discussion the Worthington amendment changed it from a separate ballot-box to the form in which it is now and there was no change made by the committee.

Mr. DOTY: I am willing to take what Mr. Anderson says as a fact, though I do not remember it.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it not a fact that the form of submission is provided in the same language exactly in the woman suffrage proposal as in the liquor proposal?

Mr. DOTY: I do not know. I never compared them. I am stating what the Convention ought to do and what they did do on capital punishment. You did not raise the question then, and whoever is raising it now is raising it for the benefit of creating discussion.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it not a fact that the question of the manner of submission of that proposition procured a lot of affirmative votes on the second reading and that the committee on Phraseology has taken away that method of submission?

Mr. DOTY: I don't know. I have heard members give different excuses. Some say their wives want them to support it and others say their wives do not. They have this, that and the other excuse, and whether those excuses will explain it I don't know.

Mr. KING: If this proposal is adopted in the form reported by the committee ought not that whole question be determined when we reach the question of form of submission?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. KING: If that is so I do not see the reason of having all of this discussion.

Mr. ANDERSON: We were asked a while ago by Mr. Hoskins whether Proposal No. 91 and Proposal No. 151 did not provide the same form of submission. If you will turn to your books you will find this language in the woman's suffrage proposal:

SECTION 2. At such election a separate ballot shall be in the following form:

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

	For Woman's Suffrage.
	Against Woman's Suffrage.

SECTION 3. Separate ballot boxes shall be provided for the reception of such ballots.

Now, in Proposal No. 151 it reads:

SECTION 2. At said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

	For License.
	Against License.

Mr. DOTY: I am obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. HOSKINS: And you strike out the separate submission. You strike out "in the ballot box."

Mr. KNIGHT: Do I understand the gentleman to say that the question had been raised on this point solely for the purpose of defeating the woman's suffrage amendment?

Mr. DOTY: That is my guess.

Mr. KNIGHT: I want to say that that is not my guess.

Mr. DOTY: I didn't know you had raised the question.

Mr. KNIGHT: I raise the question because I do not think the committee had any such idea.

Mr. DOTY: The member from Franklin forgot to state why some of us voted to report this as it is. Here is the reason: Here is a resolution of the Convention passed and turned over to our committee as notice of how we ought to do our work. I think you call that taking judicial notice.

Mr. FESS: As a matter of parliamentary procedure, what difference does it make how we vote on this now?

Mr. DOTY: Not the slightest.

Mr. FESS: Is it not true that, whatever we may do, the report of the committee on Submission and Address to the People will have absolute control when adopted by the Convention?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. FESS: Is not this whole procedure out of order?

Mr. DOTY: Somewhat, but the other members of the committee on Phraseology had had their inning and I wanted one myself.

Mr. LEETE: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas, 74, nays 37, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Farnsworth,	Lambert,

Hoffman,

Mr. DWYER [during roll call]: Because of the action of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology I vote no.

Mr. ULMER: For the same reason I vote no.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 91.—Mr. Kilpatrick. To submit an amendment to article V, section 1, of the constitution.—Woman's suffrage.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he or she resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

Mr. PECK: I move to reconsider the vote by which that proposal passed, and I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 331—Mr. Walker. The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. WINN: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out line 8 after the word "further" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the event the above proposal be passed by the Convention, and adopted by the electors of the state it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on February 1st, 1915, and said section 13 of article VIII shall be repealed as of that date."

Mr. WINN: Gentlemen of the Convention: This amendment is offered for a single purpose. There are, as you know, three members of the board of public works. The term of office of one of them expires February 1, 1915. It is a four-year term of office. Now it has been the policy of this Convention thus far, wherever I have heard the opinion expressed on the subject, and it has all been one way, that this Convention would not attempt to legislate anybody out of office. We are building a constitution for the future and not particularly with respect to the present.

That is one strong reason why we should not pass this amendment to the constitution and legislate out of office those who otherwise would hold office until February 1, 1913. Two of them hold until that time and one holds until February 1, 1915.

There is still another reason. Next month, in just a few days, both of the dominant political parties will come together in state convention. There will be two candidates for members of the board of public works to be nominated. Now you can see how embarrassing it will be for the convention and for the candidates. If nominations are made they must be made and accepted with the understanding that if the result of our deliberations and our work is approved by the people, those who are nominated and have engaged in making a campaign will step down and out. If the parties fail to make nominations and this work is not ratified it will be too late to make nominations and have them on the ticket for November. So I propose that the amendment itself shall take effect when the one hold-over member shall go out of office, February 1, 1915. The parties may then know that instead of making nominations with the certainty that it is a four-year term they will simply make nominations and their candidates will go upon the ticket with the understanding that if our work is ratified those who are successful will be elected for a term of two years or until February 1, 1915. At that time all three will go out of office.

Mr. KING: Did he take office the first of February?

Mr. WINN: I may be mistaken about that, but I asked a member of the board so as to know when the term of office expired, and he said February 1, 1915.

Another strong reason why I am against this in its present form is that the only man to be legislated out of office is a democrat, and it is so seldom that one of us democrats gets any thing that it is too bad to have it taken away from us. I think there are good reasons why this should be adopted. I have consulted the author of the proposal and he has no objection to it and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FACKLER: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion to table was lost.

Mr. ANDERSON: At one of the first sessions we had of the Judiciary committee Judge Peck laid this down as a rule, that that committee must not do anything that would take any man out of office or lessen his term by one hour. We were controlled in the actions of that committee by that splendid suggestion and I think it is entirely right and good. I suggest to this Convention that controlling influence in our committee. If we are anxious to have this change it will not take long to have everything going in an orderly way. I think the amendment ought to prevail, that men ought to go out of office at a certain time, and that the governor should appoint at that time.

Mr. HARBARGER: Are there any members of the board of public works that we will interfere with?

Abolishing Board of Public Works.

Mr. ANDERSON: No, so I understand; but I have not investigated, and I understand if this prevails without the amendment it shortens one term two years. In other words, it cuts one term right in half.

Mr. TETLOW: The men now in office will serve how long?

Mr. WINN: Two until February 1, 1913, and one until February 1, 1915.

Mr. ANDERSON: The only suggestion I wanted to make is—I have not investigated the subject, but I have heard what Judge Winn says—I do not want to be a party to any action that will take two years or any time from any man.

Mr. TETLOW: I am opposed to the amendment for the simple reason that if the amendment is adopted and becomes a part of this proposal, whoever may be elected in the coming campaign to fill this position would only serve two years and consequently his term is shortened two years. If this proposal passes without amendment it means that of those who are now in office one will sacrifice only a little more than two years and one only part of one year, and consequently I think it is far better to pass the proposal without the amendment than with it.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is not this true, that the men who now seek nominations as democrats or republicans do so with their eyes open, knowing the actions of the Constitutional Convention, but the man who sought that office two years ago and was nominated and elected—and I understand he is a democrat, although the fact that he is a democrat is good evidence that he didn't have his eyes open—sought it when it was a four-year office. Now why should we take from him two years when he had no means of determining that any such action should be taken?

Mr. TETLOW: Yes, but when you have the same condition confronting you in the coming state convention the man who accepts the nomination for this position will be accepting it for a four-year term, just the same as the other man had in view.

Mr. ANDERSON: They know of this action of the Convention.

Mr. TETLOW: But they do not know that the people will adopt it.

Mr. WINN: Do you appreciate the fact that in the adoption of the Peck judiciary proposal we were particular to make provision that all circuit judges now holding office should continue to hold office as appellate judges and that the term of office would not be shortened, but would remain precisely the same, and that the same provision should be made with respect to the supreme judges and the judges of the courts of common pleas, whereas we were changing practically all of the judges of the common pleas?

Mr. TETLOW: That is true, but there is a distinction between the two things. Every one admits that the courts are a necessity. We have not abolished those positions. We are abolishing the office of the board of public works because we do not believe in it, and if we do not believe in it I do not believe in retaining officials in positions that we believe should be abolished. This amendment reminds me of the story of the man who wanted to cut off his dog's ears, and he thought he would be humane about it and he cut them off about one-eighth of an inch, allowed them to heal and then cut off another eighth, allowed that to heal, and so on until finally the dog's ears were clipped off.

Mr. WINN: Are you sure that it was the ears? I have heard the story, but it was not the ears.

Mr. DOTY: You are thinking about that dun-colored mule you rode to Defiance. Now we are to have a yea and nay vote on this and I want to call your attention to one phenomenon—

Mr. HOSKINS: Will you allow me—

Mr. DOTY: Just a minute. I want to finish. Just watch the vote. The members from so-called canal counties and the men who are after office and want the support of the canal counties will vote for this and a large number of the rest of us, and I hope all of the rest of us, will vote against it. There is no trouble in telling about the vote of the members of the canal counties, because you know what they are going to do every time.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do you think it is becoming in you to stand up here and reflect upon the vote of any member of the Convention?

Mr. DOTY: I think it just as becoming as some of the language that you used on this floor.

Mr. BEATTY, of Wood: You say the members of the canal counties are going to vote for it. I am from a canal county and I will vote against it.

Mr. DOTY: And why? Because you have been in the legislature for eight or ten years and know what ought to be done, and the member from Mahoning is not from a canal county.

Mr. ANDERSON: No attention should be paid to a vote from a political standpoint.

Mr. DOTY: But attention is given notwithstanding you say it ought not to be.

Mr. ANDERSON: You should not accuse people of voting for political reasons because in the Judiciary committee we decided that no man's term of office should be shortened.

Mr. DOTY: I am not accusing anybody. The members of the canal counties are as honest as I am and if I have aimed to cast any reflection on anybody's vote I withdraw it. I have no intention of doing so. I was calling attention to a political phenomenon.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do you think there should be a political motive assigned to any member of a committee who would emasculate the woman's proposal and turn in the liquor proposal just as it was?

Mr. DOTY: If you are referring to me I don't care. What I did I did publicly, and, more than that, I helped have that report printed and laid on your desk so that you could not help but be well informed as to it.

Mr. HOSKINS: And that might reflect politically—

Mr. DOTY: It might in your eyes, but not in mine. This is simply a scheme to keep them on a little bit longer and we have been trying to get rid of them for thirty or forty years. This is the first chance we have had to do away with the board of public works, and I want to say that there is a member of the board of public works who, every time he has seen me, has importuned me—not quite that, but he has told me time and again to do away with the board of public works. He is a member elected and comes from Ashtabula county, but I do not like to mention his name.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I move the previous question on the amendment and everything.

Abolishing Board of Public Works—Use of Voting Machines.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the amendment pass? A roll call has been demanded and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas, 32, nays 75, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Hamilton,	Miller, Crawford,
Baum,	Harter, Stark,	Norris,

So the amendment of the member from Defiance was not agreed to.

Mr. KNIGHT: There is an amendment that should be offered, the same as the one that was offered as to the state commissioner of common schools, providing for the duties of a new office until the legislature acts.

Mr. FESS: A point of order. The previous question was called on everything pending.

The PRESIDENT: The way the motion was stated it will be impossible to amend now.

Mr. READ: I move that we reconsider the vote by which that main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: That is not in order. The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 106, nays 3, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Lambert,

Those who voted in the negative are: Harter, of Stark, Read, Winn.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 331—Mr. Walker. To submit an amendment to article VIII, section 12, and to repeal section 13, of the constitution.—Abolishing board of public works.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, and his duties and powers shall be defined by law.

Resolved further, That section 13 of article VIII is hereby repealed.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to make a motion. The proposal does not prescribe any duties for the newly created officer, and I would like to offer a resolution of instructions that the Phraseology committee be instructed to report this back with an amendment in the grand resolution and that the amendment should be as follows:

In line 7 strike out all after the word "year" and insert "with the powers and duties now exercised by the board of public works until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law."

The language is identical with that which the Convention inserted Friday last in the proposal pertaining to the superintendent of public instruction.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 242—Mr. Roehm.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. ROEHM: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Use of Voting Machines—Municipal Home Rule.

In line 6 strike out the word "ballot" and substitute in place thereof the word "vote".

Mr. ROEHM: It was thought by some of the members of the Convention that the word "ballot" in line 6 might refer merely to the word ballot previously used in line 5 and that the secrecy of voting would be preserved only when the ballot was used and not the voting device, and for that reason this amendment is offered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OKEY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the words "preserve the secrecy of the ballot" in line 6 and insert the following: "providing, however, the secrecy in voting shall be preserved."

Mr. DOTY: There are no such words now in the proposal as are indicated by that amendment.

The SECRETARY: That should read "secrecy of the vote."

Mr. DOTY: No, sir; it should read just as the member sent it up, and I make the point of order on the way the member sent it up.

Mr. OKEY: The word "ballot" should be changed to "vote." The secrecy of the ballot is not what we want to preserve, but the secrecy of the voting. The ballot is that upon which the names are recorded and the voting is another thing. It is the secrecy of the voting that we want to preserve. That is what I had in view, and I offer the amendment to clarify it.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the words "secrecy of vote" in line 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following, "provided, however, the secrecy in voting shall be preserved."

Mr. OKEY: After further examination I think Mr. Roehm's amendment covers that and I withdraw my amendment.

The question being, "Shall the proposal pass?"

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 242—Mr. Roehm. To submit an amendment to article V, section 2, of the constitution.—Use of voting machines.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 2. All elections shall be either by ballot or by mechanical device, or by both, preserving the secrecy of the vote. Laws may be enacted to regulate the preparation of the ballot and to determine the application of such mechanical device.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 272—Mr. FitzSimons, is the next business in order.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 17 insert a comma after the word "self-government" and in line 18 strike out the comma.

Mr. HOSKINS: The striking out of that comma and the inserting of another one does not enlarge or curtail any powers?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Not a particle.

Mr. HOSKINS: What is the purpose?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: The idea was to make it more self-evident than in the original proposition that the powers were entirely within the municipality.

Mr. WINN: I hope that every body will give attention while we discuss this amendment. It is of most vital importance. I was not able to hear the answer made by the author [Mr. FITZSIMONS] to the inquiry directed to him by the member from Auglaize, but I do know that if this innocent amendment is made it practically changes the whole substance of section three. As it now reads, the municipality shall have the authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and adopt and enforce within their limits local police, sanitary and other regulations such as are not in conflict with general laws. It is proposed to insert a comma after self-government so that the municipality shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government without any restraint by the general laws of the state. Do you get that?

Mr. DOTY: That is what they ought to have.

Mr. WINN: Now you can see the colored gentleman in the woodpile.

Municipal Home Rule.

Mr. DOTY: I am not colored.

Mr. WINN: If I understood the answer of Mr. FitzSimons, the author of the proposal, he said that this comma would not change the sense of the section, but you see now that the purpose is to give the municipalities absolute power of local self-government without respect to any general laws of the state, and that the limitations not in conflict with the general law of the state shall apply only to local police, sanitary and similar regulations. A few days ago, when this question was under discussion, I offered an amendment to section 7 broader in its scope and more liberal to the municipalities than anything that has been asked for by the author of the proposal or by its friends. That amendment was offered and agreed to and written into the proposal because in section 3 there was no comma after the word self-government. You see the importance of all this, so if we now insert a comma after the word "self-government" and thereby limit the right of municipalities by general laws to only such things as relate to local police, sanitary and other regulations, then we have in section 7 the same unrestricted right on the part of the municipalities to adopt a charter that was not intended. Such was not understood to be the sense of this Convention when the amendment to section 7 was offered and adopted. It ought not to be allowed now. I think that the members in favor of this proposal should have known before this section was presented that those who are opposed to it yielded, as we did a few days ago, simply because we believed there was left in it local self-government for municipalities limited only by the provisions of the general assembly or the lawmaking power. I move, therefore, that this amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. DOTY: I demand the yeas and nays on that. That is scarcely a fair way of handling a matter. It is an important matter and it should not be closed up like this.

Mr. ANDERSON: A point of order. There is only one thing before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT: The yeas and nays have been demanded on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: It occurs to me that the chairman of the committee should be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. ANDERSON: A point of order. A motion to table is not debatable.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 67, nays 42, as follows:

So the motion to table prevailed.

Mr. Cunningham: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after "Sec. 2" in line 10 and insert the following:

"The general assembly shall authorize the adoption of the commission plan of municipal government by the cities of this state."

Mr. CUNNINGHAM: Proposal No. 272 has received less real general consideration in open convention than any other important proposal before this body, and I believe should have received the most careful attention. It is true that we were assured by members of the committee on Municipal Government that they had sweat blood over its consideration; that not a syllable of any word or even a preposition had been overlooked; that it was the best thing of the kind that had ever been framed by mortal man up to this time; that it embraced on this subject the garnered wisdom of a thousand years. Some of us think that it falls far short of what is claimed for it. In the first place, the amended title is misleading. The title has been changed by the committee on Phraseology to "Municipal Home Rule." We think that title does not describe it at all and that it will have the effect to mislead and deceive the people. The title to describe in short the object of this proposal should be changed to something like this: "To provide an easy way for universal municipal bankruptcy." If the people are not deceived as to the real scope of this measure it will never be adopted.

Let us examine it for a few moments. It provides for a deluge of these corporations. Under it more than two thousand different and distinct municipal corporations can be organized in the state. This looks to me to be home rule run mad. So far as I am personally concerned I am in favor of granting the right to any city to establish a commission form of government. A proposal of twenty-five lines is all that is needed to provide this constitutional right.

The proposal is a mongrel, a mixture of a little organic law and a great deal of pure legislation, and that legislation of the very worst and most vicious kind.

It embodies features in total disregard of the rights of the owners of private property. For example, if an owner is seized of the title to town lots adjacent to each other and one of them is taken on condemnation for some fancied public improvement the price of the lot so taken can be assessed against the owner's remaining lot.

I fully recognize the right of municipalities to condemn private property for purely public uses, but do not recognize the right to compel the owner to pay for his own land so taken. This wonderful proposal provides further that if a municipality, however small, thinks that it needs an eighth of an acre for public use in some near-by farm it has the right to condemn and take it, not only the part that is needed, but the owner's whole farm of five hundred acres of which the one-eighth of an acre is part. What for? may be inquired. Why, to subdivide and sell out in lots for mere speculative purposes.

This proposal gives every little village and city in the state the right to buy in, or to condemn if it can not buy, any and all public utilities inside its limits and issue bonds to pay for the same. For example, they can buy or build street-car lines, electric-light plants, gas plants and any other public utility that can be thought of, and extend them out into the country beyond the corporate limits and operate them. We are to have "no pent-up Uticas" in this great state of Ohio, and if there shall be in ten years a single village or city in the state that will not be absolutely bankrupt it will be because it will not be able to sell the bonds.

If the committee who framed up this measure had set themselves deliberately to work to propose the worst and most vicious form of municipal government in the world they couldn't have succeeded better; and hence I insist that if this measure is to be submitted in its present form that the title at least should be changed so as not to deceive the people, but at least give them a gentle hint as to its true character.

When all the money in the state is invested in the bonds issued to buy all these public utilities we will then have single tax without mistake. The bonds will be exempt and the utilities themselves will no longer pay any taxes. The millions now paid by them into the public treasury will be no longer available; consequently there will be but little left except real estate to pay taxes on. We are launching our municipal bark on an unknown sea without the rudder of common sense to guide it, and for one I protest.

Mr. DOTY: It is the old story. The member from Harrison county can tell us how to run cities better than we know ourselves. Here is a sample of it and a more absurd proposition has not been put up before us, and I move that it be tabled.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 43 strike out the words "city or village" and insert in lieu thereof the word "municipality".

Mr. KNIGHT: That makes it conform with the rest of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 19 strike out the word "acquire".

In line 22 strike out all after the period and strike out all of lines 23, 24, 25 and 26.

In line 22 after the period add:

"Any municipality in which the major part of the property of any public utility is situated, may acquire the use of, and full title to, the franchises and property of such public utility by condemnation or otherwise; provided that any municipality determining to construct any public utility shall provide against the waste of competition, by first acquiring by condemnation or otherwise, the property of any existing public utility used and useful for the convenience of the public in furnishing a like service in such municipality and operating under a license, permit or franchise for a period of five years prior to such determination, paying therefor just compensation only."

Mr. LAMPSON: I think if municipalities are to go into the business generally of incorporating public utilities, it is only right that they should be fair to their own citizens who have heretofore been granted franchises and under those grants have built up public utilities through which they have been serving the people.

The home rule proposal gives municipalities complete authority to engage in any business "the service or product of which is supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants." They may do this either by operating a new plant or by the acquirement of any existing property and franchises of any private citizen or company, either by condemnation or otherwise. This grant of power is fundamental and can never be abrogated, restricted or regulated by legislative act.

Under this grant of power the municipality may establish for itself an absolute and complete monopoly in such lines of business as it chooses to engage in which are within the meaning of this proposal.

It is generally agreed that competition in what are generally known as public utilities is a wasteful duplication of investment and must result in economic loss. If such competition exists between two private companies this loss falls on individuals, but if the municipality is one of the parties to the competition the loss suffered must fall on the general public. Therefore, given the power to create a monopoly for itself, the municipality should be restrained from engaging in any competition which would result in loss to the entire community without permanently benefiting any part of the people.

Public utilities under private ownership pay general taxes on their property. They also pay an excise tax, which is an important item in the revenues of the state government. Public utilities under municipal ownership are exempt from taxation. Competition under such conditions is morally wrong and most unfair. It is morally wrong because it confers a special privilege on the users of the municipal service at the expense of the users of the private service and of nonusers.

Whenever private property is required for public purposes the government may condemn such private property and take it for its own use; but the government must pay to the owner just compensation for the property taken, together with such damages as are sustained through such condemnation. In all such cases the justice of the compensation is determined by the value of the property before it has been damaged or depreciated. For example, a municipality condemning private property for a garbage plant would be required to pay the value of the property before the plant was built. It would not be permitted to depreciate the value of the property by locating the nuisance upon it and then buy it at its depreciated value.

Municipal Home Rule.

The people of Ohio are not ready understandingly to depart from this established rule, which merely recognizes the right of the individual to be protected in the enjoyment of his private property. No member of the Convention would tolerate a law which would permit a railroad to run its tracks through his property and assess the damage on the value of the property after the damage has been done; nor would they tolerate a law which would permit officials of the government to depreciate the value of their homes or their business in order to buy them at the depreciated value; yet that is exactly what is done if the officials temporarily in charge of the government are permitted to engage in unrestricted competition with a private business which they may at any time condemn and take over.

Given the right to condemn at any time any private business, at a valuation fixed by a body of its own citizens, and with the further right to authorize private competition whenever competition appears to be desirable, it is impossible to conceive a situation wherein a municipality should be permitted to engage in competition.

Mr. MOORE: When the Standard Oil Company competed the general oil dealers throughout the country out of business and when the Steel Trust competed all other people in the steel and iron business out of business—

Mr. LAMPSON: They did a gross injustice for which the public has condemned them, and it is just as much a matter for condemnation for a municipality to follow in their tracks perpetrating a like injustice.

Mr. ANDERSON: If your amendment were to carry would it in any way curtail or diminish the right of the municipalities to have home rule in the fullest sense, except they would have to condemn and take over at the time when any competition is had.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is right. It does not contract their power; it enlarges it. But it allows them to do justice to those individuals and corporations to which, under existing conditions, they have granted franchises.

Mr. FACKLER: Is it not a fact that if it were to prevail in as large a city as Cleveland that the city could not engage in the lighting business by reason of the fact that it would be unable to issue bonds, on account of the limitation of the general law, in sufficient amount to acquire the existing property?

Mr. LAMPSON: That does not affect the principle involved. The fact that there is such a condition in some particular municipality does not affect the principle, and we should not make fundamental laws for all the municipalities dependent simply upon local conditions.

Mr. FACKLER: Would you support an amendment that bonds be issued for the purpose of constructing or acquiring or keeping a public utility should not be considered in the computation of the general bonded debt?

Mr. LAMPSON: That is something that I have not thought of. I would want to study it a little before answering.

Mr. DOTY: The argument of the member prepared and so well delivered is composed of two or three sections. The first section was a general onslaught on municipal ownership.

Mr. LAMPSON: I deny that. There was no such purpose.

Mr. DOTY: That is the impression I got. But be that as it may, as they say in the story books, we come to another section which undertakes to criticize this proposal because it may produce a fear of, a certain situation in the city. Now there is some force in that, but the amendment the member offers is not the proper solution. What the member proposes to do is not to compel the city to appropriate the funds to go into the business itself, but he proposes that the city shall be compelled, if it desires to go into the business to furnish certain service, to purchase the plant, if there be such a plant, in that city before it can go into the business at all.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would it not be much better for the city to do that than to ruin one property, competent to do business, to build up another by taxing the people? Would it not be better to take the property, competent to do the business, than to duplicate it by taxing the whole people?

Mr. DOTY: It would be, provided you were sure you were getting a modern equipment instead of junk.

Mr. LAMPSON: Can you not trust the people to attend to the matter properly?

Mr. DOTY: It is not a matter of trusting. It is a matter of starting a new business with an old junk pile. Let me tell you another thing. If two people go into competition they go in on a competitive basis and one has the same show as any other one. The city of Columbus tomorrow can allow competition in the electric light business in this city.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you think it is just to tax me, who own a franchise issued by the city of Columbus and have built up a property to serve the city of Columbus, to build a competing property?

Mr. DOTY: I do not know whether it would be fair or not. It is according to how you behave yourself.

Mr. DWYER: Gentlemen, remember there are a hundred and nineteen members who have intelligence—

Mr. DOTY: I don't get more than started when some one pops in with a question. Now I want to be let alone for a minute or so at least. This amendment will preclude the municipality from standing upon the same footing as a private party in competition. The city of Cleveland allows a competitive company to come in and compete with any other company already there for public service. And now what happens? One company eats the other up. Nobody commiserates about the one eaten up, whether it was fair or not. You allow private people to do it now, and you want to cut off that right so far as a municipality is concerned.

Mr. HOSKINS: Speaking of one company eating another company up, is it not a fact that when a rival company is authorized to do business it has no right of condemnation, but if the city goes into the business it has that right?

Municipal Home Rule.

Mr. DOTY: If this amendment goes through, that is the only way it can get into business.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it not a fact that when you come to the question of condemnation the price fixed on the junk won't amount to anything?

Mr. DOTY: What good is that junk in furnishing a high-class service?

Mr. HOSKINS: You do not contend that public utilities are not worth anything and that the price would be fixed by the jury depending upon the condition of the property?

Mr. DOTY: The property in smaller cities is a property depreciated because of the lack of care, and then you want to compel the municipality to come in and buy that whether or not; whereas it could go out and by the expenditure of the same money get higher efficiency.

Mr. HOSKINS: Would not the price be fixed according to the present condition of the property?

Mr. DOTY: Yes, but you buy a lot of junk that you don't need.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: According to the utility commission, the railroads of the city of Cleveland pay $309,000 excise taxes and the electric light companies of Cleveland and Cincinnati pay as excise taxes $149,000, making $460,000 yearly. Suppose the municipalities under this law take over those utilities and they naturally avoid the payment of all those taxes in the shape of excises to the state. Now where are those excise taxes to be made up? Would they not have to go on the general property?

Mr. DOTY: Yes, if the state doesn't find other sources to tax, and they have been very successful in the last year in doing that. This question suggests one plan of securing municipal ownership in this state, and you are trying to get the farmer vote against it on the idea that they will have to pay fifteen cents more taxes. You are simply trying to scare the farmers.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Is that a scare or is it a fact?

Mr. DOTY: It is not so bad as you try to make it. You stand up and try to make it look bad, but it is not. It wouldn't make a difference of fifteen cents on Mr. Cunningham's tax bill.

Mr. LAMPSON: In connection with the question that you asked me some time ago, does section 3990 of the General Code make it mandatory to take over gas and electric plants before the city can go into the business of serving gas and electric lights to the public?

Mr. DOTY: I leave that to you.

Mr. LAMPSON: Well, does it?

Mr. DOTY: I am not denying it. Get up and ask whether something is in the Code and then read it and then you want me to tell you from memory what is in the Code! Why, I never read the Code but once in my life. I am not concerned about it, only I do not want the city of Cleveland or any other city to have less power or right to compete than you give a private person, and your amendment is framed to do that thing.

Now, coming back to the proposition whether it is fair or not to allow the cities to first say they want to condemn. Here is an electric-light plant worth $5,000,- 000 to the city. The city simply goes into competition, and when they have the thing halfway beaten down they condemn it and get it for $2,500,000. Now that is not fair. If any one can frame an amendment that will correct that I shall be glad to have it. I have not been able to do it, but there may be others who can do it. This particular amendment is not designed to do that; that is not what it is for. This amendment is designed to prevent the cities of this state from having the same right that you or I have to go into competition. That it may do the other too, is also true, and I think that the other should not be done.

Mr. WATSON: I move that the member's time be extended another fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Gentlemen of the Convention: I am familiar with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON], because it was submitted to me by a representative of the public service corporations of the state, the president of the Cleveland Illuminating Company. I wish to state that the proposed amendment takes out the lifeblood of your home-rule proposal. You cannot escape from that, whether you wish to change your position or not. On April 30 we discussed these same principles and by almost a unanimous vote laid upon the table amendment after amendment after a discussion of each of them. Then the proposal was adopted by the Convention, one hundred and four in favor and six against. Gentlemen, there is not a single condition that has been changed since April 30 except that the fine Italian hand of the public service corporation has made its appearance. You all know that the fundamental theory of our home-rule proposal is the privilege given to the municipalities to acquire by purchase, construction or lease public utilities in cities and villages. That is the lifeblood of the proposal. Whatever you do, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the flow of that lifeblood, you do deliberately now and with the knowledge that it will seriously cripple the home-rule proposal. I ask you in all honesty and in all sincerity, in the month since this proposal has been passed and since it was discussed by every newspaper in the state of Ohio, how many of you have seen in any newspaper of any size or any standing in the state aught but words of highest praise for practically every section in that proposal?

Mr. LAMPSON: Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Not at present, but later on I will. Now you are asked to stultify yourselves, because it is or would be stultification and betrayal of the interests that sent you here and commended you so highly for the adoption of the home-rule proposal in the form it passed on April 30 last—and now you are asked to betray that confidence. Stop and consider a minute. I am in a position to give you a concrete illustration. In the city of Cincinnati a couple of years ago we had a magnificent plant for manufacturing artificial gas. Stock was issued against that plant and its connections. The electrical plant had its conduits through the streets and it was capitalized in the neighborhood of $30,000,000 and five per cent has been regularly paid; in fact, if my memory is not at fault, the five per cent has been paid the stockholders of the Cincinnati Gas Light Company without interruption for fifty years.

Municipal Home Rule.

Here was an artificial gas plant capitalized at $30,000,000, paying interest to the stockholders at five per cent per annum in a city of four hundred thousand people. The demand for natural gas became so great that the officials of the Cincinnati Gas Company were compelled by force of public opinion to make arrangements to deliver natural gas to the people of Cincinnati, and natural gas has been delivered to the people of Cincinnati for three years. The artificial plant has been thrown aside and the same amount of dividends is yet being paid by the Cincinnati Gas Light Company to its stockholders. This amendment makes it impossible for Cincinnati or even any small city in the state to acquire a plant unless it purchases the existing plant. Imagine the conditions where the city desired to acquire such a plant. At an expense, say of $10,000,000, the city of Cincinnati would have made the same contract with the owners of the gas wells in West Virginia that the Cincinnati Gas Light Company did at an expense of $10,000,000. It might have erected a plant and would have delivered natural gas to the people of Cincinnati at a cost based on a fair percentage of capital invested.

Mr. DWYER: Do you know that Toledo and Urbana had some experience with the natural gas question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Yes. In several cities, among them those you have named, by bad management practical bankruptcy has faced that part of the investment, but this Convention is not the guardian or the financial agent of the municipalities. We say to the people of Ohio, we give you power and if you abuse it you will be the sufferers, but you are not infants in swaddling clothes.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you think it is exactly fair to tax all of the people of Cincinnati to go into the business which will drive out a rival business, and take the tax which that rival business has been paying not only from Cincinnati but from the whole state?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Your question is misleading. The object of this home-rule proposal is not to do that which you say. By your question you reflect on the honesty and integrity of your fellow citizens. What would be the natural proceeding if Columbus, Coshocton, Youngstown, Delaware or Cincinnati wanted to acquire property of a private utility? It would be to condemn that property and pay the owners for it at a price fixed by twelve of their fellow citizens. It does not contemplate, and only a diseased mind can so believe, that the people of the villages or of the cities of the state will deliberately be so mean and so wicked and so immoral as to build a plant in competition, if there be one already of such a character and of such modern construction as will satisfy the needs of the community. You start out with the assumption that all of the people living in the villages and in the state of Ohio are immoral.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not say any such thing at all. On the contrary, I propose that they shall be moral and fair.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: You are going to be the sole judge of morality of men in the state of Ohio?

Mr. LAMPSON: They will be the judges themselves. They will have the power to judge.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I say to you what I have said before on the floor of this Convention in answer to the member from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL], and that is that historians have noticed and commented on the remarkable fact that the average sense of any community is far more moral than the sense of the individuals, and you may safely entrust the moral sense of the community of people with whom you have associated and of people with whom you have been reared as neighbors—you may safely trust to that high sense of moral conduct the question of determining how they will proceed to acquire their public utilities.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do the federal constitution and the state constitution proceed upon that basis when they protect the rights of the individual to obtain property?

Mr. HOSKINS: A point of order. Are we not debating this proposition under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT: Yes, and the gentleman's time is up.

Mr. WATSON: I move to recess until two o'clock p. m.

The motion was carried.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention was called to order by the president.

The PRESIDENT: Mr. Harris, of Hamilton, has the floor.

Mr. WATSON: A point of order. The gentleman had already spoken fifteen minutes before we adjourned.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Hamilton [Mr. HARRIS] has the floor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: It is but proper and just to say that the committee on Municipal Government considered this very question now before the Convention, and the committee, consisting of Judge Worthington, Mr. Knight, Mr. Rockel and myself, had that very question before us and gave it our most serious and earnest consideration, and yet we were unable to draw up a section that would do justice to the municipality. We were unable to draw up a section that did not seem to destroy the life of the municipal home-rule proposal. If such a section can be drawn up, I would gladly support it, but the amendment proposed by the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] is most vicious. It will destroy the entire principle of home rule. His amendment is based on the theory that there is no public morality in a municipality. Now I wish to say that I personally own $75,000 worth of stock of the Cincinnati Gas Company and the Construction Company. My partner in the two estates of his father and uncle, which he represents, owns a little over $300,000 of stocks of those same public utilities, and I wish to say for myself I have so much confidence in the public morals and moralities and the integrity and good faith of the people as a whole that I am willing to risk that $400,000 and vote against the Lampson amendment.

Mr. DWYER: Every city in this state is advertising from time to time for new factories and offering every inducement for new corporations to come in and build factories and establish utilities of different kinds. This, I think, is the experience of all of our cities. We read in flaming letters these advertisements asking people to invest their capital in the cities for the purpose of building up those cities and giving employment to its people.

Municipal Home Rule.

Now, when these corporations come in there they are entitled to fair play. After the inducement and encouragement offered by the citizens for those people to come in and invest their money, they are certainly entitled to fair play. Suppose under these circumstances a private utility, an electric light plant, is established by some private corporation. They put their money in there. Then in a short time the city says, "We will have our own electric light plant; we will establish one." Now then, instead of trying to buy that plant out, instead of trying to purchase it by condemnation, the city seeks to establish a rival plant. What does a rival plant mean to a private utility corporation in a city? That electric light plant is built by the city; pays no taxes, pays no excise taxes. Everything is in its favor. The private corporation is wiped out. What is that but confiscation? Is it any better than confiscation? Talk about morality! Is that morality to induce people to come in and invest their money and then wipe them out? That would be the effect of this proposition if it goes through. I say it is not fair. It does not put the private utility on a par with the public utility. Excise taxes today are very high and the public utility does not have to pay any excise taxes. How can the private plant do business in competition with such a plant, which is free from all of these conditions? I say it is not fair. It is not moral. They are talking about morality; tell us whether that is moral.

In addition to that, you establish a city plant, and my experience with city plants is that when they are established they cannot do business in a business way. I will go into a civic building, probably at nine o'clock in the morning, and there will be a man getting a salary from the people with his heels on the desk reading the paper. That is the way city plants are conducted. They are not conducted as you or I would conduct our plant. The men will not work for a city as the men will work for us. They owe no obligation to anybody but to play politics. I am not in favor of these public utility corporations conducted by the city. They cannot conduct them. I have seen in our cities the laying of a big water main through the streets. It will cost the city a lot of money. After it is finished they never go to the men on that street and solicit them to take water. If the men come to the office they will give them the water, but if I had that water main, or if you or any private company had it, and had put a great big investment in the street, we would go out to every man on the street and try to get him to take water; and we would solicit. But the men working for the city will sit in their offices, waiting for men to come and get the water. I am not in favor of this. It will be a dangerous exercise of power to give this right, and the day will come if this proposal is passed that we will regret what has been done today. As I said this forenoon the city of Toledo, in the natural gas excitement, invested $1,000,000 to get natural gas to Toledo. I appeal to any Toledo gentleman here to tell how much the city has made out of natural gas.

Mr. ULMER: The city today would have a natural gas plant if it had not been for the Standard Oil Company, which made obstructions. That was the trouble. It was the Standard Oil Company, and the city lost its $2,000,000.

Mr. DWYER: If the city of Toledo had the same ability as the Standard Oil Company, it would have taken care of its plant and protected it. That is the very fact I show, that the city is not competent to have a plant or it would not let the Standard Oil Company lease all around it and take it away. That is the best illustration that the city has not the ability or interest in the public welfare to watch out for its business and guard against the Standard Oil Company. The same thing happened at Urbana. There they lost $300,000. Greenville started in the same way, and what became of that? The Standard Oil Company didn't do away with the Urbana plant, but they didn't secure a field of sufficient importance to furnish the gas. I say it is a mistake for any municipal corporation to go into these ventures. I am opposed to it because I believe it will end in evil to the people. They cannot and will not run a business as you and I or as any man or any private corporation would do it. They have not the interest in it. If our money is invested in it we are interested. We work day and night, and we study at night how the corporation shall succeed. What do they care? When their day's work is done they go home and pay no attention to it until the next day. My experience is that it is a dangerous thing to allow these propositions to go through, to authorize these corporations to go wildly into all sorts of schemes of this kind.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Are you people aware that in section 4, line 23, there is a provision made that privately owned public utilities may be purchased by condemnation or otherwise between the buyer and seller—if they can agree upon the terms—without going through condemnation?

Mr. DWYER: I believe that should be in there. If this proposition goes through that should be in. Now, my friend Mr. Doty talks about old junk and says that the city should not be required to buy the property of private utilities corporations. He referred to that as scrap, and I don't think that is fair. If there is a private utility, it is there by virtue of a franchise from the city, and the city should give it reasonable protection by buying it out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: That provision is in here, and I do not believe that in one case in ten thousand will a privately owned utility be treated unfairly. It certainly will not be if it has the kind of people we have in this Convention, as they have shown themselves in the last five months.

Mr. DWYER: I hope not. I believe in fair play no matter what the corporation is. Take a corporation that is so much ridiculed, and what is the corporation? It is simply a collection of men who have put their money into an investment. They are generally public business men. We may have a few odious corporations like the Standard Oil, but take the Cincinnati and Dayton corporations, and they are generally made up of public spirited men.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I think my good friend Judge Dwyer is a little unfortunate in his comparison. He tells us if the city utility had exercised the same business ability as the Standard Oil Company has exercised in its career, that there would not have been any failure in its gas plant. I understood it that way. Am I right?

Municipal Home Rule.

Mr. DWYER: Yes.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: I am satisfied that my good old friend would be the last one to suggest the blowing up of competitors, as the Standard Oil Company did an oil company in Buffalo, N. Y., to get it out of the way. I am satisfied he is the last man who would suggest the bribing of a United States senator to get legislation through to give them advantage over their competitors. No, my friends, the people of this country want nothing in their collective capacity but absolute justice, and because they have always been supposed to be just they have always been easy marks for the schemer to plunder. You never saw the people of the state come into this senate chamber to buy legislators by the dozen for the fifty-year franchise. You have never seen people looking about for a judge to stand back of their interests as we have seen the corporations. It has gotten down to the point that when the people get a public official that deals fairly and honestly it is so unusual that they cannot crowd things on him too fast. The people do not run business to get all they can and give nothing in return. They want the right to serve themselves in their own way and in their own time and, my friends, at their own cost. No man with an ounce of fairness in his make-up should object to a proposition of that kind. There are lines of activity, my friends, that are in their very nature monopolistic. The serving of a great municipality is one of them. Now today I am paying for the services of a certain utility company in Cleveland certain figures for services rendered. I am paying ten cents a kilowatt hour for electricity to a certain amount and after that five cents for the remainder, while I know that corporation has a contract in the city of Cleveland for less than three-quarters of one cent per hour for the same service. Now, my friends, you are American citizens, you go to your post office that you have kept under your own control and you ask for a two-cent stamp and it is handed out to you with as much courtesy as if you were the largest corporation in the country and were getting a million.

Now, why should we stand for that? We have started in with the hope that there would be an introduction of a new electric light plant and that we shall be able to get electricity for three cents a kilowatt in Cleveland. We are right in the home of the machinery that makes electricity; we are the fountainhead on this continent of electric machinery and we hope to get a rate of three cents a kilowatt. Down in Montevideo, where they talk Spanish, they use Cleveland machinery and they get a rate of two cents a kilowatt hour. Why is that? They were wise enough to engage in their own business.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: After a while. Now, my friends, when the last words have been said do not go to the people of Ohio and say to them that you allowed the public service corporations of this state to write your constitution. The public service corporations of Ohio have done too much active work in this hall for you to countenance them. Remember the world moves and if you are stationary you are an impediment in the way of the people. If you do not want to get the shackles off of you they will get them off of themselves without asking us. Don't go out and have it said that it is cheaper for the corporations to buy your officials in defiance of your right than to have them deal fairly with you. That is not a story; that is history, and it has been made right in this hall, and just as long as you listen to their siren song just so long you will have the people of this great commonwealth in shackles. It is up to you. It is either the people or the corporations. Decide the proposition.

Mr. DWYER: I want to ask you a question. If you can buy electricity at three-quarters of one cent per kilowatt why take it at two cents?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: They made a contract with one person for three-quarters of one cent and they charged me ten cents up to a certain amount and then five cents for the remainder.

Mr. DWYER: Who was it that gets it for three-quarters of one cent?

Mr. FITZSIMONS: I do not feel at liberty to disclose that.

Mr. DWYER: I say that no company can make it at three-quarters of one cent.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: I don't know what it cost them to make it, but they sold it for that.

Mr. PIERCE: I move to lay the Lampson amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. KNIGHT: The subject which is before the Convention is one—I am not going to say of the most important, but one of the most perplexing questions with which the Convention has had to deal. It is one which from the time the present speaker became a member of the committee on Municipal Government has given him more trouble in committee and privately than any other single question that has come before the body. In the first place, I believe thoroughly in municipal ownership of public utilities and I would be unwilling to cripple in any way the opportunity of the municipalities of Ohio to own and operate for the municipalities and in their behalf the public utilities. On the other hand, it is not a simple question whether from now on municipalities shall be authorized to engage and operate public utilities in our municipalities, but it involves broader and deeper questions of whether in conferring that right in such complete, unlimited way upon municipalities we can afford to do so at the expense of the individuals, some of whom at least are not open to the charge of unfair dealings. In other words, every one of these one hundred and nineteen men here desires to be fair to everybody, as the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. FITZSIMONS] said a minute ago.

Now, between the proposition that we just voted down and laid upon the table, and I think wisely, and the one which is embodied in the present proposal, there is a wide difference, not only a difference but a distance between the two. The proposal as it now stands—frankly, it does and we cannot blink the fact—it does subject the property of existing private corporations operating public utilities under a franchise granted by a municipality to what in the last analysis may amount to a confiscation of their property by the destruction of its value through the operation of the municipally operated plant. Now, a number of the members of the committee, as stated by our worthy chairman a moment since, felt that all through, from beginning to end, and we believed that the proposal as it now stands is unfair; and because we could not see any way to be fair, the proposal is here. I do not myself despair of the wisdom of leaving full and complete power in the hands of the municipalities without at the same time clothing them with power to destroy private property. I am not satisfied that the brains and intelligence of this Convention have been exhausted in the effort to accomplish what we all want to accomplish, complete fairness to everybody, without tying the hands of a single municipality and without on the other hand subjecting a fairly well operated private property to improper treatment. It seems that we ought to be able to find a method by which the competition, amounting to destruction or confiscation, can be avoided, for that is what it comes to in the last analysis, and that can be avoided without in any wise tying the hands of Cleveland or any other city of the state. It seems to me that possibly a road to it may be suggested, and I hope that the Convention will not be bound to apply the whip of the previous question necessarily this afternoon. I believe we can get a proposition here which will satisfy everybody in the state, a proposition that nobody can say has been dictated by any private public utility corporation. It seems to me there is a possible plan by which we can work our way out to put an alternative to the municipality of electing either to compete with the private corporation or to condemn the private corporation; but, having elected to compete, it may not subject and condemn the property of the private corporation after it has deteriorated that property by competition. If a municipality decides to compete, it should stand by that decision until after the expiration of the existing franchise. It seems to me there is a possibility along that road of being fair to everybody.

Municipal Home Rule.

Mr. MOORE: May I ask a question?

Mr. KNIGHT: Yes.

Mr. MOORE: In the matter of confiscation—if you compete and drive them out of business that is confiscation?

Mr. KNIGHT: To a certain extent. It lessens the value of their franchise.

Mr. MOORE: If you take their property and pay them in bonds and take all of the property in the state, those bonds will be deteriorated in value and you have partially confiscated their value?

Mr. KNIGHT: I cannot see that.

Mr. MOORE: If you pay them in money which they cannot invest in public service corporations haven't you confiscated their property?

Mr. KNIGHT: If that is the only thing that they can invest in, but it is not.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: Suppose the municipalities are given the right to take over utilities that are paying excise taxes for school purposes a certain amount of money; would it not be just to require the municipality to run their own schools to the extent that they have reduced taxes by removing the excises?

Mr. KNIGHT: It has been suggested by several during the noon recess, that where a municipality engages in the operation of a public utility and in competition with the preexisting private corporation having a franchise in any city and paying franchise and property taxes within the municipality, it might be equitable that the municipality, not being subject to taxation on its plant, should pay thereafter a fraction of one-half of the municipality taxes upon the physical plant of that corporation.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: If that is done it would remove much of the objection to the proposal.

Mr. KNIGHT: As far as I am concerned, if that line is worked out it should satisfy everybody here. Competition between a municipal utility and a private corporation operating such utility is not the same as two private corporations operating utilities, for both private corporations are subject to taxation and contributing to all the expenses of the municipality, and neither one is being taxed to put the other in better position, whereas when the competition is between a municipally operated plant and a privately operated plant the latter is being taxed and the proceeds go into the treasury to help its competitor put it out of business.

Mr. MOORE: Would it not be more equitable to exempt the property of municipal corporations from municipal taxes—

Mr. KNIGHT: Of the private corporation?

Mr. MOORE: Of the municipal corporations, the municipal light or water plants, to exempt from municipal taxes and let them pay state, county or other taxes?

Mr. KNIGHT: What do you mean? Do you mean to exempt private corporations from municipal taxes?

Mr. MOORE: No; exempt the public municipal corporations, whether light or street railway company, exempt them from municipal taxes.

Mr. KNIGHT: The city doesn't tax its own property.

Mr. MOORE: Should not they pay state and county taxes?

Mr. KNIGHT: They do not. They are not required to. They pay no public taxes whatever, and the point is that the private utility has to pay the taxes and it has to pay taxes to help its rival. The private utility pays taxes to enable the public utility to operate in competition with it.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: You understand that there is no harm in this proposal in the matter of which you speak as far as future public utilities are concerned?

Mr. KNIGHT: I understand that.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: If I understand it, a public utility may enter into an agreement with the cities for a number of years.

Mr. KNIGHT: There seems to be some doubt on that, but it is not important.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: The only difference is with the present public utilities.

Mr. KNIGHT: Yes.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: Is it not a fact that all over the country the publicly and privately owned public utilities are in competition?

Mr. KNIGHT: Not necessarily. The state of Wisconsin, regarded as one of the most progressive states on that subject, provides distinctly against that very thing, and that the municipality shall acquire the public utility operated by a private corporation before it goes into the business.

Mr. FESS: I think it is pretty generally conceded that something ought to go in the proposal that is not there, and yet at the same time nobody seems to have a well-defined notion of what ought to go in. I understood Mr. Harris, of Hamilton, to say that this thing was battled over in the committee, and I take it that Mr. Knight is speaking along the same lines, but there is nothing specific before the Convention to clear this matter up and it is killing time. If it is the will of the Convention that something should go in, it seems to me that this matter should be put in the hands of a committee to be reported back or acted upon now. We are killing time. One or the other of these courses should be adopted, and in order to bring it to a test I call for the previous question.

Municipal Home Rule.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 99, nays 14, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 272—Mr. FitzSimons, to submit an amendment to the constitution by adding article XVIII.—Municipal home rule.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XVIII.

Municipal Corporations.

SEC. 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities; all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 2. The general assembly shall, by general laws, provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and it may also pass additional laws for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

SEC. 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of it, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

SEC. 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

SEC. 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

SEC. 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

SEC. 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter". The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter; provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from the date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held there. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

SEC. 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof, and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission; and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

SEC. 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality nor be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. Any municipality appropriating private property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited, shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

SEC. 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

SEC. 13. The general assembly shall have authority to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities; or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

SEC. 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

Mr. CASSIDY: In the proposal just adopted there are places where it reads "the general assembly may pass laws—" Following the precedence of this morning I move that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology be directed to correct Proposal No. 272 as follows:

In line 10 strike out the words "The general assembly shall, by general laws," and in lieu thereof insert: "General laws shall be passed to".

In lines 11 and 12 strike out the words "and it may also pass additional laws" and in lieu thereof insert: "and additional laws may also be passed".

In line 106 strike out the words "The general assembly shall have authority" and in lieu thereof insert "Laws may be passed".

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the vote by which Proposal No. 272 was adopted be reconsidered and I move that that motion be laid on the table.

Registering and Warranting Land Titles.

The motion was carried.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The PRESIDENT: Proposal No. 334 — Mr. Jones.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. JONES: This proposal was pretty thoroughly discussed on second reading. If any objection has developed since that time I have not heard of it. The proposal has been slightly changed in its arrangement by the committee on Phraseology, much to its improvement I think, and I do not believe that it is necessary or desirable that anything further should be said with reference to the proposal, unless some objection should develop to it upon this reading or some amendment should be offered that would materially change it.

Mr. ELSON: I have heard that this process is expensive; how is that?

Mr. JONES: The experience in those jurisdictions where it has been adopted is that about $25 covers the cost of registering the title. After the title is registered, the cost of the transfers are merely nominal, averaging from two dollars to three dollars — not as much as the ordinary deed.

Mr. NYE: I am opposed to this proposal and I do not desire that this Convention shall vote on it not knowing something about it. We had a law passed in this state in 1896, found in volume 92 of our laws, and that law was declared unconstitutional. The fact that it was declared unconstitutional would cut no figure in this discussion. But I want to say to you in my judgment it is a very expensive process. We have today much easier methods of transferring property. It is a way provided by our statutes and is known to almost every business man. If you want to sell your property there is a way of making your deed. The law which was passed and which was the usual form of law for the Torrens system contains in this volume forty-two pages. I have upon my desk also the law passed in the state of Massachusetts, which contains forty-one pages. It is a very complicated system. In order to have your titles registered you have to first file a petition. It has been said upon this floor that you do not have to have an attorney to carry it through court. It has to go through court and be passed upon by the court, and has to be registered by the court and a certificate issued before it can be recorded. The gentleman has said in favor of the proposal that it will only cost about $25 to first register the title. If an attorney would take a case like this through court for less than a twenty-five-dollar fee it would be very cheap in my judgment. I had occasion to go down to the Ohio State Journal and I asked what it cost to publish the notice that is required to be published by this act and the very similar act of Massachusetts, and they said it would cost between ten dollars and twelve dollars. That is the second step in this process, and that price is without any description of the land.

Mr. JONES: Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. NYE: I would rather not at the present time. I will later. You have to pay into the treasury of your county one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the property. The minimum fee as fixed here by this act is a little over nine dollars. Now I am giving you a simple case. If you have your title registered you must have an abstract. That you can get at any time in the state of Ohio, and it is perfectly good to convey your title. Then if there is any complication about it the court refers it to a referee, and that referee is entitled to fees. If you have more than one piece of land you have to go through the process of having that title examined, and each particular piece has to be examined. In my judgment, gentlemen, it will be a process that will cost the people of this state millions of dollars to have their titles registered, if it is done.

But it is said that it is optional. True, it may be, but if it is optional, if it is adopted in any county, every man who has a piece of land that he wants to sell will be required by the purchaser to have it registered at whatever the cost may be. It is said that this works well in Illinois. I have a letter from the secretary of state of Illinois which says that Cook county is the only county in the state that has ever adopted it, and I assume that the reason why they have adopted it there was because they had a fire there some years ago that destroyed their property and burned up their records and they had to have their titles settled that way. It is a good thing there. But what do we want with it when we have something that is perfectly good and all we have to do to convey our titles is to get an abstract? Much of the land in Ohio has been in the hands of one family for a hundred years, and you don't need to have those titles registered and pay these expensive fees.

I do not wish to extend the argument, but in my judgment it is an expensive, complicated way of registering your titles and conveying your land, I do not want you to vote for it without having your eyes open.

Mr. KRAMER: Just a word — first, with reference to what Mr. Nye says. I believe if this system is adopted it will be almost compulsory for every man to have every piece of property he owns placed under this system because the purchasers will not buy without it.

Mr. JONES: Why?

Mr. KRAMER: Because it is a good thing.

Mr. DOTY: Agreed.

Mr. KRAMER: Now let me show you about the good thing. I have an idea that there are nine hundred and ninety-nine titles in Ohio good to every one that is bad. But all of those nine hundred and ninety-nine good titles will be compelled to pay from $35 to $50 to get this certificate, just as well as a man who has a poor title. The purchaser will demand it. Let me tell you about the condition of Richland county. There is not one man in a hundred in Richland county that requires an abstract. He does not demand it. He comes in and says, "I would like to know about the title of that piece of ground and how much will it cost me?" "Two dollars if I have to go back twenty-one years, and if you want an abstract $10 to $25, depending upon the number of transfers." There is not one man in a hundred that demands an abstract. We haven't had any trouble in Richland county. There is not one suit in a hundred that is brought to quiet titles.

What is the use of passing this? Is there any great demand for it? Is there any great discord in our titles in the state of Ohio that every man, whether he owns a lot worth $100 or whether he owns property worth $10,000, must be forced to go into court and get a certificate at say from $25 to $50 under that system? There is no demand. The people are not asking for it. Does any attorney claim, as some people in this Convention are asserting, that it will cost you just as much to get an attorney to trace it back to the time the certificate was obtained as it will to get a title traced back twenty-one years to ascertain whether the title is good that far?

Mr. JONES: Does the gentleman mean to say that merely tracing the title back twenty-one years establishes it as good?

Mr. KRAMER: No, sir, and neither does the fact that you get a certificate say that the title is good. It just means that in the opinion of the court it is a good title.

Mr. JONES: But after the court finds it is good that judgment is conclusive and, therefore, you never have to examine back of that again. All that you have to do is just to go back to where the title was registered.

Mr. KRAMER: Sure.

Mr. JONES: Is not that preferable to running back twenty-four years, if that will determine the title is good; and do you not know as a lawyer that you do not have to run back only twenty-one years but for the whole history of the title?

Mr. KRAMER: I do not know that. I know if there is any cloud on the title twenty-one years will make it good. There is very little difference. In the one case the law says it is good and in the other the court says it is good. The only question is whether the people want to pay $25 or $50 or whether it is necessary to do it. I believe the property owner would rather pay $2 to have his title examined.

Mr. JONES: A further question: Is it not true that this item of expense for advertising and other expenses of registering the title only arise in those exceptional cases where there is a controversy about the title, where somebody with an adverse claim has to be notified?

Mr. KRAMER: They all have to be advertised.

Mr. JONES: Not necessarily, unless the referee upon examination finds some apparent defects where there might be adverse claimants; then those claimants, if not residents, are notified by publication. If residents, they are notified by summons.

Mr. KRAMER: You have to have constructive service, and if you are going to go to all of that trouble it means you have to have an abstract of title before you can get it quieted by the court, and the abstract will cost you as much in the one case as in the other and every owner of property will be paying from $25 to $50.

Mr. JONES: Why do you have to have an abstract if the court is satisfied by a simple examination?

Mr. KRAMER: How do you know that there are no defects if you do not have an abstract?

Mr. JONES: But if this matter is referred to a referee, would it necessarily follow that the referee should have an abstract?

Mr. KRAMER: Sure.

Mr. JONES: Will the expense of the referee for the examination be more if ordered by the court than if by an individual?

Mr. KRAMER: It makes no difference how this title is examined, somebody must examine it.

Mr. JONES: And the court may examine it and will fix the fee for the examination.

Mr. KRAMER: How do you ascertain that there are no defects if there is not an examination?

Mr. JONES: Certainly it will have to be examined either by abstract or, if it is thought desirable, the referee might make an examination.

Mr. LEETE: This may be a good thing in the large cities and in those counties where land is worth $100 an acre, but in a large number of the counties down along the Ohio river, where land is worth only $4 or $5 an acre, and there are a great many small farms of five or ten acres, this system would be very burdensome and I think it would be a mistake to impose this system on that part of the state. I am therefore against it.

Mr. RORICK: Do you understand that everybody will have to resort to this system if it is adopted?

Mr. LEETE: It will work out that way.

Mr. RORICK: They don't have to do so unless they want to do so.

Mr. STEVENS: I want to sound a warning. Line number 6 will put the state in the insurance business. Then another warning from the gentleman from Defiance, which is, if this is passed, there never will be another title insurance company organized in the state of Ohio as long as that stands.

Mr. PETTIT: The more I hear this proposal discussed the less I think of it, and I am like the gentleman from Richland [Mr. KRAMER]. They may say you do not have to do it, but whenever you get up a dual system and one is recognized as better than the other that will be adopted. I think that is the logic of this thing, so that it resolves itself down to this proposition: If it becomes necessary to have the title established by this proposal, it will have to become general. Whenever you talk about referees, lawyers know what the cost of referees is. A referee may be engaged a day or two days, and if he says to the court I was engaged so many days and I am entitled to so much, the court allows it. It may be $20 a day, and the assertion that it will only cost $25 is bosh. You gentlemen living in the poorer counties, think about this proposition. As Mr. Kramer said, who is it that demands this? I have not heard anybody demanding it. I do not know who is behind it. There is no call for it and it is an outrage on the farmers to adopt any such system.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: This Torrens system of registering land titles seems to be well understood by most of the people, and the objections to it are well understood. I do not believe we can gain anything by discussing it. It is a matter which should be carried out. Those people who are afraid of it need not apply it; it is only for those who want it. I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 59, nays 48, as follows:

So the proposal not having received the requisite number of votes failed to pass.

Mr. BEATTY, of Wood: I ask the indulgence of the Convention for a moment or two. I have waited here for the Convention to reach two questions. I have to leave tonight for the West on important business. I should have left ten days ago. I would like to hear these two important questions discussed and I would like to vote on them. They are Proposal No. 2 and Proposal No. 170. I move you that these two proposals be taken up out of their regular order and debated now. I do not think it will interfere with any of the other proposals. We shall reach all of them by tomorrow evening. I know of one or two others who want to leave this evening and who are likewise interested in those two proposals. I have not bothered the Convention much and I would appreciate it as a favor. I know it is considerable to ask of the Convention to take those proposals up out of their regular order, but as it does not interfere with the entire business before us I ask that it be done.

Mr. CROSSER: I am perfectly willing that this proposal should come up almost immediately, but I have an amendment which I have prepared and it is not yet completed, and it will take fifteen or twenty minutes to get it ready. I therefore move that the Worthington proposal be taken up first to give me a little time.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection, the Worthington Proposal—No. 170—will be considered at this time.

There was no objection and the proposal was read the third time.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out lines 37 to 41 inclusive.

Mr. KNIGHT: The reason for this amendment is twofold. In the first place, it is not a section which deals with the subject of taxation at all. It is a section which deals with the subject of bonded debts. In the next place, assuming that it is germane to the main proposal, which it is not, which it does not seem to be, it requires that any municipality or any public subdivision of the state in issuing bonds must not only provide a sinking fund for the payment of them at the expiration of twenty years, if they are twenty-year bonds, but that they must actually pay off two per cent of those bonds each year. This means that any municipality, school district, township or county or village undertaking to make a loan and issue bonds for that loan must provide for the issue of those bonds in serial forms, so that one part of them will expire in one year, another in two, another in three, etc. Anyone at all familiar with the procedure in the issuance of public bonds knows that a municipality or subdivision of a county cannot begin to borrow money at as low a rate of interest on one-year bonds as it can on ten-year bonds. Under the sinking fund provision, the money goes into the sinking fund and is there to pay off the bonds, and they are receiving interest equivalent to what the bonds are paying; whereas, by this proposal we have to pay a higher rate on the short term than on the long term. I have letters in my desk from nearly every large municipality and a few of the smaller ones protesting against this part of the proposal as imposing a burden upon every municipality or borrowing community in the state. It seems to me it is not in the proper place here, and it will cost the people of the state of Ohio more to borrow the money and issue bonds than there is any necessity for doing, and it does not provide any additional benefit over the present system. It seems to me that the argument against this insertion here is twofold—first, it does not belong here because it is not connected with taxation, and second, it is bad anyhow.

Mr. STEWART: I would like to say a few words in defense of this proposition. I still believe that no bonded indebtedness should be created unless provision is made for the extinction of part of it each year. I have before me the proceedings of the American Bankers Association that convened in the year 1909. One of the presidents of one of the important banks of this country made an address before that convention and discussed the difference between the idea of partial payment and the sinking fund idea in disposing of public indebtedness. He took the ground that the partial payment idea was by far the better proposition, stating that scientifically you could treat of the reduction of public indebtedness only under the partial payment rule. He presents in this book here a discussion of examples illustrating the working out of the partial payment idea and the sinking fund idea, and he uses an illustration with a $5,000,000 bonded indebtedness to run fifty years, analyzes that and shows that there is a saving of between $11,000 and $12,000 a year by the partial payment idea in liquidating this debt. Now, of course, in all propositions there is room for argument on both sides, but I believe myself that the partial payment idea is better than the sinking fund idea. If the sinking fund idea were always handled right, and if there were no room for any diverting of the funds in a wrongful manner, there would be no argument for the partial payment proposition, but all of us know that often money that is placed in a sinking fund is diverted to a different purpose from that for which it was intended. That is one of the evils of the sinking fund. I could cite specific instances to show the way funds were handled to the detriment of many municipalities of the state of Ohio. I have in mind an instance where a municipality wanted to refund, and the amount was only $23,000 at four per cent. They did refund at 3.95, and the village saved $11.50 annual interest and paid the bond buyers and their attorneys a commission of $750 for making the transfer. There was nothing crooked in this; but it's a bad practice to refund. I know communities that have gone into bonded indebtedness and have never levied a sufficient rate to pay off their bonds. The consequence is they have exhausted all of the powers of taxation in those communities. They can hardly pay the interest on the indebtedness and leave anything to pay on the principal. I know, gentlemen, it is the law now to provide for principal and interest. If you will refer to the Ohio laws, volume 102, page 266, you will find that they make actual provision that there must be levies made to cover the principal and interest, and let that accrue and finally pay off the bonds. The reason I introduced that proposition providing for partial payment is because the people will not follow the law. They have not done it in the past and will probably refuse to do so in the future.

Mr. KNIGHT: Do you think immediately upon the heels of our passing Proposal No. 172 to grant municipalities a free hand in managing their own affairs, it is exactly consistent to tie them up and to say that they cannot borrow to purchase and operate public utilities unless they provide for the payment of those bonds in a certain specific way, which may happen to be good in some small village or township but not in a large one?

Mr. STEWART: I believe that whenever a municipality goes into debt to buy a public utility it should make provision to pay some part of that debt each year, because if you let the matter run on, you will have a worn-out plant, obsolete, and at the time you have your bonded indebtedness to pay, your plant is worn out.

Mr. KNIGHT: Do private corporations operating public utilities issue bonds on the idea that two per cent will be paid off annually?

Mr. STEWART: I recognize the fact that the partial payment idea is a new one, but I have never yet seen where there has been any discrimination as between bonded indebtedness on the partial payment idea and the assessment upon property owners. Both are paid in serial order. They never provide for it in any other way. I have seen these two classes of bonds sold at the same time, and there never was any discrimination between the issues as to premium or rate of interest.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment by Professor Knight. Gentlemen, it is absolutely necessary that Professor Knight's amendment be adopted or that section 10 be materially changed. As a matter of fact, section 10 does not provide any sinking fund at all. It simply provides that two per cent of the debt shall be payable annually and it means the bonds must be issued serially, because if they are not issued serially, then the municipality would be compelled to go into the open market and buy from the holders of the bonds two per cent of those bonds. Now, under that condition, the holders of the bonds, knowing that the municipality is compelled to do that, you can imagine what a fine thing it would be for the holders of the bonds, you can imagine what a premium the cities would have to pay for that two per cent annually. Section 10 is absolutely unnecessary. The law today in the state of Ohio is that every municipality must provide a sinking fund and levy a tax annually to provide sufficient in the sinking fund to take care of the bonds at maturity and to pay the annual interest on those bonds. That is the law, and that is the practice today in every municipality in the state which is obeying the law. There is a separate body of men named by statute called the trustees of the sinking fund in every municipality, whether large or small, and to this independent body is turned over the amount of money received by taxes annually. Now, gentlemen, as Professor Knight has said this morning, you passed a provision for home rule. You would destroy that and make it impossible to float bonds in large quantities for the purchase of public utilities, because those bonds could not be sold running serially from one to ten years without a great additional tax burden upon the people in the form of an additional rate of interest for the very simple reason that bonds are bought for investment and the average investor does not want to have one-tenth of his investment maturing every year and have to reinvest. Outside of the question of public utilities, the general bonds being issued by every village in the state of Ohio run from ten to forty years. All bonds are issued on the basis or theory that the bonds shall be paid during the life of the improvement for which they are issued, and it is inconceivable to any of us who are familiar with the financing of the city's credit that a city like Cincinnati, which may issue $2,000,000 of bonds next week, should have to issue them one-twentieth maturing each year. The proposition is absurd.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Do you not think city bonds made payable in one, two, three, four, five, and up to forty years would sell just as well as if they were all issued for the full forty years?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I not only do not think so, but I know they will not. There is nothing in the world in the present proposal, with section 10 eliminated entirely, preventing villages from issuing serial bonds as you have done. I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out in line 10 the words "at present outstanding".

In line 13 strike out "so at present outstanding".

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: This amendment of mine aims to make the bonds of every state and political subdivision exempt from taxation. I call your attention to the fact that when I offered this amendment on second reading the vote was 55 to 44 and one of the members told me afterwards that he had made a mistake, which would make it 54 to 45. So there were 45 in favor of that amendment at that time. Since then four or five members have voluntarily come to me and stated that in the ten days' vacation they came in contact with their public officials and they recognize that my position from the beginning was absolutely right, that a great injustice was done and that the injustice they were doing was to the municipalities themselves.

Now I again call your attention to the fact that I am not interested in the individual bondholder but in the saving of hundreds of millions of dollars, because, gentleman, I say to you, that in one generation in the state of Ohio, in my judgment, the difference in making the bonds exempt and subject to taxation will be a couple of hundred millions of dollars. I have pointed out to you, on the $50,000,000 bond issue for good roads, which in my judgment the state of Ohio can issue today and will be able to issue in the course of the next few days, if they are exempt from taxation, at three and a half per cent, that the difference in the interest to the state of Ohio, which is ourselves, the taxpayers, will be $20,000,000 if the rate is four per cent instead of three and a half per cent, and I do not believe for a moment, if the bonds are made subject to taxation, that they can be floated at less than four per cent. The same proposition also holds good in the bond issues of every little city and every little village and every little township. You are only penalizing yourselves. Stop and consider for a moment. If a city like Youngstown wishes to issue $1,000,000 of bonds at least $900,000 of those bonds will be sold and absorbed by the people living outside of Youngstown, so that if $100,000 or ten per cent of the bonds of Youngstown were actually bought by the people living in Youngstown and if every one of the bonds was reported for taxation by the people of Youngstown, the gain for the city of Youngstown would be ten per cent only of the amount that the city of Youngstown had actually penalized itself in not exempting the bonds from taxation. The Convention has voted to submit a proposal on taxation which first continues the present uniform system of taxation. Second, it proposes to restore municipal and public bonds to the tax duplicate and do some other things in relation to income and inheritance taxes which we practically all agree to. It then undertakes to take care of a so-called sinking fund provision which has been discussed by the two members preceding me. Of course, you will remember at the time when this proposal was adopted or just before that this Convention voted by 57 to 53 to submit in connection with this an alternative proposition, so that the voters of the state of Ohio might either continue the present constitution just as it is or might adopt the proposal as it has been adopted or might adopt a new scheme of taxation, the classification of property. I shall introduce an amendment at this time that is prepared with the idea of submitting the proposal in the alternative way.

Section 1 provides for a system of taxation. Section 2 gives the exemptions. If this proposal should be adopted, the general assembly, if it chose, might restore bonds to the tax duplicate under a classification of their own. In other words, the amendment that I am about to submit would make it possible to tax bonds or not to tax bonds as the policy of the state from time to time might dictate, so that it does not exempt bonds from taxation and it does not tax them.

Section 3 reads as follows, and this takes the place of section 10 which the member from Meigs supported:

SEC. 3. No bonded indebtedness of the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation, under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on and the principal thereof at maturity.

In other words, this section will fit in the matter of time any kind of bond the municipalities may desire to issue. If they issue five-year bonds all right, or if they issue forty or fifty-year bonds. That is not true of section 10 of the proposal as it now stands. The member from Franklin seeks to strike that out entirely.

Section 4 is the same as in the proposal itself:

Sec. 4. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution, the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

Section 5 provides for the inheritance tax.

Section 6 provides for the income tax.

Section 7 is the same as section 1 of the old proposal in relation to poll tax.

I have added section 8, which is a section that the committee on Taxation unanimously recommended, and Brother Colton announced that he wished it inserted in this proposal. I do not remember just why it was not included. There was some misunderstanding about it at any rate. That section reads:

SEC. 8. Revenues for the payment of the expenses of the state may be provided by assessment upon the counties, but every such assessment shall be apportioned among all the counties ratably in proportion to the aggregate amount expended during the preceding year in each county by the county and all political sub-divisions thereof.

This particular section has the indorsement of the president of the state tax commission. It was unanimously agreed to, I think. If it was not unanimous it was so near that it might be said to be unanimous. Then follows the provision as to the ballot:

Resolved further, When these competing amendments to the constitution are submitted to the electors, the ballot shall be printed as follows:

	For uniform rule in taxation.
	For classification in taxation.
	Against both amendments.

so that each elector may express separately by making one cross-mark (X) his preference for either of the two amendments or against both amendments. If the majority of the votes are cast "Against both amendments" as compared with the total of those cast for either amendment there shall be no amendment to the constitution; if not, the amendment which has the larger number of votes shall be adopted as article XII of the constitution.

Those are, in brief, the provisions of the alternative proposition. The part of the proposal referring to the manner of voting, as introduced before, provides that each elector may by one mark exhibit his will; that is to say, if he is against both amendments and wants the constitution to stand exactly as it is, he can vote against both on the last line; if he desires to vote for the proposal as now passed, the so-called uniform rule, he marks for that; if he wants to vote for this part of the proposal or classification, he votes in this other place. In other words, one mark by the voter shows what he intends to do.

Mr. KRAMER: I was just wondering, if the Convention agrees to that alternative plan, whether you can get the alternative proposition on the same ballot.

Mr. DOTY: It is for the Convention to decide to submit this alternative with the other and it need not be in the same column with any of them. It would have to be in another place. It could be on another part of the same ballot or in another ballot if the Convention decides it. There is nothing in this to preclude either way.

Mr. TANNEHILL: You are probably aware that your scheme would divide the vote of the uniform people and cast the vote of the other people in a lump?

Mr. DOTY: I am not aware of that. I am not trying to bring that about.

Mr. TANNEHILL: That is the result.

Mr. DOTY: The member is simply saying that. I shall be glad to yield time for him to show it.

Mr. TANNEHILL: We have the uniform system now?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Would not every man who voted to retain the present system be a uniform man?

Mr. DOTY: Yes, of course, if you want to change the designation. I am not thinking of that, but there is this difference: A man who votes on this proposal for the uniform rule of taxation as it stands here would then be voting in favor of taxing municipal and state bonds. If he voted against both, he would be voting to retain the present section of the constitution which exempts bonds.

Mr. TANNEHILL: A shrewd scheme to divide the opposition, and any kind of an examination will make that apparent to any fair-minded man. I am not accusing you of not being fair, but I think you have thoughtlessly made the statement.

Mr. DOTY: I am not at all tenacious about the wording there. If you will make what you think is a proper wording, and it accomplishes the same purpose, I am perfectly willing to accept it. Those who contend for the so-called uniform rule must bear in mind that the people of the state of Ohio in sixty years have never yet had a chance to vote upon that subject. There is not a man in this room who dares to say that the people of Ohio are in favor of the so-called uniform rule any more than I have a right to say that the people of Ohio are in favor of classification of property for taxation purposes. The best I can say is that four times they have had a chance to vote and those who did vote voted overwhelmingly for it. That is not conclusive, but it is far more conclusive than anything a uniform rule man can bring into this discussion.

Now, I desire to offer this amendment at this time and all I ask is a yea and nay vote upon the amendment at any time when you are ready to vote on it, not seeking to cut off any debate at any time.

The amendment was read as follows:

After line 41 add:

"That, at the same time and upon the same ballot, which ballot shall be separate from all other ballots upon which amendments may be submitted, the following alternative proposed amendment is submitted to the electors of the state:

ARTICLE XII.

SEC. 1. As provided by law there may be established and maintained an equitable system for raising state and local revenues. The subjects of taxation may be classified so far as their differences justify in order to secure a just return from each. All taxes and other charges shall be imposed for public purposes only, and shall be just to each subject.

SEC. 2. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions purely for charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property to the amount not exceeding in value two hundred dollars for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 3. No bonded indebtedness of the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation, under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on and the principal thereof at maturity.

SEC. 4. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

SEC. 5. Laws may be enacted providing for the taxation of the right to receive or succeed to estates, and such tax may be uniform or graduated. Such tax may also be levied upon collateral inheritances, at such rate as may be provided by law, and a portion of each estate may be exempt from taxation.

SEC. 6. Laws may be enacted providing for the taxation of incomes, which tax may be either uniform or graduated; and, as may be provided by law, a minimum exemption may be made.

SEC. 7. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 8. Revenues for the payment of the expenses of the state may be provided by assessment upon the counties, but every such assessment shall be apportioned among all the counties ratably in proportion to the aggregate amount expended during the preceding year in each county by the county and all political sub-divisions thereof.

Taxation.

Resolved further, When these competing amendments to the constitution are submitted to the electors, the ballot shall be printed as follows:

	For uniform rule in taxation.
	For classification in taxation.
	Against both amendments.

so that each elector may express separately by making one cross-mark (X) his preference for either of the two amendments or against both amendments. If the majority of the votes are cast "Against both amendments" as compared with the total of those cast for either amendment there shall be no amendment to the constitution; if not, the amendment which has the larger number of votes shall be adopted as article XII of the constitution.

Mr. DOTY: Now a word in reference to the method of submission. If there is a member in this Convention who can produce a fairer method of submitting the alternative proposition, I shall be glad to accept it. The question had never been raised before until the member from Morgan raised it. I only want to express my desire to meet any criticism in the fairest manner possible, because there is no purpose to fool anybody. It is a distinct purpose to put these two propositions up so that they may be intelligently and fairly discussed and voted upon. That is all.

Mr. ANDERSON: I want to take a few moments, not upon the merits of the uniform rule or classification, but upon the question of consistency.

I am in favor of the referendum. The referendum, if it means anything, means the right of the people to pass upon questions of grave importance to them. I have been asked about the circle, but I will come to that later on. At the present time the rule of taxation is the uniform rule. The question now is, Shall another proposition, classification, be submitted to the people? Are you who have voted and talked in favor of the referendum in favor of the referendum only when you believe that people will vote as you want them to vote? Is that your definition of a referendum? Would you censure a member of the legislature who would refuse to submit a question of importance to be voted upon by the people? The records show that hundreds of thousands of our citizens have before this voted in favor of classification. Now would you censure the lawmakers who would refuse to permit the people to vote upon it because the lawmaker was afraid it would carry? Is that the kind of consistent referendum advocate you are?

Take my friend Watson. Why, he was rampant upon the question of referendum, and yet in private conversation, I am informed, referred to people in all sorts of language when they wanted to submit this matter to them.

Mr. WATSON: Would you be in favor of submitting polygamy to the people?

Mr. ANDERSON: I apprehend there is some difference, although mentally you may not detect it, between polygamy and the classification of property.

Mr. WATSON: Is not one just as fraudulent as the other?

Mr. ANDERSON: It may be in your mind, but I do not believe, if polygamy had been submitted four times to the people of Ohio and that hundreds of thousands of voters as intelligent as you are had voted in favor of it, that the submission of it would be improper.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I want to ask you this question: Would you be willing to submit to the people the Smith one per cent law and uniform rule or the alternative proposition of classification of property?

Mr. ANDERSON: If you will submit as an alternative proposition the Smith one per cent law I am in favor of it, because I believe in a referendum, and I will vote against the one per cent law if it comes up; but I am perfectly willing to let the other man have a chance to vote on it too, because I do not believe that this Convention can take upon itself to decide that the whole citizenship of Ohio should not have a right to vote on these questions. If we do that we are not reformers, but we merely pretend to be reformers.

Mr. WATSON: Another question: Do you want to submit this question to the people for their ratification or rejection with the words "institutions for public charity" and "institutions purely for charity inserted"?

Mr. ANDERSON: I have not examined the wording of it. That is not your objection. Let me examine you a little. If you thought classification of property would fail at the polls would you have any hesitancy in voting for this proposition?

Mr. WATSON: Yes, I would.

Mr. ANDERSON: I do not believe it. The reason you do not want to vote in favor of this is because you are afraid it will carry, because you are afraid that the great mass of the voters in the state of Ohio do not take your view of it. That is the reason you are not in favor of the referendum on this question. I hope when the winter time comes and these debates are printed and we are sitting by the side of the fire with some hickory nuts cracked and eating the hickory nuts and reading the debates that we will be consistent. I hope we will not be ashamed to look that record in the face. I want to say, although I am not in favor of classification, I would be ashamed to pretend to be for a referendum and then fail to vote to submit this proposition.

Mr. WOODS: I had supposed that we had settled this taxation matter and I think it ought to be settled. This is the last time we are going to have to vote on this question of taxation. This is one of the great big questions that have come before the Convention, and I want to ask you gentlemen whether, after we are supposed to have settled this thing, you are going to vote to submit separately to the people of this state an amendment that I think no one of us except the author has read. Is that the way you are going to do business in the last stages of this Convention? This is the last time they can be submitted and I do not know whether Brother Doty's amendment is a fair, square submission of a classification proposition or not. I cannot tell. I could not satisfy myself by going to the desk and reading it, and before I would want to vote for any proposition covering a matter of that kind I would want to have time to ponder over it and know what it means, because I know and you all know by this time that certain interests in this state have been trying to get certain things done in the matter of taxation in this Convention. Now, gentlemen, within the last two weeks—it has been only two weeks since we settled this taxation matter—after thorough discussion we came to the conclusion that the best thing was to adhere to the uniform rule of taxation. Now they want it all done over again. This is too serious a matter. I have not been in favor of making these amendments on third reading. I don't think we ought to do it. Third reading is simply to pass on the word of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology. If that committee has done its work all right that is all there is to it. It ought to be passed just that way, but here is a proposal to do something that is entirely different, just as when it first came up. I say to you, gentlemen, that the people in this state who are calling for classification are the monied people. Are they asking for it because they want to pay more taxes than they are paying now? Is that the reason they want classification? I say to you it is not the reason. Then the reason must be that they want classification because they expect to have their taxes lowered, and if their taxes are lowered somebody else has to make up the difference. Let us not make any mistake now. We have settled this thing and we cannot afford to go back and do it all over again. I think we have done fairly well. I think that the majority of the people of the state are satisfied. This Convention has voted several times on the question of exempting bonds. We voted not to exempt them. Now, you uniform rule men, are you going to have uniform rule and then exempt from that the man who can live on the interest on his bonds? You make a mistake there, and put yourself in a position that is absolutely indefensible. Let us not make that mistake. One other thing. You may get up here and talk about being in favor of the referendum; that does not mean that you are in favor of submitting to the people of this state every sort of a proposition. This Convention is against that by a vote of two to one, and we have shown it on all questions where we have voted. I say we cannot afford it. I move that the last amendment be laid upon the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The delegate from Summit [Mr. READ] here took the chair as president pro tem.

Mr. DOTY: I demand a call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: A call of the Convention is demanded. The sergeant-at-arms will close the door and the secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Brown, of Highland, Eby, Stalter, Tallman, Worthington.

The president announced that one hundred and fourteen members had answered to their names.

Mr. DOTY: I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: Before this amendment is voted upon I wish to say that I find in my haste two words have not been put in correctly. I desire the words after "purely public charity" to be the same in mine as in the other proposal. My attention has been called to it by the member from Guernsey, and may I ask unanimous consent to change them?

Mr. WOODS: I object.

Mr. DOTY: My desire was to have it just exactly the same, and I will move to amend it later. You can vote on it now with the understanding that I am going to amend it to make it exactly like the present proposal.

Mr. EARNHART: You said in your argument that this proposition and this classification, if the people ratified it, would restore bonds to taxation?

Mr. DOTY: It does not exempt them from taxation is what I said.

Mr. EARNHART: Under the present condition they are exempt.

Mr. DOTY: The present condition in that particular would be wiped out and this would be put in its place.

Mr. EARNHART: Does it say so?

Mr. DOTY: Yes, specifically; in so many words.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on laying the amendment on the table.

Mr. LAMPSON: The question is simply to lay on the table the amendment of the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty], which motion was made by Mr. Woods.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 58, nays 56, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Baum,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Moore,

Taxation.

Mr. ELSON: I offer an amendment to Proposal No. 170.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 16 strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof "five".

Mr. ELSON: This is so easily understood that I do not think it is necessary to discuss it. It is a simple step in the direction of taxing wealth rather than poverty. I think it would be a boon to the poor, who have never but a few hundred dollars' worth of personal property, and I am sure the state can easily make up the rest of its revenue without taxing anything under $500. In New York $1,000 is exempt and New York has no trouble in raising revenue.

Mr. PECK: Just a word. I am in favor of this amendment and I hope the Convention will do something for the poor before it adjourns.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODS: Now I move to lay the amendment offered by Mr. Harris, exempting bonds, on the table and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 63, nays 50, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. RILEY: I move to amend Proposal No. 170 as follows:

Strike out of line 10 the words "the state of Ohio or of,".

Mr. RILEY: This amendment eliminates state bonds from taxation. I can hardly conceive how any member could feel that we should issue state bonds for good roads or for any other purpose and then turn around and tax them. State bonds are something that every taxpayer is interested in according to the amount of property he owns. It is as absurd to tax state bonds as it would be to pass a proposal to put this state house on the tax duplicate for taxation.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is not the difference between taxing state property and taxing state bonds this, that the $50,000,000 of bonds issued for good roads, if they are not taxed, offer a channel or medium by which the people who do not want to pay their taxes can take advantage to the extent of $50,000,000?

Mr. RILEY: My answer to that is that the chances are ten to one that we will get a better rate on those bonds, and it is absurd to tax our own obligations.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Does not the argument that has been so carefully put forward by the Convention that, in the event you issue $50,000,000 of exempt state bonds, the bankers will use them to trade with people to allow them to escape from taxation, have no effect when we know that there are hundreds of millions of United States bonds which the same bankers will use and which the people of Ohio can use in the same manner as it is intimated here they will use the state bonds?

Mr. RILEY: I think there is nothing in their argument. We exempt under our law all government bonds. We are compelled to do that and I cannot see why we should tax our own state bonds.

Mr. WOODS: We are up against the same proposition. We cannot have the uniform rule and exempt a lot of things. Let us stand for the uniform rule and stand right there. Who is it that has been asking you to exempt bonds from taxation? Just let some one stand up and tell us. Now, gentlemen, let us stand by the uniform rule and not get tolled off into something else; I move that this amendment be laid on the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. STEWART: I move that the amendment to section 10 be laid upon the table and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the Knight amendment, as to whether it shall be laid upon the table, and upon that the yeas and nays have been regularly demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 62, nays 48, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Elson,	Marriott,

Halfhill,	Matthews,	Weybrecht,
Harris, Ashtabula,	Moore,	Wise,
Harris, Hamilton,	Nye,	Mr. President.

So the motion to table prevailed.

Mr. WINN: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 15 strike out the words "of purely public charity", and insert in lieu thereof the words, "used exclusively for charitable purposes."

Mr. WINN: If I may have your attention for just a minute I will explain the importance of this amendment. It will not exempt from taxation any property now taxed, but it will make constitutional some laws enacted by the general assembly exempting certain property from taxation, which laws are now unconstitutional. I will call your attention to three institutions in the city of Springfield, used exclusively for charitable purposes. For thirteen years I was intimately connected with one of them, which was the Pythian Home, at which there are now being kept, housed, clothed and educated at the hands of the members of the order of the state two hundred little boys and girls. Since that institution was established, probably fifteen or sixteen years ago, there had been admitted to that institution probably five or six hundred orphan children. Just out to the right of this institution is the Masonic Home, where old men and old women who are not able to support themselves, and who but for that institution would be public charges, are given a home and all the comforts of life during their old age. Just off to the left of the Pythian Home is the Odd Fellows institution where orphan children, old men and old women are kept. There are other institutions of that sort. I know one in the city of Cleveland, a splendid institution, maintained by the Jews. There are institutions of a similar kind maintained by capitalists and maintained by other civic institutions besides those which I have mentioned.

Mr. MAUCK: Was it not decided by the supreme court under our present constitution that the Little Sisters of the Poor in Cincinnati was an institution purely for public charity and was, therefore, exempt?

Mr. WINN: I hope so; I did not know it.

Mr. MAUCK: I know so.

Mr. WINN: A few years ago the members of these different fraternities and different societies and organizations came before the general assembly and asked the general assembly to pass a law exempting them from taxation, and that law was passed almost unanimously. But I have always had very grave doubts respecting the constitutionality of that law. A committee of these institutions has visited some of the members of this Convention since we have been here and has asked that this be inserted, removing all doubt on the subject. It will not exempt any property from taxation that is now taxed, but it will make constitutional the exemption of all institutions used purely for charitable purposes. I hope the amendment will be agreed to and I hope the agreement will be unanimous.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I offer the following amendment, and I call your attention to the fact again that section 10 as drawn is very defective. It would be a disgrace to this Convention if it went out in this form, so I offer an amendment using identically the same words as the provisions in the sinking fund in the good-roads measure which you have adopted.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out of line 39 the words, "for the payment each", and all of lines 40 and 41 and substitute "for the levying and collection annually by taxation of an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I now offer another amendment which I know will be adopted unanimously because it provides that of all income and inheritance taxes collected by the state not less than fifty per cent shall be returned to the place from which they originated. In other words, if we have to pay income and inheritance taxes, let the state return to our taxing district not less than fifty per cent of these taxes to reduce our burden of taxes. I will state that in Wisconsin the legislature has provided that seventy per cent shall be returned and I have left the legislature a limit of returning not less than fifty per cent to the cities, villages and townships in which the tax originated.

The PRESIDENT: The secretary will read the amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert as section 9 the following:

"Not less than fifty (50) per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originate."

Change present section 9 to section 10 and present section 10 to section 11.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move the previous question.

Mr. WATSON: I wish you would not do that. I have been trying to offer a small amendment for some time.

The PRESIDENT: The previous question is regularly demanded.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the amendment of the member from Hamilton [Mr. HARris] be agreed to? The last amendment offered by Mr. Harris is the amendment in question.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 74, nays 34, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Hahn,	Nye,
Baum,	Halenkamp,	Okey,
Beatty, Wood,	Halfhill,	Partington,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the first amendment of Mr. Harris, of Hamilton.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Would you object to my calling attention to the fact that Mr. Colton indorses that?

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 170—Mr. Worthington, to submit an amendment to article XII, sections 1, 2 and 6, of the constitution, and to add thereto sections to be known as sections 7, 8, 9 and 10.—Taxation of state and municipal bonds, inheritances, incomes, franchises and production of minerals.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

SEC. 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be computed in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

SEC. 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritances, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

Initiative and Referendum.

SEC. 8. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such incomes as may be designated by law; but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 9. Not less than fifty (50) per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originate.

SEC. 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals.

SEC. 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political sub-divisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for the levying and collection annually by taxation of an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

Mr. FACKLER: I move that the Convention recess until seven o'clock p. m.

The motion was lost.

Mr. WOODS: I move that the vote whereby Proposal No. 170 was passed be now reconsidered and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was carried.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move to recess until nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. DOTY: What is the use of recessing?

Mr. ANDERSON: Then I move to adjourn until tomorrow morning at nine o'clock.

Mr. PECK: I move to recess until 7:30 p. m.

Mr. FESS: I understand the motion is to adjourn until nine o'clock and that is debatable.

The PRESIDENT: Yes.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen of the Convention: Let us not get excited; let us have at least an evening session and get rid of the initiative and referendum.

Mr. DOTY: I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on recessing until 7:30 o'clock p. m.

The motion was carried and the Convention recessed until 7:30 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. LAMPSON: I move that three hundred copies of Proposal No. 170 as passed be printed.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Brown, of Lucas, arose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 62, by Mr. Pierce. His name being called, Mr. Brown, of Lucas, voted "aye."

The PRESIDENT: The next order of business is Proposal No. 2, which the secretary will read.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "but" and in lieu thereof insert a comma after the word "representatives" followed by the following:

"the members of which shall be elected by a separate ballot without party designation thereon. The names of all candidates for the senate and house of representatives shall be separate with proper designations for each and shall be alphabetically arranged upon the ballot."

In the same line in the word "the" change the "t" to "T".

In the same line after the word "people" insert ", however,".

Mr. CASSIDY: The legislature in providing for this Constitutional Convention provided for a nonpartisan election. And this provides for nonpartisan elections for members of the general assembly.

A vote being taken the amendment was agreed to on a division by 59 to 33.

Mr. CROSSER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "initiative" in line 17 insert the following: "and the signatures of eight per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose a law".

In line 25 strike out all after the period and strike out all of lines 26 and 27 and substitute the following:

"The initiative petitions, above described, in the case of proposed laws shall have printed across the top thereof, 'Law proposed by initiative petition to be submitted directly to the electors'; or in case of proposed amendments to the constitution 'Amendment to the constitution proposed by initiative petition to be submitted directly to the electors.'"

Mr. DWYER: Do you mean by your amendment to reduce it from twelve to eight per cent?

Mr. CROSSER: No; this is a new proposition entirely.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: When this proposal was before the Convention on its second reading it was my purpose to say a few words on the general principles of the initiative and referendum, but by some parliamentary legerdemain my raucous voice was prevented from annoying you on the subject at all. I feel, however, that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not do everything in my power to secure to the people the right to legislate directly when the occasion and necessity may arise, and therefore I have offered the pending amendment. I shall not, however, undertake to discuss the general principles, but shall confine myself to the principle involved in this amendment and thereby avoid the charge of now harassing you with what one of my newspaper friends referred to as "a perfectly good speech which was placed in cold storage".

I know that there is a disposition at this stage of the Convention's proceedings to rush things and pay little attention to any amendments offered, and I do not blame the members a great deal, but in view of the fact that I did not have an opportunity before to present my case I feel sure that the members will be broad enough and just enough to adopt this form of the initiative if I can present fair and sound reasons for it.

During the former discussion of this measure I was very much amazed and somewhat irritated to hear members of the Convention speaking of their willingness to allow the people to exercise this or that degree of control in the conduct of their government, as if it were the prerogative of any member of this body to say what rights his masters should have in their government, and yet that is exactly the position that delegates have taken. But let us for a moment examine this substitute; this indirect initiative; this will-o'-the-wisp proposition, which seems to put us within the reach of freedom and yet, when we approach it, fades away and leaves us in darkness and despair.

In the first place, instead of doing what all believers in the principle of self-government admit and agree should be done, namely, making government as readily responsive to the wishes of the people as possible, this makes it possible to delay action upon a proposed measure to the extent of three years. Stop and think of it for a moment. Suppose that at any time after ten days before the commencement of the next session of the general assembly the required number of electors should have occasion to propose a law by initiative petition. At the next regular election you cannot submit the proposition to the people, because it was not presented to the legislature prior to ten days before the commencement of the session of the general assembly in that year and it therefore goes over until the next year; but the next year has no session of the general assembly and the measure must go into the third year and wait until the legislature convenes, at which time it must be presented to them for their action, and then if the general assembly disapproves, it goes to an election, thus making practically three years before we can have any action by the people upon a measure proposed by a large number of the voters of the state. That is one reason why the indirect initiative, so called, is objectionable.

A great many arguments advanced for the principle of the initiative and referendum, or what is sometimes called direct legislation, are based upon the psychological effect that the operation of the principle exerts on the mass of voters. It creates greater respect for the law, for the discussion preparatory to the direct action of the voters on a proposition submitted to them is bound to have a beneficial effect.

Any man has more pride in a thing which he has created than in that which someone else has created for him, and therefore, he is more inclined to comply with the terms of that law in the enactment of which his will has been of equal weight with that of every other man.

Another reason why men have more respect for law which has been sanctioned by popular vote is that they know that the will of a real majority of the people is behind that law which gives it its force, and if for no other reason than the mere selfish one that they feel they are outnumbered they are inclined to respect it, which is not usually the case when the law is the result of some legislative action, always more or less the result of machination and tricks.

Another reason why a law which has been passed upon by the people themselves has more weight and therefore is more respected, in other words, is really law, is that the discussion which has gone on before the people, the argument pro and con, is bound to make the citizen understand the law better than he would if it were passed here by the general assembly. He knows the reason for it, and knowing the reason he sees the justice or what is claimed to be justice by the great majority who have approved it.

It will improve public opinion for practically the same reason. After all, law, the only vital law, is simply public opinion. You may write statutes and render great decisions, but if public opinion is not behind them they are just so much dead timber. It is practically a repetition of the same argument to say that where we have direct legislation, where we have responsibility on the part of the people, where we have the people's will expressed in the form of law as the direct initiative would permit it to be, we have the surest bulwark against anarchy and appeal to passion. How many men do you suppose are going to take chances in the violation of law if they know that the great majority of their fellow men have personally expressed their approval of that law instead of giving someone carte blanche to pass such a law without their knowing anything about it?

I do not urge that all laws should be submitted to the people. A great many laws are of minor importance and it makes no difference whether our citizens know the contents of them or not, but where there is a great principle involved, where the law involves some proposition as to which there is a clash of interests, such laws had ten times better be submitted to the people for their direct action and approval or rejection, because in so doing we have had a final settlement of the proposition that is satisfactory, and as long as you try to settle great questions like those relating to taxation and the liquor traffic and many others of similar importance by having agents do it for the people you will find a lurking suspicion in the minds of the majority of the electors of the state that such law is not the will of a majority.

The time of the delegate here expired.

Mr. HURSH: I move that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

The motion was carried.

Mr. CROSSER: Now, just so far as the indirect initiative prevents that result, prevents the focusing of the public mind on vital questions, just so far the beneficial results of the initiative and referendum are lost. In fact, half of the argument heretofore made in support of the initiative and referendum has been based upon the fact that it would be of great educational value to the people, but the chief argument for the indirect initiative is that it prevents practically all measures proposed by petition from going to the people. That is the very object of the indirect initiative. You notice that the men who are absolutely opposed to the principle of the initiative and referendum would accept the indirect initiative. Why? Because they believe it would prevent a great many questions from going to the people for consideration and discussion.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: How can it possibly prevent any law petitioned for by the people from being put up to a vote?

Mr. CROSSER: The gentleman surely knows that the advantage claimed for the indirect initiative is that it would give the legislature a chance to act upon the proposed measure and thus prevent it from going to the people. A moment's reflection will satisfy you that that would be the result.

The opponents of the direct initiative claim that it would cause a flood of legislation and that every crank would be submitting his proposition to the people and having it enacted into law. Of course, that assumes that the great majority of the people are fools and when measures are submitted at an election they will vote for anything that is proposed by petition. That is an assumption which I cannot concede. I claim that the indirect initiative will cause a greater amount of vicious legislation than the direct initiative, for the reason that when there are presented to the legislature petitions containing from sixty to eighty thousand signatures demanding the passage of laws there is a tendency on the part of the legislature or even of the constitutional convention to pass the measure petitioned for under the frequently mistaken notion that the people as a whole demand it. The consequence is that the measure probably would not be submitted to the people; and it would not be submitted unless there should be filed another petition demanding its submission to the electors. I repeat, therefore, that a deluge of bad legislation would result more surely from the indirect initiative than ever from the direct initiative. I have seen much less than twenty thousand signatures come into the legislature in support of propositions which had very little merit in them, but simply because these petitions began to come to the legislature many men voted for the measures, thinking that there was a public demand for them, and they decided to give the public what it wanted. The legislature says, "Oh, yes, it is better to pass this law; we don't dare let it go to the people; it would be a reprimand to us if the people adopt it for we would be considered as having neglected our duties." So I claim that there will be more vicious legislation passed by this indirect initiative than by the direct initiative, because when a proposition must go to the people through the direct initiative the people have no ax to grind; they have no political fortunes at stake. They have nothing but their own best interests to consider, and they will go to the polls untrammelled to register their will as free born American citizens.

"But, oh," say the worshipers of the all-wise legislature, "the indirect initiative makes it possible for us to whip a measure into proper shape before this omniscient body and correct the form," and all that sort of thing. Did it ever occur to those gentlemen that the services of this all-wise body called the legislature would always be at the people's command? If members of the legislature really desire to serve the public unselfishly they have the opportunity to do so as well in an issue before the people as before the legislature. Who will spend $4,000 or $5,000 to procure the necessary petition, running the risk of having it declared invalid for some inaccuracy, when he could go to that omniscient body and humbly inquire whether or not it is correct? "The legislature will whip the measure into proper form!" How gentlemen do like to roll that phrase, that sweet morsel under their tongues. You concede by your argument for the indirect initiative that the legislature should not touch any part of the substance of a proposed law; that the substance should not be changed in the slightest particular, but only the form. I will leave it to any man who has ever been in the general assembly or who has sat through five months of this Constitutional Convention to say whether any amendment of any consequence offered is not usually one which relates to substance rather than form? Be candid, gentlemen; is not that true? Take the taxation proposal. Every amendment offered to it was offered not for the purpose of changing the form but rather to get from the opposition, concessions as to substance. So with the liquor proposal. I cannot remember any proposition coming before the general assembly which did not have amendments offered to it which aimed not at a change of form but at a change in substance. The plan of going to the legislature first is a scheme to change the substance rather than the form and that should not be allowed. Opponents of the direct initiative will admit in argument that the substance should not be changed and claim that they only want to whip the measure into proper form, but a great many more vicious amendments are offered to a bill when it goes before the legislature than there are beneficial ones, and they seldom relate to form only. So as far as that argument is concerned, it amounts to nothing in my opinion and is more of an excuse than an argument.

When they say, "Your plan would require us to vote for every proposition in the form in which it is presented by the petition or not at all." Nothing of the kind. If these worshipers of the legislature are still disposed to procure an opportunity to vote for a somewhat different measure upon the same subject the means are obvious. They can circulate a petition and submit it to the people in competition with the original measure, present their arguments and say, "This is the reason why this proposition should be accepted rather than that." So that your argument that the people have only one proposition to accept or reject is one that vanishes as soon as it is examined.

But in my opinion the great advantage of the operation of the principle of direct legislation is not so much that you can compel the placing of certain laws upon the statute books, but rather the educational advantage to the people that is derived from it. I am not one of those who claim that the people do not make mistakes. They may make mistakes like the legislature. I heard my friend Bigelow make a very clever speech in Cleveland last fall in which he used this argument: "Did you ever see anybody learn to swim by proxy? Did you ever know of any one hiring an agent to learn the carpenter trade for him?" Certainly not. So it is with the question of government; unless governmental problems are brought to the people for their solution you can never expect popular government to be what it should be.

Initiative and Referendum.

When I hear men say that the people are too ignorant to govern themselves I wonder if those men have not thought of the educational advantage in the principle of direct legislation.

Now let us consider for a moment the conference, more odiously called the caucus. I sat here and heard President Bigelow tell the beautiful story about the palace of music. I saw the parallel, which was perfect until he reached one point. I saw the sixty-five men at the Hartman Hotel playing the same tune and I saw the beautiful palace called the initiative and referendum rising high into the clouds, and then I saw that assembly of sixty-five men march down in solid phalanx to this assembly hall and then heard the honorable president playing one tune while a great many members, myself among them, were playing a different tune; and I could not see what had become of that beautiful initiative and referendum palace which we in unison had played up into the atmosphere with our pipes. I consulted other players and found that ours was the tune which had raised the palace at the Hartman. I cannot understand what those men who broke the covenant were thinking about. Personally I have such a dislike for this indirect initiative that I would have liked nothing better than to offer an amendment striking it out of the proposal altogether. It has no place in a bill framed by men who believe in government by the people, but I felt in honor bound to stick by the agreement; I felt that I could not honorably offer an amendment striking out the indirect initiative, but it seems that there were a great many members who did not hold the same view that I have held, and consequently we did not get what I thought we had procured when the compromise was reached and solemnly agreed to. The real basis of the objections to the direct initiative is the objection to all forms of the initiative, and that is that the people are too ignorant to govern.

There was not one man who stood here and opposed this proposition before the Convention who did not expressly or impliedly claim that the people didn't know enough to pass laws themselves. That, gentlemen, has been the last cry of the enemy against every effort of the people at self government; progress and justice. That has been the roar of the tyrant at his helpless subject. That was the reply of King George to the American colonies. That has been the hypocritical whine of special advantage seekers and their nauseous puppets, and that is the masterly explanation now given to the American people by their representatives in council, in legislative halls and congress assembled. Self-government; Declaration of Independence; both wrong! Can the modest, sensible men of this Convention subscribe to such an heresy? No; a thousand times no! Let us begin the rebuke of such an infamous doctrine. Let us speed that bright day when the spirit of equality shall fill every heart; when the Goddess of Justice shall reign supreme in the land; when every man shall pay her homage and when the light of brotherly love shall shine from every eye. Then shall the men assembled in the legislative halls, as the honored counsellors of the whole people, say to the self-seekers and their lackeys who come prowling in the shadows of the capitol with specious pleas for special privilege, "Begone! we have neither power nor wish to give title to what you seek; nor will your offers of reward nor your threats of calamity and destruction avail you. Away! take your cause to our great sovereign, the people; we are but sentinels to warn our masters against invaders of their fair estate." And to the suffering, miserable, humble men who come, followed by weeping wives and clamoring children; to these men who ask only that they may be heard in the forum of mankind as to the theft of their birthright, to them shall legislators say, "Yes, you shall be heard; aye, more, we shall plead your cause before that great jury, the people". Let us continue the war upon oligarchy until the enemy has been routed from every entrenchment and self-government has been established in city, state and nation. The fight will be bitter but,

Courage, then, ye men yet strong;
Gird up your loins, go join the throng,
Battle for freedom, long sung by the muse;
Leave not a foeman, heed no flag of truce.

And when the din of battle's o'er,
And selfish greed shall reign no more,
We'll hasten forth proclaiming then,
"Peace on earth, good will toward men."

Mr. STILWELL: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

First Division. In line 174, after "Ohio" and quotation marks insert "which style shall be an amendment to section 18, article II".

Second Division. At the end of the proposal add the following: "If approved by the electors the foregoing amendment shall go into effect on the first day of October, A. D. 1912."

Mr. STILWELL: I now move the previous question on the pending amendment and the proposal.

Mr. READ: I do not think it is fair to move the previous question on the proposal.

Mr. PECK: Why not?

The PRESIDENT: The motion is regularly made for the previous question.

Mr. DWYER: I demand of the chair to give us our rights. We are not serfs for anybody. We only want our rights from the chair as well as anybody else. What is before you?

The PRESIDENT: The president would like to ask the gentleman from Montgomery [Mr. DWYER] what he would do in the president's place?

Mr. DWYER: Treat all with respect. I will not submit to anything that is unfair.

The PRESIDENT: What would you do if the members make a motion for the previous question?

Mr. DWYER: What is before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall debate close on the pending amendment?"

Mr. DWYER: Who seconded that motion? We have our rights and we will insist on them.

The PRESIDENT: If the members of the Convention do not wish the debate to close, their course is to vote down the motion and not rebuke the president because the motion has been made.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is this motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT: No; a motion for the previous question is not debatable. The question is, "Shall the debate close on the pending amendment?"

The motion was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. STILWELL].

Mr. PETTIT: I move the amendment of the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. STILWELL] be laid upon the table.

Mr. TAGGART: The first clause of that amendment is absolutely necessary. By unanimous consent, I would like to make a statement.

Consent was given.

Mr. TAGGART: Section 18 of article II provides as follows: "The style of the laws of this state shall be, 'Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio.'"

Now, instead of what is proposed by the part of the Stilwell amendment, the proposal before the Convention will read as follows: "The style of all laws submitted by initiative petitions shall be, 'Be it enacted by the people of the state of Ohio,' and the style of all laws of the state shall be, 'Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio,' to make it consistent.

The PRESIDENT: The president does not see how the question can be further divided.

Mr. LAMPSON: Will not the gentleman withdraw the motion to table?

Mr. PETTIT: I will withdraw it if they wish me to.

The PRESIDENT: The motion to table is withdrawn.

Mr. LAMPSON: Now let us have a division; and I call for a vote on the first part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the first part of the amendment be adopted?"

The first division of the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is upon the adoption of the second part of the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT: I now move to table the remaining part of this amendment.

Mr. KING: The yeas and nays on that. That is important.

Mr. FESS: I wish Mr. Pettit would withdraw that.

The PRESIDENT: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PETTIT: My understanding is that whatever we do here in this Convention, whatever amendments we adopt, are not to go into effect, any of them, until the first of January, and why make a difference in this particular proposal?

The PRESIDENT: This is all out of order. The question is, "Shall the motion be tabled?"

The motion to table was lost.

Mr. DOTY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after (X) in line 167 and all the following up to and including the first "be" in line 173, and substitute therefor the following: "first, for the measure proposed by initiative petition, second, for the measure substituted by the general assembly, and, third, against both measures. If the number of votes cast against both measures exceeds the total number of votes cast for both, neither shall prevail; if the total number of votes cast for both exceeds the number cast against both, the measure shall prevail which receives the larger number of votes."

Mr. DOTY: The proposal as framed brings about this situation: It is necessary upon an alternative proposition initiated by the people. They submit alternative propositions with that which comes from the people. They put up the two questions upon the same matter before the people, and the provision in the proposal will require each voter to put two marks to indicate his desire or wish. The amendment I have presented simply makes it necessary for one voter to make one mark to exercise his will, and it has every advantage over the other in simplicity and in making it possible for certainty of votes, so that each elector with a greater degree of certainty registers his vote upon the pending proposition.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do I understand this is your diagram?

Mr. DOTY: This is a diagram which would result from my amendment if adopted: The word, "general assembly" will be there instead of "legislature."

Mr. HOSKINS: Wherein does that differ from the one provided in the proposal?

Mr. DOTY: The one provided in the proposal requires, first, a vote for either measure and then for one or the other, and then there are four places. It is a complicated design and very much more apt to confuse the voter and interfere with his exercise of the right to vote upon the alternative measures.

Mr. KRAMER: According to your proposition fifteen per cent of the voters of the state would carry almost any measure.

Mr. DOTY: That is true with the other, too. The only trouble with the other is that when fifteen or any other per cent try to vote one way a large per cent will make a mistake on account of there being two crosses, which will confuse their judgment, whereas they ought to be compelled to vote only with one cross.

Mr. KRAMER: If six per cent vote for and thirty against either measure and they are divided each equally, fifteen per cent will adopt the law.

Mr. DOTY: There is a difference in that. That is true either way, but under my amendment you get nearer the total vote of those who are trying to vote on the measure.

Mr. KRAMER: I am not quite sure they are the same.

Mr. DOTY: They are the same in their final effect, and the same disparity between majority and minority is there, but what I am trying to do now is to simplify the method of voting so that one mark can do what two does now in the proposal.

Mr. BEYER: If the voter will not place any mark in here, in the first two spaces, that shows he is against both measures, and the last one would not be necessary.

Mr. DOTY: No; under the division of all proposals if he makes no mark he has not voted. He has to make a mark to show that he is against it.

Vice President Fess here took the chair.

Mr. BIGELOW: A word about these amendments.

Initiative and Referendum.

We understand that the indirect initiative which permits a legislature to submit a competing measure requires the voter to say whether or not he wants any change made, and if so, which he prefers, the measure proposed by the initiative petition or the measure preferred by the legislature. This indirect form of initiative is something entirely novel. It has never been tried anywhere. It is called the Wisconsin plan. As a matter of fact it should be called the Ohio plan, because that was the first indirect initiative that was framed in the Ohio legislature, passing both branches of the legislature in 1908. That was borrowed by Wisconsin from Ohio, and that is where Senator LaFollette got it, and it was borrowed from there by California and Massachusetts. It has never been used, and we are without any experience to guide us. I have thought a very great deal about the form of the ballot and talked it over and over again with a good many members of the Convention, and, while I may be wrong, this seems to me to be the fairest and the simplest ballot, and I believe the proposal should be amended in this particular and this form of ballot submitted as the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Dory] suggests.

Now, as to another amendment pending, the one offered by the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. STILWELL]: Do the members understand the purpose of this amendment which came so near being tabled? The president, by remarks before made, must have been thought to be in some sort of conspiracy to choke off discussion; but quite the contrary, the president was shaking in his boots lest discussion should be choked before the members realized the import of the amendment of Mr. Stilwell. What is the purpose? The purpose is this: That this provision for nonpartisan voting may become operative in time for the election this fall, so that the members of the general assembly to be elected this fall may be elected upon a nonpartisan ballot. Now the only reason for the initiative and referendum is the complaint that our legislatures, our general assemblies, have not been constituted of men of probity and ability. And it is a part of the whole struggle for true representative government not only to give the people the power to legislate for themselves, but also to improve the quality of our legislative bodies. I cannot think of anything that would do more than this amendment for a nonpartisan ballot to raise the standard in our general assembly, and to remove the necessity of the use of the initiative and referendum. Why, men are getting into the general assembly from Hamilton county, and it may be true from Cuyahoga county, who would not have a ghost of a chance of ever representing their county in those general assemblies if they had to stand on their own merits, but it is because they hide under some of the rest that they manage to get in here and getting in here, they bring discredit upon representative government. It is because of that sort of thing that we come to see the need of the initiative and referendum. Now the initiative and referendum are not a panacea for everything. It is not a cure-all. We have to improve the quality of our legislation. This is the most important proposal made in this Convention to improve the quality of our general assemblies, and I do hope that if it is a good thing the member from Adams will not insist upon his motion to table, and that nobody will try to choke it off, but that it may be thoroughly discussed. If you believe it is a good thing for future years it is a good thing for this Convention to begin at once this principle of electing men because they are men and to cease voting for roosters and eagles and sending one bunch or the other to the legislature to represent us. Why, members have come to me suggesting that this will antagonize politicians and jeopardize the initiative and referendum; that it is fraught with danger to the initiative and referendum itself, and that we had better put it in some proposal that we are not so solicitous about as we are this initiative and referendum. It does not make much difference to me where it is put; I am not afraid that this nonpartisan proposal will defeat the initiative and referendum. It will draw some fire to it; it will bring a little blister, I admit, but the victory will be worth the struggle. Think what you will gain! We will not only gain, we will not only give the people the whip-hand over the state, but we will give the people a better legislature and give them less cause for wanting to use the whip-hand. Now I feel that this is so important that we can well afford in the interest of progressive government to sacrifice the other amendments that are proposed here. I would be willing to forego the direct initiative. I would be willing to leave the inhibitions, foolish, as I think they are, in the proposal. I would be willing to vote against any other changes than this suggested here and let the proposal stand as it is if you will have the nonpartisan provision in the proposal and make it so that it can go into effect at once. I believe we should hold out before the people of the state that this proposal with the indirect initiative as it stands, and with this change in the ballot and the nonpartisan feature, should go into effect at once, and on that we should win a victory over the combined political organizations of the state, and it will be indeed a victory for all of the people over all of the parties.

Mr. DWYER: I will accept the proposition for my part.

Mr. ANDERSON: In the first place, I wish to direct my remarks to the so-called Cassidy amendment that passed under rapid-fire action, and passed without a large number of the delegates knowing anything with reference to it. Now let us analyze it. In the first place it is a mongrel proposition. It is not nonpartisan. It is about as much nonpartisan as the election of judges. In other words, you have to invoke your party machinery to be nominated. You have to elect the convention. You have your county convention. You have your central conventions under the Cassidy amendment and then after the party selects its candidates it goes on a so-called nonpartisan ticket. Now if we are going to have nonpartisanship let us have it in its purity in the same manner in which delegates to this Convention were chosen, not through the use of party machinery in any way.

Mr. KING: Would not the legislature have full power?

Mr. ANDERSON: I am coming to that. The legislature has full power to act in that particular just the same as it did in regard to us before we came here. You are jeopardizing, and it is radicalism run riot. We are finding at the end of the Convention that which we expected at the beginning and that which the people of Ohio had a right to expect, and oh, how grateful they were that they were mistaken! This Constitutional Convention met here and some weeks after we met you know the sentiment in Ohio was against us. Every one of you knows that, because everywhere you went they were saying, "You can do what you please and we will not ratify it." But sentiment gradually changed and changed because it was not radicalism run riot. Now what are you doing? A great change in the policy has been precipitated in the last three minutes without any discussion for a minute. Premeditatedly, with malice aforethought, the Cassidy amendment—no, not the Cassidy amendment—is rushed through. I sat here in the early part of this Convention when certain people were proposing certain things with reference to the initiative and referendum, and if the initiative and referendum could have assumed human form and exercised its vocal cords it would have said, "Deliver me from my fool friends." And it is true now, and I am preaching now as a true friend, I believe, of the initiative and referendum. But before the Convention met, in Cincinnati, Toledo and elsewhere the cry was, "Don't put the recall in; soft pedal the recall. Let us get the initiative and referendum and after we get that we can get the other reforms." I say to you, you do not need a change in the constitution to get the proposed change for nonpartisan lawmakers, and I say to you any true initiative can put that in there. Why, this splendid proposition of the initiative and referendum the people have come to consider as settled and the people were going to vote for it. Then through that, if you cannot get it through the lawmaking body, get your reform. Oh, but you can't wait. We have asked to be given the initiative and referendum so that we can get the other so-called reforms through the initiative and referendum. Now you can talk as you please about politics and the difference between the boss that is in and the boss that is out, but just take Columbiana county. A democrat has not been elected in that county for fifty years. There are good, respectable decent men in control as leaders of the republican party in Columbiana county who are going to vote for this initiative and referendum. Take some democratic county, and you have bosses there, say good respectable men. Are they going to vote in favor of the initiative and referendum with this attached to it? Certainly not. Then what is the use of setting them over against the thing that is near to our hearts? I appeal to you, gentlemen who have not gone wild, to you friends of the initiative and referendum, to think it over. Think of the conditions in your own county and then vote accordingly. Is there a single solitary delegate that will say this will make votes for the proposal in his county?

Mr. HALENKAMP: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: In Hamilton county? This reformation is too sudden and of too recent growth for me to believe that.

Mr. DWYER: The men who sent out these insulting papers might do something.

Mr. ANDERSON: We have this situation with reference to the initiative and referendum: At certain places certain men have signed for an indirect initiative, signed a printed agreement that they would in no way assist in getting the direct initiative and signed it before the voters voted for them. It is now said there that the man was guilty of false pretenses when he got into office under that and didn't vote for the direct initiative, and those dissatisfied have inspired abusive and coercive articles in that county.

Mr. MAUCK: It is a most mortifying fact, if it be a fact, that a hundred and nineteen members of this Constitutional Convention should have sat here since the ninth day of January last and have never had their attention called to the one paramount question, that is, the preservation of representative government through this nonpartisan abortion that has been hitched upon the initiative and referendum. It is to me a mortifying spectacle that a hundred and nineteen men, presumably inspired by honest motives to do the decent thing by the people of the state of Ohio, should never have had a suggestion made to them until within a few hours of the closing session that this is the one and only way to salvation. You can elect constables upon a partisan ticket, because, of course, great public questions are involved in the election of constables, but when it comes to the only local office that does involve some party principle you deny the right or co-operation. We must elect representatives and senators who in turn elect United State senators who vote according to political platforms of their respective parties, who vote to redistrict the state for congressional purposes, who in every way stand for party principles, only upon an independent ticket, while he who is to serve in the exalted office of township treasurer is to be determined by the people on a partisan ticket! I say it is no less than an outrage that men who have been loyally for the initiative and referendum should be brought in here and confronted with this miserable proposition in the closing hours of this Convention.

Mr. HOSKINS: Gentlemen of the Convention: I do not believe there is any one who has been a member of this Convention who has stood more firmly for the initiative and referendum in its pure form than I have. I came here pledged to a platform of that sort. I sat in a so-called caucus at the Hartman Hotel night after night trying to get a form of initiative and referendum upon which those in this Convention who believe in its principle could unite and carry through. That caucus was criticised far and near because of the attempt to formulate something in the caucus upon which we could all agree. Now I never had such a suggestion made to me. I never heard of any thing like the Cassidy amendment until I stood back of the rail right there and found so many men were standing up here to be counted for the nonpartisan election of members of the legislature. I want to say to you, gentlemen of the Convention, I believe in parties. I do not believe in a hide-bound party that would vote to take everything under all circumstances, but I do know and believe that history teaches us that every great reform in this country has been brought about by parties, and it is only by putting the masses of voters behind the parties that you can assert their will and accomplish any great reform in this country. I want to say to you that you cannot put your hand upon a single instance in history where reform has been accomplished except through the medium of a party. You may preach independence all you please and nonpartisanship all you please, but after all there is only one way to express your sentiment and that is through the party. Through the individual, no matter how strong the individual is, you cannot bring about reform. It is only when you centralize efforts and thoughts into party consideration and put them into a party platform and carry it through by party measures that you have accomplished any great reform. Just as the gentleman from Gallia [Mr. MAUCK] says, you can elect your constables on a nonpartisan ticket, but when you come to the consideration of democratic doctrine and republican doctrine or socialistic doctrine you can only express it through a party; and you socialists of all men cannot vote for this, because you cannot vote for anything that your party management has not indorsed.

Now I want to give you initiative and referendum men a warning. We have stood with you on that fight. It is the one proposition in all this Convention in which I am most deeply interested, and you have stabbed us in the back with an amendment. You have laid the foundation of initiative and referendum before the people, and unless you reverse the action of the Cassidy amendment my best judgment is that the initiative and referendum will be beaten before the people, and I want to warn you. I have as much interest in the initiative and referendum as the gentleman from Cuyahoga or the two gentlemen from Cuyahoga who are presumed to have written the amendment put in here this evening, and I want to warn you that they have not a right to put this up to you.

Mr. CROSSER: I am not included in those two, am I?

Mr. HOSKINS: No, sir; I am for your direct initiative and have stood for it from the beginning and accepted the indirect initiative as the best I could get. I do not believe it is becoming for the gentlemen from Cuyahoga to come in here the last days of the Convention and stab in the back those who have stood with them in the fight, and I want to say to you that you are going to lay the foundation of the defeat of the work of the Convention and the one proposition in which I have been most interested and to which I pledged myself to the people of my county before I came here. I ask you, friends of the initiative and referendum, you members of the caucus down at the Hartman Hotel, if you are going to put this in why didn't you put it in then? If it was such a paramount reform that it overshadowed everything else, why didn't you put it in down there an let us pass upon it there? Oh, no; it was never discussed until the Convention assembled tonight, and now it is a paramount proposition. I say it is unfair, and I move that the vote by which the Cassidy amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. ANDERSON: I second the motion.

The yeas and nays were demanded on the motion.

Mr. BEATTY, of Wood: I never heard of it. I believe in a nonpartisan elected legislature. I have been in the legislature and I have seen some of the very best measures that could be introduced defeated because we were partisan, and so I believe firmly in the nonpartisan election of the members of the general assembly. I heard the same question discussed when we introduced the proposition about the nonpartisan judges. They said the people would defeat the proposition. We saw the same thing right along and we saw it in this house when the republican party was lined up on one side and the democratic party on the other side and whatever the one wanted the other voted against. In Ohio everyone knows that you vote under the rooster and the eagle, but I am willing to do away with the rooster and the eagle and vote for men. I am a firm friend of the initiative and referendum, although I believe in the direct initiative in place of this mongrel indirect initiative. I believe in that firmly; I have advocated it always, but unless you can get a better class of men in the future than you have had in the last five or six years it won't do much good.

Now, I thank you for your kindness and I bid you all good-by.

Mr. WALKER: I want to say a few words about this. I believe with all my heart that the very best piece of work the Convention has done since convening, not even excepting the abolishing of the board of public works, was the work done a few minutes ago in placing this amendment in the initiative and referendum proposal. It was suggested if we would go back to our counties the friends of the initiative and referendum would vote against it because of its incorporation. For one, I shall go back to my county and my people and make a campaign all over the county, and I am confident I can get three times the number of votes for the proposal now since the incorporation of this amendment. We have heard it referred to a hundred times on the floor that it has been an advantage to the state to have a nonpartisan gathering in this Convention. The work of the legislature is identical with the work of this Convention, concerning the interests of the people, and if it is an advantage to have a constitutional convention nonpartisan, it is at least equally so to have the legislature nonpartisan. A legislature that stoops to do work for a political party is betraying the people that has elected it. If I were expecting to be a candidate on a political ticket for some office like governor I might want to have the legislature under my hand that I might whip it into line here and there as I pleased; but if I look at the matter purely from the standpoint of a patriotic citizen of Ohio, I fail to see where we are jeopardizing anybody's interest by asking that our legislature be made nonpartisan. What principle of government is invaded by this proposition? Absolutely none. It will resolve itself into this, that the question will be a question of selecting the best men and partyism will fall. There was a time when parties were needed. They represented great principles, and yet is there a man outside of these one hundred and nineteen men who, if I were to read the platform of the two great political parties respectively and omit therefrom all personal names and allusion purely to party accomplishments of the past, could tell which party platform I was reading?

DELEGATES: I can.

Mr. WALKER: I said outside of these intelligent one hundred and nineteen men. Outside of them who could do it? Today there is a wide difference between republicans and between democrats, wider than between the two parties. There are elements in each party; progressive elements in each party are nearly together. I think partyism has had its day and we are striking its death knell. In the future there may be a necessity for new parties or for party reform, and the people may rally around it and crystallize the idea and make a new government, but we are not face to face with that situation today. This will win a multitude of votes for the initiative and referendum, and I hope that we shall not be stamped by threats that it will jeopardize the initiative and referendum.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. READ: I am a thorough believer in nonpartisanship, but at the same time partyism is crowned by the American people and I recognize that we cannot wipe out party lines at one fell swoop. I have always believed that the initiative and referendum, when it got into full practice, would wipe out party lines; that then the people, instead of rallying under the rooster or under the elephant or under some other sign, would rally under the banner of some principle and stay around that until they made it effective, and then when they got that accomplished they would turn to some other thing. There would then be alignments something like those in this Convention. There has been no true principle that has not resulted in an alignment. You have simply here carried out that nonpartisan idea and have rallied around principles according to your individual opinions, and that is an ideal condition. It would be an ideal system for the state and for the nation, but I think this is an attempt at the present time to force partyism on us. It is too sudden. We do not want to make the initiative and referendum nonpartisan by adopting a nonpartisan proposition, but we want the initiative and referendum itself to make the people nonpartisan and wipe out party lines, and in time it will do it. But do you gentlemen think that we are going to make nonpartisans out of the democrats or republicans who are nominated this fall? I am afraid we are attempting to do too much too suddenly and I hope that we will consider this matter very carefully.

Mr. HALFHILL: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: When the member from Holmes [Mr. WALKER] said in his very able speech a moment ago that this sounded the death knell of partyism in Ohio, he might have said it sounded the death knell of constitutionalism, for such would be the case. I believe political parties are the props and stays of a constitution, and without a constitution and political parties free government does not exist. You talk here about doing away with political parties and what are you trying to accomplish? You are absolutely, either openly or not knowingly, playing directly into the hands of the socialist party, for all of its doctrines aim at the complete democratization of the state. That is the foundation of it all. Here is the very latest authority on that subject, and I will read you an extract that you cannot deny from one of its well-known disciples:

Constitutions, representative government and political parties are thus intimately and indissolubly correlated with each other. They have common origin and together constitute one of the historical phases in the development of our political institutions.

Thus said Hillquit in his diatribe against political parties and constitutions and favoring state socialism by wiping out all political parties and doing away with all political platforms.

So that all you have to look to is the history of our own country. We had no political parties here until after the adoption of the federal constitution, and then they came into immediate existence. It is through them and by their means and their declarations of principles that we have carried forward the purposes of our constitution and worked out our victories under that constitution. What do you vote for? You vote for a representative who represents certain principles crystallized into a platform. You talk about voting under "an eagle" or voting under "a rooster," and you talk about making your legislation better and your congress better by picking out an individual here and there that is not responsible to anything or anybody and stands upon his own platform of principles, something that he publishes for himself. When you vote under your party emblem you vote for a platform of principles, and without that we cannot accomplish anything. We cannot accomplish by individual effort of any man, be he ever so good, the utopian things preached to us here in these speeches—"Utopia," the "nowhere" of the Greeks, the ideal of the socialists.

So, gentlemen of the Convention, I hope you will think this over carefully on the question of reconsideration which is now before you. I know that some of you that believe in the direct form of initiative and referendum, the extreme form, will say that I am no friend of the initiative and referendum, and so far as the direct initiative and referendum is concerned, which is what a lot of you want, I am not a friend of it. I am a friend of the initiative and referendum as it has been argued here by some of these gentlemen who tell you that they are in favor of the initiative and referendum because it will help carry out and bolster up representative government. If it does that, well and good, and I think that that indirect form of the initiative is safe, but I am not in favor of anything reactionary. I am not in favor of the direct initiative, because I believe it is a backward step and a stab at representative government. I am in favor of the initiative and referendum which will help carry into effect representative government and not do away with it. So, gentlemen, I hope when the time comes to vote on this you will take that feature out of the proposal.

Mr. THOMAS: Are you aware of the fact that the Indianapolis convention of socialists did not agree with Mr. Hillquit on that subject?

Mr. HALFHILL: Do you agree with the socialists on that proposition?

Mr. THOMAS: I voted against that proposition.

Mr. HALFHILL: Very well. While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I do not suppose there is a man in this Convention that has a thicker coat of political moss on his back than I have, and yet I am mighty glad to support this amendment. Some of these gentlemen who are afraid the other party is going to be killed, in my judgment along in November, when we need them in the fight, are always absent. I have noticed these fellows throughout the year who are afraid that the party is going to be crucified. When the November days come and you need them in the work they are not there. There is not a more partisan man in this Convention than I am, but I am for this amendment. It will not destroy parties. It will make parties nominate better men. Do you think a party that is in a majority in a county and that puts up a decent man is going to have the man defeated under this system? It is only when the majority party makes a mistake that he will be defeated under this system, and is there a man here who does not think that he should be defeated? There is nothing in this amendment to destroy parties, nothing of the kind. It is a most sensible measure in my opinion, one of the most sensible that has been offered here in the whole history of this Convention and it does not at all destroy parties.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. LAMPSON: If that is not the natural tendency what is the real fact?

Mr. TANNEHILL: To force the parties to nominate good men.

Mr. LAMPSON: After having nominated a good man, why not let those men be upon a party ticket?

Mr. TANNEHILL: Because they ought not to be permitted to force their bad men through by forcing anyone to vote for the whole ticket. That is the policy now.

Mr. LAMPSON: But they are party nominations?

Mr. TANNEHILL: It is a policy now, and you know it as well as I do, that all over the state of Ohio there are men who go to the legislature for both parties who ought not to be there and who would not be there at all if they were not hidden among a lot of other names so that the voters cannot scratch their names easily.

Mr. HOSKINS: Under the present law is it not a fact that every member of the legislature nominated must be nominated by the people of his party and the people constituting his party can be relied upon to select good men?

Mr. TANNEHILL: Wherever you leave that to the people.

Mr. HOSKINS: I live in a county where the people have been doing that ever since I have been voting.

Mr. TANNEHILL: You ought to take your county out of the state. It is too good to be in this state.

Mr. HOSKINS: If you have a corrupt county and a few corrupt voters, do you think it is right to assume that all the rest of the state are just like these corrupt voters?

Mr. TANNEHILL: I have been in other counties than in Morgan county for twenty years and I have gotten to know not only what is going on in Morgan county but in some other counties too.

Mr. HOSKINS: I cannot answer for all the rest of the counties—

Mr. TANNEHILL: I doubt whether you can answer for Auglaize county on this.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Would not the tendency on this nonpartisan ballot for the legislature be to eliminate the densely illiterate white and black and yellow mixed vote?

Mr. TANNEHILL: I think so, and I wish we could do it. And I want to say this to the gentleman from Auglaize: It will not be four years until there will be no roosters or eagles on your tickets. You had better wake up. This is the movement throughout the country. It will just take about four years to wind that up.

Mr. HURSH: I refrained from discussing this question on the second reading of this proposition, but no man who has talked to me in this Convention can question my position upon the initiative and referendum.

I presume I am one of the radicals of this Convention. I am in favor of the direct initiative, and if you will pardon me for being personal, I want to say to you that when I made the race for this position the initiative and referendum were my whole platform, and to me upon the initiative and referendum hang all the laws and the prophets. I would rather see every other measure that the Convention has adopted lost than this one, because this is for the people, and here am I standing and here I shall continue to stand.

As I said before, no one can question my loyalty to the direct initiative and you cannot go too far for me. I will indorse everything that has been said here tonight in favor of a nonpartisan ballot, but I love the initiative and referendum so well that I this minute protest and demand that we do not put the most effective club in the hands of its enemies that can be used to club it to death, and that is by denying the party the right to have their candidates voted for as belonging to a party. I do not propose to put the machinery of both political parties in such shape that it can be used as a club against the initiative and referendum.

We have been told that the legislature has power to provide for a nonpartisan ballot, and I am in favor of a nonpartisan ballot, but I am not in favor of this Cassidy amendment because it is going to tend to defeat the initiative and referendum. I happen to know a little about politics, and while a great many have freed themselves from the shackles of partisanship, I want to assure you that a great big minority—possibly a majority in many counties—yet will follow the dictates of their party organizations, and if it can be shown that they will be worsted in the fight this fall we are jeopardizing this proposition, because some men are so eager for political gain that they will even sacrifice the initiative and referendum. I want the direct initiative. I want all the things that go with it, and as the years go by the friends of the principle can get everything. Some of you do not seem to understand why certain things have been going in certain ways in the last few days and especially during the last primary. Do you not understand that it is not the popularity of certain candidates, that it is not the unpopularity of certain candidates, but that it is this great progressive movement that has gone forward so rapidly? Do you not understand that we have come to the parting of the ways in the principles of government? Do you not begin to realize that the time has come for the renewal of that continuous conflict that has gone on since the dawn of history, in which the privileged and the ruling class on one side and the working class on the other side have been the parties? Do you not understand that the working class that has paid tribute to privilege has risen and is demanding that every man shall receive the full product of his toil? Let us put ourselves in the spirit of the time. I do hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. CROSSER], the direct initiative, will be included in this proposal and I want to warn you as one who loves the initiative and referendum better than every other proposition that has been brought up here and passed through this Convention, while I am for a nonpartisan ticket when the time comes, let us not, in all seriousness, at this immediate time jeopardize this proposition that is worth more to us and will be worth more to us in the future and more to our children and children's children than anything we have done in this Convention. Gentlemen, I appeal to you that we may get this nonpartisan proposition even through the initiative and referendum later, but let us not lay one barrier in the way of preventing the adoption of the latter now.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: If I thought a nonpartisan legislature would injure in the slightest the initiative and referendum I would be against the Cassidy amendment. I feel that the men who are going to vote against the initiative and referendum because of the nonpartisan legislative provision would vote against the initiative and referendum itself. The amendment of Mr. Cassidy provides for an alphabetical arrangement of candidates for the legislature and at the proper time some one ought to offer an amendment similar to the one I hold in my hand to instruct the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology to provide in some way that the names of the candidates may be rotated as our names were when we ran for delegates to this Convention.

Now, Mr. President, the Cassidy amendment simply provides that the people of this state in the future shall vote for men instead of voting for birds, and if there is no one who cares to speak I would to move—

Mr. WOODS: I would like to ask the member from Hamilton a question. Suppose this proposition for a nonpartisan election of members of the general assembly goes into this proposal and the amendment of our friend from Cuyahoga [Mr. CROSSER] providing that this proposal take effect on the first of October is adopted. Explain to this Convention how you the going to make it workable before the general assembly meets? How are you going to get your tickets printed this fall?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton. Frankly, I do not see the necessity of the amendment of the gentleman from Cuyahoga specifying the date when this shall go into effect. It seems to me that if we do not make any provision in regard to the matter it will go into effect upon the date it carries at the polls. This amendment of Mr. Cassidy does not provide anything in regard to nominations or the manner in which the candidate shall be nominated, but simply provides in very simple language, which does not require any legislative provision to carry it into effect, that the ballot drawn up by the election boards in this state must provide that the names shall appear on the ballot without any party designation of any kind.

Mr. ANDERSON: Do you not think that as important a proposition as this should have come in a regular way and gone to a committee and been reported out and then discussed upon the floor of the Convention as other proposals were? Of course, you cannot believe it only came into the minds of certain members now, can you? Do you not think it is dangerous to make such an amendment of the work of the Convention on third reading?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I think the matter should be given thorough consideration, and I hope nobody will move the previous question until everybody is satisfied that he can vote intelligently, but it has been in the minds of many members for a long time that something should be done to provide for a nonpartisan election of county officials. I have been anxious for some provision of this kind to be applied to the judiciary.

Mr. HOSKINS: Was not there an independent propo-sital put in here providing for nonpartisan election of members of the general assembly and did not this Convention vote a good many weeks ago to indefinitely postpone that proposition?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I do not know, but if the gentleman says so I have no doubt it is so. I have no recollection of any committee reporting such a proposal out to this Convention.

Mr. LAMPSON: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I believe I have voted to submit thirty-nine out of the forty-one proposals, and I have been feeling in recent weeks that so far as most of them are concerned I can go home and recommend their adoption to my constituents. I hope that in the closing hours of this Convention we shall not do anything which will change or modify the good reputation which I believe this Convention has been gathering for itself for the past two weeks. I feel that we have been gaining the confidence of the people. And now, right on the eve of the close of the Convention if we inject into our proposals things which have not been discussed and carefully considered, or things which have been discussed and were rejected without fair discussion, and some of them by compromise, as in the case of the direct initiative, and some other things that I might mention, we will adjourn this Convention with a very different atmosphere surrounding it from that which has prevailed up until tonight, and I warn you, gentlemen, against this experimental proposition. Now, without making any charge at all, because my mathematics are always more or less complicated, I want to show you what might happen if the amendment of the gentleman from Cuyahoga is adopted hastily here without consideration in regard to the form of the ballot. You have the slips upon your table and I will ask you to put the number 40 into the first blank and "$10,000,000 for good roads" in the first line. Put 41 into the second place and $50,000,000 for good roads" right here, and put 80 in the third opposite "Against both measures," and see what will be the result of that kind of a vote upon the good-roads proposal to issue bonds. There is first one proposition for $10,000,000 and then a competitive proposition for $50,000,000. The first proposition would receive 40 votes and the competitive proposition would receive 41 votes, and "Against both measures," would receive 80. The result would be that the $50,000,000 proposition with forty-one votes would be adopted, when there would be 120 votes against it.

Mr. DOTY: A hundred and twenty votes against?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: Eighty votes against.

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir. Forty were willing to issue $10,000,000 and no more, and 41 were willing to vote to issue $50,000,000 and 80 were not willing to do it at all. You have a hundred and twenty votes voting against the $50,000,000 proposition and yet 41 votes for the $50,000,000 carries it.

Mr. DOTY: Well, what do you suggest?

Mr. LAMPSON: It is a complicated proposition and I have not figured it out, but I have figured far enough to see that that will not do.

Mr. DOTY: Have you figured the other?

Mr. LAMPSON: It would be the same. You vote for or against both propositions.

Mr. DOTY: You vote twice.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. LAMPSON: I am calling attention to that. I do not think that we should adopt that kind of a proposition hastily, because you cannot get away from that kind of a proposition that 120 have voted against and 41 voted for the $50,000,000 proposition and yet you say that it carried.

Mr. PECK: I very much regret the adoption of this Cassidy amendment. We had, after careful consultation, agreed upon a measure satisfactory to a great majority of the Convention, a measure that we believed would be satisfactory to the people and there are reasons so to believe, as far as we can ascertain the temper of the people on the subject. The initiative and referendum proposal is the greatest and most important subject before the Convention. If this program were properly settled we would not fear to go before the people with something that sooner or later would be satisfactory to everybody who is in favor of that reform, as much so as could be hoped for. But now we have injected into this an entirely new element, something that is not relevant to it, and this proposal nowhere relates to the election of anybody or any man or any official. It is not a measure for that purpose. It is a measure for the purpose of regulating legislation, prescribing the mode in which legislation should be brought about. It is not a measure for the election of officers of any kind, and here we come and inject into it a measure providing a mode of electing members of the general assembly, something that is entirely foreign to the initiative and referendum proposal, something, as the gentleman from Hardin has pointed out, that puts in the hands of the enemy, in view of the peculiar situation existing, a very dangerous weapon which might be the means of destroying the initiative and referendum altogether. I regard it as a very dangerous experiment. I think that this is a situation where all friends of the initiative and referendum should say let well enough alone. Don't tamper with that good proposition, but let it go before the people. The people are satisfied with it and they expect to vote for it. Now you inject in there a new element, foreign to it, suddenly and unexpectedly, an element that interferes with their arrangement for the approaching election, that will enrage all the enemies and all the political organizations in the state and settle them against your proposal, because you have it in the proposal and the only way you can defeat that clause is to defeat the whole proposal. You are endangering everything that we are all so anxious to have adopted. I do not think it is wise or prudent. I do not think any wise political manager would ever go before the people in that way, and I hope this Convention will not, at the last minute, do a thing like this that will injure its greatest work.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It is very easy to see how the wind will blow if this is submitted with the initiative and referendum by observing what the politicians will do under those conditions. Now we have Mr. Lampson, who is a candidate for congressman-at-large; we also have Mr. Anderson, who wants to be governor, and we have the gentleman from Allen, who is a candidate for governor. All of these men have able organizations and these organizations have sub-organizations in every voting precinct in the counties from which they come, and the persons who will vote upon this amendment will do just as they have always done before. They will go to the leader in that particular precinct and say, "How shall we vote?" And he will tell them to vote against the initiative and referendum because of this particular rider on it. I am in favor of it myself, am committed to it and I indorse everything the president said with reference to nonpartisan voting and when this comes up for a vote I will vote in favor of submitting it with the initiative and referendum because I believe in it from principle, but I do doubt the wisdom of it, and therefore I warn you if there is anything that can defeat the initiative and referendum or anything proposed that will go far toward defeating it, it will be this particular thing. There does not seem to be any doubt about it. Now, whenever you propose a change the persons controlling the organizations of political power are going to set their little acolytes to work to influence the voters in every small community against the thing which will tend to dethrone them.

Mr. FACKLER: Will that power of which you speak neutralize itself? In other words, in the counties where there is a minority party, that party and its organization would be just as much in favor of this as the other party would be against.

Mr. ANDERSON: That minority party is never so well organized as the majority party. It will incur the opposition of the party best organized.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I am in favor of it and will vote for it, but I believe it is bad judgment to put it in here now.

Mr. FESS: I, in company with many others who have spoken, believe in a thorough nonpartisan ballot for the good that may result from it. I believe also in taking the emblems off the ticket so that we may be insured a more intelligent vote by the individual voter. I am in favor of reducing the tyranny of the political organizations if possible. I do not think, however, that you can entirely eliminate political parties, for wherever you have a difference of opinion that will always formulate itself in organization, and if difference in political life obtains, it will always show itself in political organization and it makes no difference what sort of government we have. You have political organizations in democratic England. You also have political organizations in governments that are not so democratic. You always have political parties. There is no doubt about that. I would be in favor of reducing the tyranny of political organizations if we can and also increase the intelligence of the individual voters so that they will not be voted as groups. I am in favor of that, but, gentlemen of the Convention, that can be done by the legislature without our jeopardizing anything we have done here. I am afraid, as a friend of this measure and also as one who is interested in getting it in shape to be united upon, that injecting this at this time involves the sure defeat of the initiative and referendum at the polls. I am afraid of it for this reason: This will not be spoken of by the politicians as the initiative and referendum, but will be spoken of by them as an attempt to destroy political parties, and they will go out all over the state and use that argument against it. Now, gentlemen, since we can reach the nonpartisan ballot without putting it in here, why should we do it when it endangers the initiative and referendum question? Why not withhold it and keep it out of this place and save the initiative and referendum principle and then get the nonpartisan ballot later on? It seems to me quite unwise to put it in, and I do hope that you will reconsider the vote by which the Cassidy amendment was carried and do away with it.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. HURSH: Do you think there is any law or vehicle by which we can successfully get a nonpartisan ballot except here?

Mr. FESS: I believe we have discussed this question thoroughly and I call for the previous question on the reconsideration.

Mr. DOTY: And I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 55, nays 51, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hursh,	Okey,
Antrim,	Johnson, Williams,	Partington,
Baum,	Jones,	Peck,

Halenkamp,

So the motion to table was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LAMPSON: I think it is perfectly evident that the amendment of Mr. Doty will not do and I move to lay that on the table.

Mr. DOTY: Mr. Lampson and I have been talking it over and the proposal is just as wrong as my amendment. There will have to be some way worked out different from that either of us has, and I withdraw the amendment so as to make room for amendment.

Mr. FACKLER: I move the previous question on the pending amendments, except the Crosser amendment.

The PRESIDENT: We had three amendments pending and then one was reconsidered; so we have four amendments pending. It seems to me it is proper to receive an amendment to this one that has been reconsidered because that is before the Convention. At any rate the president will so rule and the member from Defiance and the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. THOMAS] both have leave to offer amendments.

Mr. THOMAS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the words in lines 1 and 2 "without party designation thereon" and insert period after the word "ballot" in first line and the following: "To the name of each candidate shall be added in initials the party or political designation as the name appears in the certificate of nomination or nomination papers."

Mr. THOMAS: I am heartily in favor of a separate ballot for the election of legislative candidates. The Massachusetts provision which Mr. Fackler spoke about is a facsimile of what is asked for in my amendment and it covers the proposition.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move that this amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. WINN: I now offer an amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy.

Initiative and Referendum.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the following: "the members shall be elected by a separate ballot without party designation thereon. The names of all candidates for the senate and house of representatives shall be separate with proper designations for each and shall be alphabetically arranged upon the ballot" and in lieu of the words so stricken out insert the following: "Members of both branches of the general assembly shall be elected upon a separate ballot without party designation thereon, and such ballot shall be prepared and printed as follows: The number of ballots to be printed for any county shall be divided by the number of candidates for members of the house of representatives or of the senate, as the case may be, and the quotient so obtained shall be the number of ballots in each series of ballots to be printed. The names of candidates for members of the house of representatives and for members of the senate shall be arranged as to each in alphabetical order and the first series of ballots printed. Then the first name shall be placed last and the next series printed, and the process shall be repeated in the same manner until each name shall have been first. These ballots shall then be combined in tablets, those containing the candidates for members of the house of representatives separate from those containing the names of candidates for the senate with no two of the same order of names together except where there is but one candidate."

Mr. WINN: This paper was prepared while debate was going on, but is practically a copy of the statute calling into existence this Convention and providing for the manner in which the names shall appear upon the ballot. I have attempted to change the words sufficiently only to make it applicable to members of the general assembly instead of the members of the constitutional convention, and it provides that the names shall be changed in their position so that each candidate will appear part of the time on each part of the ballot.

Mr. ELSON: How about nominations?

Mr. WINN: I am not dealing with nominations.

Mr. ELSON: How about the number of candidates?

Mr. WINN: I am not thinking about that.

Mr. ELSON: Is there any limit to the number?

Mr. WINN: No.

Mr. WOODS: I am against this proposition in this shape and I want to tell you why. I tried in the legislature several years to take the circles and emblems off the ballots and they ought to be taken off. I do not believe in voting a ticket with an eagle on it or a rooster on it. I would make the voter go down the line and mark every man he wanted to vote for. But now just stop for a minute and think what you are doing. We have a whole volume of election laws in Ohio. You cannot put anything like this into the constitution without so balling up the whole election laws that we won't know where we are this fall. You cannot provide for something like this in our constitution without knocking out a whole lot of sections of the statutes. If you put this proposition into the constitution and it is ratified by the people I want to say to you the governor of this state will have to call the general assembly in extra session before you can have an election this fall. If you take time to look at the election laws and see what we are doing to them you will not consider doing this thing. It is simply ridiculous. It is just like changing the penalty for murder. You cannot do that without balling up our criminal statutes. You cannot change this without making unconstitutional a lot of election statutes now on the books. Now you may think this is a laughing matter, but it is not. It is a serious matter. We are going to have an election in the fall. There are one and a half million people here who want to have a chance to go to the polls and vote for Theodore Roosevelt. Now another thing. What is the use of mixing this up with your initiative and referendum? You ought not to mix this subject up with that. If this proposition is to be submitted it ought to be submitted separately and not mixed up with any other. You cannot afford to mix it up. You are going to have a whole lot of politicians against you if you do. I tried in the legislature to get these circles and emblems taken off and I didn't have any more chance than a snowball in hades. You have an opportunity to get the initiative and referendum now, and if you are wise you will not mix that up with this proposition.

Mr. HALFHILL: I would like to know if the member from Medina is now announcing his platform as congressman-at-large?

Mr. WOODS: No; I am not.

Mr. ANDERSON: I want to call attention of the friends of the initiative and referendum to the confusion they were in when they were voting for this amendment. Such advocates of the initiative and referendum as Mr. Crites, who for years and years has been going around over Ohio preaching the benefits of the great reform that will come through the initiative and referendum, and then my friend Judge King over there, another strong advocate of representative government, and then another strong advocate of the initiative and referendum, my friend from the suburbs of Youngstown, Judge Kerr—

Mr. NORRIS: Do you think that ten members of this Convention believe that you are sincere?

Mr. ANDERSON: It is hard for me to say what men think, but I can tell how they vote when they vote, and I want to say in all seriousness that the votes that I have registered have not been induced by politics or any idea of politics, and I appeal to members of the Convention if that is not true. I have not sidestepped anything, and I have not tried to get out of the way of any issue. I have stood here and told what I honestly believe, and I have let matters take care of themselves. Nothing that I have done has been induced by any hope of political preferment. I am in favor of the initiative and referendum, but I cannot be in favor of this proposition injected here at the last minute. I think it is a stab at the initiative and referendum, and I think it will injure the proposal. I voted to reconsider it. I think this amendment is worse than the calico patch referred to by my friend Stevens, and that I am right is indicated by the votes of the strong advocates of the initiative and referendum.

Mr. Anderson yielded the floor for a motion to recess.

On motion of Mr. Watson the Convention recessed until tomorrow morning at nine o'clock.

SEVENTH-EIGHTH DAY

(LEGISLATIVE DAY OF MAY 28)

MORNING SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, May 29, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move a call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT: A call of the Convention is demanded. The sergeant-at-arms will close the door and the secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Beatty, Wood,	Harris, Hamilton,	Price,
Bowdle,	Johnson, Madison,	Rorick,
Brown, Lucas,	Leslie,	Shaw,
Cody,	Marriott,	Smith, Geauga,
Crites,	Miller, Crawford,	Stokes,
Elson,	Norris,	Tallman,
FitzSimons,	Partington,	Worthington,
Harris, Ashtabula,	Peck,

The president announced that ninety-six members had answered to their names.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was carried.

Mr. ANDERSON: Those of you who are opposed to the principles of the initiative and referendum and are voting with the mistaken friends of the initiative and referendum, had better take consideration of this fact, that if this amendment of Mr. Cassidy and the amendment of Mr. Stilwell became parts of the proposed organic law of Ohio, measures in which you are interested will receive thousands and thousands votes less than otherwise. In other words you jeopardize our whole work. Therefore, you had better pause and consider and not be prejudiced to the extent that you forget other things.

Can this go into effect if the amendments carry in October? I know what the other side would say and so do you. It will say that certain members of this Convention now nominated for the position of lawmakers and who are living in communities where they can receive more votes with a party emblem off used this Convention for their own selfish advantage, and who can say then nay? The evidence may be circumstantial, but it is in their favor. Why do we need wait for the constitution we are trying to make, provided it be ratified—why can we not wait a reasonable time for it to go into effect? Why all this haste and why does this question of the election of nonpartisan lawmakers become so paramount at this time? Why was it not so great before certain people were nominated as lawmakers? Why, I presume that some people had read about nonpartisan tickets before they came here. It was not an entirely new subject, and therefore I presume these men will say it is so much needed, it is the great reform and it was in their minds when the Convention convened.

Our friend Stevens told you about the calico patch on the broadcloth trousers. Take your books and try to read this proposed amendment into the proposal and see how it fits. It is a monstrosity. It is worse than a calico patch. Some of you are voting in favor of it because you are in favor of it in the abstract, but you forget its application. I am in favor of it in the abstract, but I am not in favor of putting it in at this time and under these circumstances. What did Judge Peck tell you yesterday? He told you it had no place here, that this was not on the subject of primaries. This deals entirely with a different function of government and your answer is: "Oh, we didn't get it in before, let us put it in here because this is our only opportunity." If this be a good thing, and if it is agreed that the people all over the country are crying for it, how easy it is to obtain it through the initiative and referendum later on, and if we have the awakened conscience all over Ohio that has been so well described to us then I want to say to you that the awakened will send men to the house of representatives and to the senate who will enact this kind of a law, because a statutory law can be made complete and effective in bringing about this reform. It may be that by reason of an exaggerated idea of one's self we may think because our names as candidates for representatives and senators have to be placed on a ticket with an eagle or a rooster that we couldn't be elected, but if we can remove the eagle and the rooster from the ticket we can be elected. It may be a needed reform that will be brought in October; otherwise dire consequences might come to our grand old state of Ohio—one man might not be a law-maker and one man might not be speaker of the house; therefore, it is better that one man be elected than that the initiative and referendum become the law of Ohio, better that one man be promoted to the highest place in the state of Ohio than it is to get the initiative and referendum, for which we have been working, oh, so many years, becoming an accomplished fact. From that viewpoint there is a needed reform. Men, do not let us put ourselves in the position that we may be criticised through the press for having used this position for personal selfish ends. I move that the Cassidy amendment and the Winn amendment and the Stilwell amendment be laid on the table and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOTY: I demand a call of the Convention. There are only ninety-six here and you make a fifteen minute speech and then move to table.

The PRESIDENT: A call of the Convention is demanded. The sergeant-at-arms will close the doors and the secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Beatty, Wood,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Rorick,
Brown, Lucas,	Henderson,	Stokes,
Cody,	Leslie,	Tallman,
Crites,	Marriott,	Worthington,
FitzSimons,	Partington,

The president announced that one hundred five members had answered to their names.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. DOTY: I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the three separate amendments be laid on the table?

Mr. ANDERSON: Some delegates came to me and said that they would prefer that the Stilwell amendment be not included in my motion and that the Cassidy and Winn amendments be tabled, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the Stilwell amendment from my motion.

The PRESIDENT: Does the member include in his motion only two other amendments?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I rise to a question of personal privilege. In the debate last evening Mr. Hoskins asked me if I did not know that this question on nonpartisan members of the legislature had been brought up and considered and finally laid on the table earlier in the session. I did not know that at that time.

Mr. ANDERSON: A point of order. You cannot get up here and argue under a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I was explaining my answer last night.

The PRESIDENT: The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I am making no arguments—

The PRESIDENT: The point is well taken.

Mr. DOTY: If the member from Mahoning withdraws his motion so that I can make a statement I think we can clear this matter. It appears that we have gotten into a tangle and that some think it wise when you are on a reform matter to do all the reforming you can, and others think it wise to have safeguards. It appears better perhaps to consent to the withdrawal or laying upon the table of the Cassidy and Winn amendments at this time, serving notice on you that we shall attempt to submit to the people this or some other later. This particular reform is of more importance than the initiative and referendum in many features. I therefore say that, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote for the motion of the member from Mahoning to lay the Winn and Cassidy amendments upon the table.

Mr. CASSIDY: By leave of my second I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DOTY: Mr. Winn must withdraw his first.

Mr. ANDERSON: If there is unanimous consent and an understanding that all amendments be withdrawn I will withdraw my motion to table.

Mr. WINN: With the permission of the Convention I am glad to withdraw my amendment offered last night.

Mr. CASSIDY: Now I will withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT: So the question is on the adoption of the amendment of the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. STILWELL].

Mr. STILWELL: With the permission of the Convention I would like to withdraw my amendment.

The permission was given.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. HALFHILL: I have an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the period at end of line 101, insert semi-colon and add the following words: "or to directly submit an amendment to the constitution authorizing an exercise of any powers or the passing of any law inhibited by this section."

Mr. HALFHILL: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: When this matter came up for the second reading and we had before us what we called the middle-of-the-road compromise and it was laid upon our desks here at the end of two or three strenuous days of discussion, upon a hurried examination I discovered what was apparent upon even a cursory examination, that in that compromise the people who had been contending for the inhibition against the direct establishment of the single tax in Ohio had been compromised clear out of the running; and at that time I offered an amendment which is in substance this amendment, though not exactly so, in which I proposed to the Convention that instead of doing the foolish thing of putting in an inhibition against statutory law it really proceed to close the door and put something into the constitution that meant something. In other words, I did not propose, as far as I was personally concerned, to sit here in this Convention without some attempt to properly fight to the finish what I had seriously and earnestly contended against, the single tax. At the time we had the assistance of forty-two members and we had to vote against all the rest of the Convention. Now, gentlemen of the Convention, I want you to consider what you did with reference to this section when it was brought in here. What did you do with reference to my amendment when I proposed it on second reading, and then let us see, in the light of what you have done in this Convention, whether or not you will be consistent and support this amendment and put it into the constitution, or whether or not you will be compromised out of the fruits of what ought to have been a victory at the time of the second reading of this proposal?

Mr. KING: The adoption of your amendment with the provision in the proposal would prevent the submission of a constitutional amendment authorizing the classification of property or interfering with it afterwards if hereafter presented.

Mr. HALFHILL: I shall explain that. The question of classification of property and the single tax are separate and independent propositions. The classification of property is as old as government itself. It has been tried and found to work effectively in nearly all civilized governments. It has obtained for scores of years in all civilized countries of the earth, save in the state of Ohio and a few other states. It has existed from the foundation of the Union in several of the more important states. Single tax is a matter of recent growth, comparatively speaking, a philosophy created and put into existence by Henry George and carried forward by such disciples as Joseph Fels. They are separate and distinct propositions. And I repudiate the statement made that because I am in favor of the classification of property that I have therefore taken the first step in favor of the single tax. They are separate and independent propositions, but it is true that upon the generic statement of classification there came in the vote taken on the question a coalition or rather a combination of those singletaxers and those who advocated the classification of property.

Initiative and Referendum.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DOTY: I move that this amendment be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded; taken, and resulted—yeas 69, nays 45, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harbarger,	Peck,
Baum,	Harris, Hamilton,	Pierce,
Beyer,	Harter, Huron,	Read,
Bowdle,	Henderson,	Redington,
Brown, Highland,	Hoffman,	Rockel,
Cassidy,	Hoskins,	Roehm,
Cordes,	Hursh,	Shaffer,
Crites,	Johnson, Williams,	Shaw,
Crosser,	Kehoe,	Smith, Hamilton,
Davio,	Keller,	Solether,
DeFrees,	Kilpatrick,	Stamm,
Donahey,	Knight,	Stevens,
Doty,	Kunkel,	Stilwell,
Dunn,	Lambert,	Stokes,
Earnhart,	Leete,	Tetlow,
Evans,	Leslie,	Thomas,
Fackler,	Ludey,	Ulmer,
Farrell,	Malin,	Wagner,
Fess,	Marshall,	Walker,
FitzSimons,	Mauck,	Watson,
Fox,	Miller, Crawford,	Winn,
Hahn,	Moore,	Wise,
Halenkamp,	Okey,	Mr. President.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Antrim,	Halfhill,	Norris,
Beatty, Morrow,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Nye,
Brattain,	Harter, Stark,	Partington,
Brown, Pike,	Holtz,	Peters,
Campbell,	Jones,	Pettit,
Cody,	Kerr,	Price,
Collett,	King,	Riley,
Colton,	Kramer,	Rorick,
Cunningham,	Lampson,	Smith, Geauga,
Dunlap,	Longstreth,	Stalter,
Dwyer,	Marriott,	Stewart,
Eby,	McClelland,	Taggart,
Elson,	Matthews,	Tannehill,
Farnsworth,	Miller, Fairfield,	Weybrecht,
Fluke,	Miler, Ottawa,	Woods.

So the amendment was tabled.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 166 strike out all after the word "express" and all of lines 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172 and 173 to the period and substitute "an affirmative or negative vote upon each law or proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution."

Mr. LAMPSON: This is to straighten up the matter we had last night. If you turn back to page 3, line 60, you will find this language in the proposal:

If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of an amendment to the constitution, shall be the amendment to the constitution.

That covers substantially the same question there. Now I will ask the secretary to read my amendment in the proposal where it would come, beginning back in line 164 with the word "When".

The secretary read as follows:

When competing laws or competing amendments to the constitution are submitted to the electors, the ballot shall be so printed that the electors can express an affirmative or a negative vote upon each law or proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution.

Mr. KNIGHT: I want to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that the clause spoken of in lines 61, 62, 63 and 64 is entirely different from this contemplated here.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is true, but it announces the method or principle of determining majorities, and this amendment standing by itself would cover it.

Mr. KNIGHT: Does this amendment permit where two competing measures, one initiated by petition, and a competing measure passed by the general assembly, are submitted alongside of each other—does it permit any voter to vote against both of them by making two marks?

Mr. LAMPSON: I so understand it, and if they both receive a majority then the one which receives the larger affirmative vote would prevail.

Mr. KNIGHT: A man who wants to vote for a measure uses a cross mark, and a man who wants to vote against both measures must make two cross marks?

Mr. LAMPSON: I don't understand it that way.

Mr. DOTY: That is right.

Mr. KNIGHT: If he opposes both measures he must vote twice.

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, and if he wants to vote for both measures he can vote for both, but the one receiving the highest prevails.

Mr. STILWELL: No.

Mr. KNIGHT: It is absurd that a man should have to go to the polls and vote in that way.

Mr. DOTY: He might be allowed to vote for either measure. It would be the same thing. He votes for the one that gets the most votes. The same thing is in the proposal now. It is a Chinese puzzle, I will admit, but this amendment, so far as I know, is all right.

Mr. LAMPSON: To use the same illustration that I used last evening, suppose the legislature submits a proposition to issue $10,000,000 and there is a competing proposition submitted to issue $5,000,000. The voters, under this proposition, could vote for both of those and the one receiving the larger vote would prevail. Every man who wanted the $10,000,000 would naturally, want the $5,000,000 if he couldn't get the $10,000,000, but there would be a lot of voters who did not want the $10,000,000 and whichever got the larger number of affirmative votes would prevail, and those who wanted to vote against them could vote against both.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Take the ones who wanted the $5,000,000, they would never vote for the $10,000,000, but every negative man will cast two votes negatively, but the affirmative people cast only one vote.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. LAMPSON: A negative vote is against each proposition separately. It is the affirmative against the negative, but if both affirmatives have a majority over the negative then the affirmative which has the larger vote will prevail.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Does not that give the negative vote the advantage?

Mr. LAMPSON: No.

Mr. STILWELL: Would you give the negative voter two votes or one?

Mr. LAMPSON: He has to vote against each proposition.

Mr. STILWELL: Would you count that two?

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir; it counts against each proposition.

Mr. STILWELL: Against each proposition?

Mr. LAMPSON: If he negatives the five-million proposition he is against that, and if he negatives the ten-million proposition he is against that, and if he votes for the affirmative five million and for the affirmative ten million, both do not prevail, but the one that has the most votes prevails.

Mr. STILWELL: But on for-or-against bonds, how would you count his vote, two or one?

Mr. LAMPSON: One against each. The proposition is for $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, or against $5,000,000 or $10,000,000.

Mr. STILWELL: That is not fair. It is giving the opposition two votes to one. You are dividing the affirmative vote. Suppose you and Mr. Doty are both for bonds, one for $5,000,000 and the other for $10,000,000, and you so mark your ballot. I am against the $5,000,000 and against the $10,000,000 and my vote negatives your two. That is not fair, and that is what we oppose.

Mr. LAMPSON: You cast one vote on the $5,000,000 proposition—

Mr. STILWELL: Against it.

Mr. LAMPSON: On the proposition in the negative, and you cast another on the $10,000,000 against it.

Mr. STILWELL: Yes, and that negatives your two votes.

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir; it does not.

Mr. STILWELL: Why not?

Mr. LAMPSON: It negatives my vote in the affirmative on the $5,000,000 and also an affirmative on the $10,000,000. Suppose the $10,000,000 was to build a state house and the $5,000,000 was to build a penitentiary—

Mr. STILWELL: But you cannot have that issue.

Mr. LAMPSON: I am using that as an illustration. The same principle prevails so far as voting.

Mr. STILWELL: You can have $10,000,000 to build a state house and $5,000,000 to build a state house, but the other, as you put it, is not a competing measure.

Mr. LAMPSON: It does not change the principle so far as voting.

Mr. STILWELL: Yes, it does. It changes the affirmative vote.

Mr. LAMPSON: The affirmative voter has a right to vote to issue the $10,000,000 and the negative voter has a right to vote against it; the affirmative voter has a right to vote for the issue of the $5,000,000 and the negative voter can vote against it, but both the $5,000,000 and the $10,000,000 can not prevail.

Mr. ANDERSON: Suppose thirty vote for the $10,000,000, fifteen for the $5,000,000 and forty vote no?

Mr. DOTY: They have to divide that up between the negatives. There are two negatives and that must be divided.

Mr. LAMPSON: Take, for illustration, Mr. Anderson's fifteen votes upon $5,000,000 and thirty votes for the $10,000,000. That would be forty-five in all. If twenty votes were cast against the $10,000,000 that would defeat it, and if twenty-five votes were cast against the $5,000,000 as against the ten million—

Mr. STILWELL: As against thirty votes, it is.

Mr. LAMPSON: That would carry.

Mr. STILWELL: That is not what you said in the first place. You said the negative voter had a right to vote no upon both propositions, and you are giving him two votes. You are dividing the affirmative vote, while the negative vote is united.

Mr. DOTY: I say you are not.

Mr. STILWELL: I say you are.

Mr. DOTY: I can show it to you on the blackboard.

[Various members of the Convention here put a number of diagrams and examples on a blackboard. Various statements were made about them by pointing to the different parts of the ballot. The discussion is absolutely unintelligible, meaningless and without point in the absence of the various diagrams and the reporter was directed to omit this part of the discussion.—THE EDITOR.]

Mr. BIGELOW: I have had in mind all along very grave feelings as to this kind of indirect initiative. I am for the direct initiative. I believed all along that this was the correct form of it. I hesitate at this late day to suggest any other form because it is too late to make a radical change in the proposal. But because we are in a tangle about the ballot I think I ought to suggest to the Convention the form of indirect initiative that I think is correct, and then, if the Convention thinks the same, it will save us from this tangle.

Now, with your attention, let me explain what the Wisconsin indirect initiative is and how it differs from this and the advantages of it as compared with this.

The Wisconsin indirect initiative does not provide for the formulation of a bill outside of the legislature and its presentation to the legislature by petition. It provides that a measure to be initiated at all must first originate in the general assembly, just as any other measure must. Now, what there is to the Wisconsin initiative is this: The people outside, after the legislature has done its work, have the right not only to get up a petition against some law that the legislature has passed, but they have a right by petition to require a direct vote upon some measure that the legislature has refused to pass after it has been introduced. They have the right not only to require a direct vote upon a measure that has been presented to the legislature by some member, but they may take that bill in any form that it takes at any stage in the legislative procedure. They may take it exactly as some member has introduced it or with some amendment, and so draft their bill as to have a referendum on any stage. It is nothing but a referendum. Now you see the great advantage of that form of the initiative over this. The trouble with this initiative is this:

Initiative and Referendum.

I think on the whole our legislative assemblies are going to improve and that when measures are presented to the general assembly the general assembly is going to try in good faith to improve them, and if they make any change in them at all, very well. Suppose under the indirect initiative you present something to the legislature. Six per cent of the voters have to present it, sixty thousand electors have presented it. They have been careful in drafting the bill, but it is presented to the legislature and the legislature discovers some very vital mistake in the bill and makes a change and improves it so that every one of the sixty thousand petitioners would be grateful to the legislature for having made the change. They would be glad to have their bill passed, but under this form of the initiative they must nevertheless go to the election and have a popular vote on the question of whether the bill with the mistake—and which they agree is a mistake—shall carry, or whether the other bill of the legislature shall carry. I would suggest a modification the Wisconsin plan. I would suggest that one-half of the percentage required to submit a measure to a popular vote that the measure might be presented to the legislature and then let the people wait and see if the legislature passes it, or if the legislature makes an improvement so that they are satisfied, that is the end of it; but, if they are dissatisfied, if they think that the legislature has been hostile in amendment and has injured the measure, then let them by filing an additional number of signatures, say fifty per cent more, require a popular vote on the measure as they introduced it or in any form that it may have taken. How that would work out practically would be this: If it requires six per cent for a popular vote we could submit to the legislature on three per cent, we could put our bill in the legislative hopper on that and then we would wait and see and if we didn't like what the legislature did we would file the additional three per cent and get a direct vote on it; otherwise we would let it stand. I hesitate to suggest this at this time, but I would suggest that we refer this bill to a special committee with instructions to solve that ballot if they can, and if they cannot solve it to then bring in this other form of the initiative and I so move.

Mr. CROSSER: I do not think there is anything wrong with this ballot. I think the great majority of the men here understand it as plain as noon-day sun. I do not like this eleventh-hour submission of a proposition to be sugar-coated, and I think it will result in confusion worse confounded. I wonder how far we are going with this measure? Pretty soon we will have the proposition eliminated entirely.

Mr. PRICE: What would be the situation if both the $10,000,000 and $5,000,000 carried under the illustrations we have heard?

Mr. CROSSER: The one receiving the highest number of votes prevails, according to the language of the proposition. I think this is really the result of a timid, weak-kneed abandonment of the pledges that we made before the election. Every man here except nine men from Cincinnati pledged themselves to the direct form of the initiative.

Mr. KNIGHT: I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. CROSSER: There are only nine men pledged to anything like this sugar-coated thing.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Are you not aware that Matthew Arnold says that the minority is always right?

Mr. CROSSER: I know there are fifty men who are in favor of the direct initiative and who will not stand for this thing if we can help it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: The motion to refer back is to see if the committee can work out a solution for this proposition.

Mr. CROSSER: I don't think a great majority of us are concerned about the solution. They see this ballot as plain as the nose on your face.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I am greatly concerned.

Mr. STILWELL: I do not think you would doubt my sincerity in this matter?

Mr. CROSSER: Not a bit.

Mr. STILWELL: And yet I disagree with you most seriously.

Mr. BIGELOW: So do I. I think he is wrong.

Mr. CROSSER: I may be a little bit wrong, but I have had sufficient provocation. I know what we started out to do and I know with what we have ended.

Mr. FESS: I do not believe that any form of ballot that has been submitted is free of pretty serious objection, and even with the luminous explanation of the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] it does not clear up what appears to me an undue advantage that might be taken. He says that the voter might vote for both issues of bonds. Gentlemen of the Convention, it is perfectly rational that if the objection to the ballot that I was speaking of is a legitimate one, you have no right to count the negative vote against the sum of the other two votes on the ground that when one voted in the negative he didn't want either, and while he would vote for the one as against the other, he would still prefer the other. I say you do not have any right to sum that up as an affirmative vote. If that is a legitimate objection, I ask you whether the same objection will not lie on the affirmative vote on the first proposition of the member from Ashtabula? This is an important point. When a man goes in there to vote he is not voting on the issue of bonds, as you suggest; he is voting upon the question of issuing this or that amount of bonds. If that is what you are determining he is not going to vote for both of them. He may be opposed to both of them and will vote that way, but he may be in favor of one and not in favor of the other and there is no right to count him as in favor of both simply because he votes for one. In view of the condition this has assumed, I believe the proper thing to do is to refer this matter to a committee with instructions that if they can bring in a satisfactory ballot to do so, and if they cannot let them submit a substitute that will be satisfactory, including the Wisconsin plan or any plan they can devise, and I would suggest that that report should come out at the earliest possible moment so as not to delay us further in this matter.

Mr. BIGELOW: Since I made the motion I want to withdraw it with this explanation, that I think the question of the pending amendment offered by the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. CROSSER] as to whether we want the direct initiative should be settled by this Convention first, because it was not in my mind in suggesting this special committee that that committee should assume to prejudice in the least that issue which is before the Convention, and since there may be a suspicion as to the intention I suggest that my motion be withdrawn and that we vote upon the pending Crosser amendment and then the matter will be clear. I withdraw my motion.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I would like to say a few words because I have not been in conference with any member since the so-called caucus, and I never voted in that caucus but was there simply as a spectator. I have thought from the time this proposition was presented to us with alternate proposals that we could not make a ballot which would be satisfactory, and with all the explanations we have had I do not think we can do so now. Hence I dislike to hear the gentleman from Ashtabula say it will be all right to be reported a certain way. I will say now I don't want to be on that committee, because I feel confident that they can only report in one manner, and that is that we cannot make these competitive proposals satisfactory. I believed it at the start when I voted for this amendment. I am ready and I have never changed my opinion. I do not agree with the explanation of any of these ballots and I do not think they are fair in some respects, but I am against having this committee. I think we should just get out of the difficulty by proceeding at once and discussing and solving the matter right here.

Mr. KILPATRICK: I think we all appreciate the fact now that we want the vote on this question, whether the direct initiative shall go into this proposal, and if we keep on talking for the next six weeks we shall never get any further than we are now. Consequently, I move the previous question on the proposition of putting in the direct initiative.

Mr. FESS: Before you put the previous question, to bring it to a test let me move to table the Crosser amendment.

Mr. DOTY: And on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall debate close upon the Crosser amendment?"

The main question was ordered.

Mr. FESS: We can have the vote just as well directly and I will withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the amendment be adopted?" and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 40, nays 72, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Bowdle,	Halenkamp,	Moore,
Cassidy,	Harbarger,	Okey,
Crosser,	Harter, Huron,	Pierce,
Davio,	Hoffman,	Read,
DeFrees,	Hoskins,	Roehm,

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I move that this question of the ballot be submitted to a special committee.

Mr. DOTY: There have been two amendments proposed to the present proposal and that makes three; one was introduced by the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] and the one in the proposal. Now wouldn't it be well to submit the whole matter to the committee and let them decide?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Limiting the action of the committee to the amendments submitted?

Mr. DOTY: No; everything.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Why not limit the committee to what is before us?

Mr. DOTY: It would be absurd to send out a committee and tell them to bring in what we have got here and not allow them to bring in something better if it is proposed to them.

The PRESIDENT: If the motion prevails the committee will be, including myself, Mr. Stilwell, Mr. Crosser, Mr. Lampson, Mr. Doty, Mr. Knight and Mr. Cassidy.

Mr. HARBARGER: I would like to know who has the floor and by what process you can get the floor?

Mr. DOTY: I have the floor, but I will yield it if the gentleman wishes it.

Mr. HARBARGER: I have been trying to get the floor for some time and the president it seems will not recognize me. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. DOTY: Now I submit an amendment to the proposal. It is the one that I introduced last night.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all after (X) in line 167 and all the following up to and including the first "be" in line 173, and substitute therefor the following: first, for the measure proposed by initiative petition, second, for the measure substituted by the general assembly, and third, against both measures. If the number of votes cast against both measures exceeds the total number of votes cast for both, neither shall prevail; if the total number of votes cast for both exceeds the number cast against both, the measure shall prevail which receives the larger number of votes.

Initiative and Referendum—Registering and Warranting Land Titles.

Mr. STOKES: I offer an amendment.
The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "reserved" in line 181, insert the following: "All ballots cast for or against the initiative and referendum or upon any proposed or competing law or constitutional amendment submitted to the electors for a vote thereon as herein provided, shall be returned by the election officers in separate envelopes to the officers to whom returns of a general election are to be made, who shall preserve said ballots under seal for six months, and if there is no contest involving their use at the expiration of six months, said officers shall destroy the same,"

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I move that the proposal and pending amendments be referred to a special committee.

Mr. RILEY: I move that the whole subject be referred to a special committee.

The motion was carried.

The president appointed the following committee: Messrs. Bigelow, Stilwell, Crosser, Doty, Lampson, Knight and Cassidy.

Mr. CODY: I move to reconsider the vote by which Proposal No. 334 was defeated.

Mr. LEETE: And I move to lay that on the table.

The PRESIDENT: Mr. Jones is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES: Gentlemen: The vote by which this proposal was defeated was fifty-nine to forty-eight. There were a number of absent members and there are also a number of members who voted against the proposal under a misapprehension as to the probable expense involved in the system. I did not on yesterday, in view of the very large vote that the proposal received on second reading, undertake to enter into any extended discussion of the merits of the proposal and I want to ask your indulgence not for that purpose now but for a very brief statement in regard to the proposal.

Mr. ELSON: There is one thing that you should make very clear and that is, if it be optional with counties, how the county will decide to use it? I voted against it yesterday. I was inclined to vote for it, if those things were cleared up.

Mr. JONES: I am obliged for the suggestion and will answer it in the course of my remarks. In the first place, gentlemen of the Convention, this proposal is to leave things to the legislature. It does not provide for any system or any scheme of registering land titles. It just authorizes the legislature to do it. It authorizes the legislature to provide a plan for registering titles. The plan that is usually adopted in jurisdictions where this has been dealt with has been what is known as the Torrens system. It would not necessarily follow that any particular type of the Torrens system or any other system would be adopted in Ohio, although there has never been anything suggested in fifty years since the registration of land titles has been used that has been much of an improvement over the original Torrens system. Right there I desire to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Athens [Mr. ELSON]. The legislature could provide, as in Illinois, that it could be adopted in particular counties on a vote of the people of that county. If a people of any particular county did not want to have it in that county they need not vote for it. The Illinois law was prepared especially with reference to the city of Chicago, because in the great fire all the records of Cook county were destroyed. It therefore happens that the Illinois law has not been adopted in any of the other counties of the state of Illinois because it was prepared especially with reference to Cook county. You could have that feature in Ohio, that it could be adopted by counties on a vote, or you could do it as done in nearly all other jurisdictions, and in those jurisdictions where adopted by the counties you can have it entirely optional with the landowner to come in under the system or not. Nobody has ever been required where the system has been adopted to register titles unless he desired to. It is entirely optional.

Now, in regard to another matter. The main purpose of this system has been to do the very thing that has been urged here as an objection to it. The purpose is to simplify and cheapen and facilitate the means of transferring titles to real estate. Take a farm, and I know the delegates from the country will see the force of the illustration, although it is not necessary for those who have studied it—but if a man comes out to your farm to buy a thousand dollars worth of hogs or sheep or cattle the transaction is closed in ten minutes and the money can be paid and the whole transaction wound up. If the party has any doubt whether there are any liens on the property all he would have to do would be to go to the recorder's office to see if there were any chattel mortgages. On that inspection he could determine everything necessary to close the deal, and so in dealing with any other piece of personal property. If a man owned a note or a bond and wanted to borrow money on it or wanted to borrow money on live stock all he would have to do would be to go to the recorder's office and see if there were any chattel mortgages; but what does a man have to do if he wants to buy a house? It is not possible to close up a deal with regard to any piece of real estate without the assistance of a lawyer. Now what does a lawyer have to do? He has to go to the court house and examine the title and if the party wants to be thoroughly satisfied the lawyer has to examine the title back one hundred years. If an abstract has been made at any time the party may or may not be satisfied with the person who made the abstract, and any prudent man will at least require, unless he is thoroughly acquainted with the man who is selling it, his own attorney to verify the correctness of that abstract. Then he has to have an examination of the abstract to see whether the title shown by the abstract is good, because an abstract doesn't make a title good, but merely states what the title is. The title may be good or bad and it is necessary to have an attorney to examine it to see whether it is good or bad. Now if the attorney goes through the abstract what does he have to do? He has to go and examine for mortgages, mechanics' liens, tax liens, foreign executions and home executions and for pending suits. All of those things have to be looked after and they cannot in the nature of things be looked up by a man not familiar with that work. It necessitates an examination every time a transaction takes place in regard to real estate unless the purchaser just wants to go blindly. The object of this proposal is to cheapen and to facilitate and simplify transactions with reference to real estate, so that two men who want to deal with regard to real estate can go together to the recorder's office and ask him to open the page of the record on which that man's title is registered and let them see it. If they can read, if they have enough intelligence for that, they can in a minute tell whether the man proposing to sell is the owner of the property and has a good title or not, and they can tell if there are any claims against that property, because under this system, wherever adopted, every mortgage and every judgment and every pending suit and every execution, home or foreign, and every tax lien and every mechanic's lien and everything that affects that property is entered upon that one page. It will make the dealing in land property just as simple as would be the selling of a bunch of hogs or sheep or cattle or horses. All you have to do is to go to the recorder's office and ask him to open to the proper page and you can there see everything about the property and anybody who can read can turn to the page and see whether the title is good.

Now complaint has been made that there would be great expense attached to the introduction of the system and especially that it would bear heavily on small owners of land that was not very valuable.

As I have said, the main purpose of the adoption of this reform every place it has been adopted has been to eliminate that expense. Now, how does it do it? A man asks to have his title registered in an addition of a town or city that was originally a one-hundred-acre tract of land. It has been laid off in five hundred lots and one of the parties owning a lot wants to register his title. The matter is referred to a referee and he traces the title back to where the addition was laid out; then he goes back to the government and he finds out whether that title is good, and the court, upon a full hearing, determines that there is a defect back of the man who laid out the addition and that the proper step to take is to clear up that defect and the title is made good. That may involve a little expense in one case but no great expense. In Massachusetts they provide for service in suit by registered letter, which makes it very cheap. After that expense is incurred there are five hundred lots that can be registered at a nominal expense, because the court has already gone over the whole matter. The same thing as to the owner of a small tract of five or ten acres carved out of a larger tract. The first man makes the application and the investigation is made and all defects cleared up, and the next man does not have to go to any considerable expense. There might be ten or twelve or two dozen small owners and the expense to them will be merely nominal, and we need not speculate about what the expense will be for the records show, and they have not been over $25 on an average.

Now, with reference to the guaranty fund. That is provided merely as a safety fund to protect those who may be wrongfully deprived of their property. I have a letter from Massachusetts in which it is said in thirteen years nobody has been compelled to, but they gradually come in and in that thirteen years there has been only seven per cent come under the system; that the guaranty fund has gone up to $163,000 and there has been but one case where there was a draft on the fund, so carefully has that system been administered. You can readily see that after thirteen years of experience it would have the same result in Ohio with a merely nominal fee of one-tenth of one per cent. The legislature, with the facts before it, could say that all that is necessary is a nominal fee of one-tenth of one per cent.

I am interested in this as a reform. I have spent months and months digging into records and much of the success that I have had as a lawyer has been in a special line of real estate law. Consulting my own interest I would make more to continue my work as I have been doing, but I have learned to know the great reform permitted by the adoption of this system. The best evidence that the system is a good one is shown by the fact that it has never been abandoned any place where adopted, and it has been adopted wherever it could be. We adopted it in Ohio in 1896 by a unanimous vote of the senate and 70 to 19 in the house, but that law was declared unconstitutional, and this is an attempt to put the matter in such a state that the legislature can deal with the matter. I hope the matter will be considered and the proposal will pass.

Mr. LEETE: When I first listened to the gentleman upon this question I was rather inclined to favor it. I thought it was a good thing. At that time I had in mind dividing up large tracts of land, thinking that it would probably be a saving, but in most of our districts south of Chillicothe and along the Ohio river there are a good many counties where the land is divided into various small farms. I believe the system if allowed to be worked up by attorneys in those communities would be a great detriment to those small places, and I therefore hope that the motion will not prevail. In large cities, where the land is very valuable, I can concede that it would be an advantage to have it, but in the small counties like mine and the adjacent counties it would be a detriment, and I hope you people will vote it down. I therefore move that the motion be laid on the table.

Mr. PECK: Personally—

The PRESIDENT: A motion to table is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PECK: This is a personal explanation. It has been stated to me that word has gone out that I had opposed this proposal and voted against it. That is a mistake. I am in favor of the proposal.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the motion to table.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 21, nays 79 as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Beatty, Morrow,	Evans,	Miller, Fairfield,

So the motion to table was lost.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: I demand the previous question on the motion to reconsider the vote by which Proposal No. 334 failed to pass.

The main question was ordered.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. NYE: As I said yesterday—

Mr. WINN: I rise to a point of order. The previous question has been ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The previous question has been exhausted.

Mr. NYE: I thought, that this question was finally disposed of yesterday, but if it is not disposed of and if anybody is of a different opinion I desire to be heard further this morning. If the members of this Convention want this Torrens system then I have no objection to their voting for it, but I am personally opposed to it. I think it will impose upon the people of this state an expense, not as taxpayers but as individual property owners, almost if not equal to the amount that you have voted for good roads. The gentleman says that this system of transferring titles would make it very easy. I want to say to you if you can get your title perfected and get a certificate of title under the Torrens system for less than $50 to $100 in an ordinary case, and much more than that in most cases, you can get it for less than I think you will be able to do.

In the first place you have to have a lawyer to file your petition, and in the second place, if there is anyone else claiming a title, you will have to get service of some kind upon everybody that claims title to it. Under our law, passed in 1896, just such a notice is required and I went to the Ohio State Journal and ascertained that the publication of that notice would cost $10 without any description of the property. If you want to fix a scheme of transferring your property and perfecting your title which will help every lawyer in this state then I advise you to pass this proposal, but if you want to have the same way of transferring your title as you have now then I would advise you not to pass it. The gentleman says that any place where they have adopted this scheme, they have never abandoned it. Gentlemen, you cannot abandon it. After you have your records made up that way and after you have conveyed your titles that way you have to let it remain that way and there is no other way to do it. In the first place you have to have special books for the purpose and those will cost the county something, and after you have those books you commence to fix those titles and you change from making deeds to transferring the title and I say the transferring and perfecting of the titles will cost from $50 to $100.

Mr. JONES: Do you not understand that where the Torrens system has been adopted you can go on with making deeds and mortgages the same way as we have if you prefer that to the method provided by the legislature?

Mr. NYE: Not where you use the Torrens system.

Mr. JONES: Yes.

Mr. NYE: Where you use the Torrens system you transfer by this same way after you pay $50 or $1,000 or $5,000 when you get the title correct.

Mr. RORICK: I would ask a question. You talk about the expense of getting a title correct under the Torrens system. No title has to be corrected that is good. When a title is not good do you not have to employ a lawyer and go on to a great big expense in court just the same as under the Torrens system? I have been in the business and I know.

Mr. NYE: If a man has a defect in his title we have a way now for quieting the title, but under the Torrens system everybody has to go into court.

Mr. RORICK: No, sir; if their title is good they do not have to.

Mr. NYE: If you have it perfected under the Torrens system you have to.

Mr. RORICK: Not a bit of it.

Mr. NYE: The Torrens system as provided for in this book covers forty-two pages and one hundred and sixty-eight sections, and you have to go through the entire process there if you have your land registered according to the Torrens system.

Mr. RORICK: Under the Torrens system?

Mr. NYE: Another thing has to be done. You have to pay one-tenth of one per cent of the value of your property when you have your title registered. That goes into a guaranty fund and that fund is provided in every county that adopts this system as a guaranty of the title of every piece of land, and if there is not money enough in that guaranty fund the county, according to this law, has to pay the balance of it. That is what this Massachusetts law provides.

Mr. JONES: There is nothing of that kind in this proposal.

Mr. NYE: I am talking about the Torrens system as adopted by every state that has used it; there is only one Torrens system and you are proposing the Torrens system.

Now I do not care to discuss this. If the people want it I have no objection to them having it. I am a practicing lawyer and I know it will make money for me and for my firm, as it will for every other lawyer in the state where it is adopted, but I want to say to you gentlemen that it will cost the people a large amount of money. Talk about a simple way! I want to say a word about that. We have now a very easy way of transferring land, but you must have a deed and it must be acknowledged and your justices of the peace throughout the state can make deeds and you go to them and you can go to them and transfer your land that way. There is no trouble about it. The gentleman says that you can transfer titles as easy as you can a promissory note. That is one of the faults about it, in my judgment, that there is apt to be more fraud about it. If you get a certificate and have it looked up and someone gets hold of it they may forge your name to that certificate and you could lose your property by that deed.

Here is another thing: The Torrens system is similar throughout all the states. A man has a piece of property and some one files a claim against it, or files a certificate against it, and if the court quiets title in that man's name then if you or some other person has an interest in the property you are precluded from getting the property back. You must bring suit against the person that deprived you of the title, making the treasurer of the county a party to the suit, and then if they cannot get it out of the man that defrauded them out of it they can resort to the county, but they cannot resort to the county until after they have exhausted their claim against the individual who deprived them of it.

Mr. KNIGHT: A question of privilege for a moment: I find that I cannot be here this afternoon and I will be unable to serve on that committee.

Mr. Harris, of Hamilton, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

Mr. MILLER, of Ottawa: I am intensely interested in the passage of this measure and its consideration. I think it is a duty we owe to the coming generations to fix the matter so that the expense that we are under for registering titles will be less than it is. I do not know how it is in the Ohio river counties, but in the northern Ohio counties when we wish to make a land sale or borrow money on land, abstracts of title are required, and the expense we are put to in some locations is immense. I live in a country which once was a part of Huron county. The old titles are recorded in Huron county and every time an abstract of title is required we have to pay a lawyer to go to Huron county to make the proper abstract. I believe every abstract attorney in the state is opposing this measure and I hope the farmer delegates will be for it.

Mr. PETTIT: When you get an abstract once that is all you have to do.

Mr. MILLER, of Ottawa: If I sold my farm the next fellow has to get an abstract too.

Mr. EARNHART: I hope the farmers and home owners of this Convention will study this question a little before the vote. As some of the members of the Convention know, for the last thirty-five years I have been engaged in buying and selling farms and other property, not as a real estate man but as a broker all the time. In all that time I have been forced to give but one abstract in selling property. I never demanded one in buying. The titles are so perfect that it is not necessary. We have in our county, and I think they have in other counties as well, such a system of indexing that anyone with ordinary intelligence can in a few minutes acquaint himself with the condition of a title. Any one must know that there must be considerable expense in regard to this system.

Now it is argued that we do not have to adopt it unless we want to. Suppose something of this kind should be adopted; we know it will entail great expense and it seems to me it is altogether needless. If there were a crying need for it, it would be another thing, but such is not the case in our county and I think it is the same all over the state of Ohio. I know it will be a good thing for the real estate men and the lawyers possibly, but let us look a little for the home owners.

Mr. JONES: A question?

Mr. EARNHART: Just a moment.

Mr. JONES: I want to ask a question.

Mr. EARNHART: I do not oppose the measure because it comes from a certain member of the Convention, but I oppose it because I think it is unnecessary and will work a hardship upon the property owners. I hope that every farm and home owner will study carefully before he votes for this proposal.

Mr. STOKES: I move the previous question on the proposal.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 70, nays 34, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Halenkamp,	Miller, Ottawa,
Antrim,	Halfhill,	Moore,

So the proposal passed as follows:

* Proposal No. 334—Mr. Jones. To submit an amendment by adding section 40 to article II, of the constitution.—Registering and guaranteeing land titles.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and Registering and Warranting Land Titles—Initiative and Referendum.

guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interests in, lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

Mr. JONES: I now move that the vote whereby Proposal No. 334 was passed be reconsidered and I move to lay that motion on the table.

Motion to lay upon the table was carried.

On motion of Mr. Doty the Convention recessed until two o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. READ: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 131:

Resolved, That the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology be instructed in their consideration of Proposal No. 331 to change the word "one" in line 7 to the word "four". The effect of this change will be to have the superintendent of public works appointed for a term of four years instead of one.

Mr. READ: I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution be considered at once.

The motion to suspend the rules was lost and the resolution went over under the rules.

Mr. ANDERSON: I have been requested to ask unanimous consent to take up at this time the question of going to Cincinnati. It is a matter that should be decided one way or the other, and I ask that that resolution be taken up at this time.

The SECRETARY: The committee on Rules has the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON: I ask that the committee on Rules report it out. This is a matter that should be determined now.

Mr. DOTY: As near as can be ciphered out now, it might be possible for this Convention to go to Cincinnati Saturday night. That presupposes the conclusion of work by Saturday noon. We are not in as good shape as we should be to decide that question. If we could let it go until night we would know where we were on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT: The chairman of the special committee wants to make a report.

Mr. STILWELL: Mr. President and Fellow Delegates: The committee was in session about one hour discussing the various forms of ballot that were discussed in the Convention. We fully realize the difficulty of coming to any conclusion upon the matter that will be entirely satisfactory to the Convention. During our discussion a plan to avoid this complication was suggested and informally we got into a discussion of what is familiarly known as the Wisconsin plan of indirect initiative, and the committee has come back to the Convention to ask for some instructions upon this matter. We have agreed among ourselves in the committee that we should ask Mr. Bigelow to explain a little further what is meant by the Wisconsin form of indirect initiative, so that after the explanation we may ask for some instructions in order to find out what the attitude of the delegates may be toward that plan, with the purpose in view of avoiding the complicated form of ballot. So I am going to give way to President Bigelow in order that the plan may be more fully explained.

Mr. FESS: In order to make this perfectly parliamentary, I move you that this committee be instructed to bring in such reports as suggested after explanation from the president.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I want to press the inquiry I made this morning.

Mr. BIGELOW: All of these questions will be answered in the course of the explanation.

As stated this morning, what is suggested here is not absolutely the Wisconsin plan. It is a modification which I will explain. Let me say that the attitude of the committee is this: That the committee is willing to go out and draft this amendment and bring it in for your consideration, but it does not care to do this work unless it has some assurance from you in advance that you would like to have it done.

Now, the plan to be drafted, if you vote for this motion, and which we will report to you in form of an amendment, is this: To initiate a measure under this plan the first step would be that those interested should have the measure drafted and printed in full just as under our present plan. They must get a certain number of signers, as the law may provide, to the petition asking for a direct vote upon this measure. Then they must file this measure with the secretary of state and he, when the legislature meets, transmits it to the legislature. If that bill is passed without change or amendment, then it is the law, unless someone after that gets up a referendum petition against that. Of course, it is subject to referendum. If it passes in a somewhat amended form it may be permitted to go into effect without a popular vote, reserving to the petitioners this right, that if in their judgment they think the amendments incorporated into the bill by the legislature have made the measure objectionable to them, they may on filing an additional number of signatures have a popular vote upon the measure. Now if your percentage required for this form of initiative is six per cent, as in the present measure, then the provision would be that upon filing of a bill with a three-per-cent petition it is placed before the legislature. By that three per cent the attention of the state is called to the fact that here is a measure that may be referred by an additional number of petitioners in case the legislature does not act to the satisfaction of those urging the measure. But this form makes it possible, as our form does not, that if the legislature approves the measure, it may stop there with the legislature, and we need not have the trouble of a vote upon it.

I think I had better possibly right here explain what will happen if the original three per cent of the petitioners are not satisfied with the bill as enacted by the legislature. An additional three per cent will be sent in. If your total per cent required is six, half of that is required to present to the legislature, and another half in addition is necessary to refer—of course, with the understanding that the vote may be had upon the measure as originally presented, or with any amendment incorporated at any time or in any stage of the legislative process.

Mr. FESS: Would that plan obviate the necessity of the competing measure of voting?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes; there would be no competing voting.

Mr. ANDERSON: Would there be under this proposed plan any referendum at all except upon those measures that were first initiated?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes; the referendum applies to everything.

Mr. ANDERSON: First, you have to have a petition signed by three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: That is, before you can initiate at all?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: That is filed at the secretary of state's office?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Afterward, it is sent from there to the lawmaking body while in session. No doubt if the lawmaking body passed that law, or substantially that law, that would end it, provided three per cent more of the petitioners were not obtained to take it on through?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Now, of course, if three per cent signed the petition and the law were passed, that would be subject to referendum, or subject to referendum if six per cent signed it?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON: That would contemplate three different sets of petitioners? The first three per cent, and then if not satisfied another three per cent more, and then if it were not satisfactory a referendum?

Mr. BIGELOW: No, sir; it would require just two. The first three per cent would present it to the legislature, and the next three per cent would get a referendum vote upon the measure passed by the legislature.

Mr. LAMPSON: Suppose the next three per cent asked for a referendum vote; could there be a referendum vote upon it under your provision?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. KING: You said that applied to a bill passed. It applies to a bill that passes or that is defeated?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I want to ask a question in regard to these extra petitioners. When are those signatures secured, before the legislature acts upon it or subsequent to the action of the legislature?

Mr. BIGELOW: It could be so provided that they would have to be procured after action is taken, or it could be provided that they were invalid if there were any duplicates.

Mr. PARTINGTON: It seems to me that if those signatures were secured before the act of the legislature no one would know whether those petitioners desired a referendum vote or not.

Mr. NYE: If you had three per cent of the original petitioners, and the petition was submitted to the legislature, and that three per cent were satisfied with it, could you get another three per cent to have it submitted to the people, or must you have the same three per cent and another three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: Another three per cent. It would take six per cent in all, just as the present method, only you would allow half to propose to the legislature with the chance that the legislature would act satisfactorily and you would not have to vote.

Mr. NYE: If the three per cent originally presented were satisfied with what the legislature did, could another three per cent that was not satisfied with it still refer it to the people?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: By what method is it to be determined that the measure passed by the legislature is satisfactory or is not satisfactory to the first three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: You cannot determine that. The question is, Is it satisfactory to the public? and that is determined by whether or not there is an additional three per cent filed requesting a vote.

Mr. HALFHILL: Is it not possible to create some committee or power which will determine that?

Mr. BIGELOW: No, sir; that is not contemplated in the plan. That has often been suggested and considered, but it has always been set aside on the theory that it would not do to create such an irresponsible power outside to represent anybody and say when measures should or should not be submitted. As it at present exists six per cent are necessary to initiate a measure.

Mr. HALFHILL: Could six per cent be taken up by the circulators of the petition and only three per cent filed and the other three per cent held in reserve?

Mr. BIGELOW: That could be done unless you provided in your measure that the second three per cent must be signed after such and such a date.

Mr. HALFHILL: Is it not entirely possible to frame your petition that each signer would consent to the alternative of permitting his name to be used with the three per cent initiative or the second three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes; that would be a sort of unofficial way of creating power, to say whether or not this thing shall stop in the legislature, its action having been satisfactory, or whether or not it shall go on to the people. The practical way of doing that will be, if they get six per cent instead of three asking for a vote upon some amendment, to hold three per cent and wait and see what the legislature does, filing the other three per cent. In case the action of the legislature is not satisfactory the three per cent that is withheld can be put in for a vote. That can be done if you want to, but you can provide that the dates appear on the second section in such a way as to prevent that being done if you do not think it is advisable.

Mr. HALFHILL: This plan does away entirely with the competing measure in the legislature?

Mr. KING: I want to know why when an individual or collection of individuals, or a society or an association, conceives the idea they want a law passed, they can not name in a petition a committee of three or four or five of the signers, and say in the petition that the undersigned are to be represented and bound by the action of the committee leaving to that committee the determination whether or not the passing of the law by the general assembly has fully carried out the purpose of the petition?

Mr. BIGELOW: The question raises a matter that has many features connected with it, but the reason it has never been proposed, as far as I know, is that it turns over to some three or four or five people the power that should be exercised by the entire public to say whether or not this measure is satisfactory. They have the power to put that on a committee of three or four or five men. That would be possible, but it would subject those men to tremendous temptation.

Mr. HURSH: What concerns me is in regard to the amendment to an initiated law that the legislature might pass. If that law were not satisfactory and the other three per cent were secured and sent to some kind of a referendum, would the entire law passed by the legislature be vitiated?

Mr. BIGELOW: If the votes were for the measure?

Mr. HURSH: Yes.

Mr. BIGELOW: Certainly; the original petition stands. It is part of the measure as a measure, and that may be referred after the action of the legislature is taken.

Mr. HURSH: Then the amendment the legislature might make would not be the law?

Mr. BIGELOW: No.

Mr. WINN: I want to see if I understand the proposition. A proposed statute petitioned for is enacted in some form by the general assembly and that is subject to referendum?

Mr. BIGELOW: Oh, yes.

Mr. WINN: It may be subject to the referendum the same as any other law that passes the general assembly?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. WINN: Suppose the necessary number of petitioners asked for the enactment of some statute and the legislature enacted the statute in a modified form, and three per cent, or whatever per cent may be required, petitions to have it referred. At the same time that three per cent is asking for a referendum upon the action of the general assembly, another three per cent is asking that the original statute petitioned for be referred to the people, and then they both go to the people at the same time, one on the three per cent petitioning for the enactment of the law petitioned for by the people, and another on the referendum of the law passed by the general assembly. What will be the result?

Mr. BIGELOW: In case of a complication of that kind, you would have to have what you have in the proposal now before you—what is in the California and Oregon proposal—that in case two conflicting measures ever at any time be adopted by a direct vote, that measure receiving the larger number shall be the law.

Mr. WINN: It was suggested, if I understand that, assuming that six per cent of the electors might be required to initiate a law, that it might be so arranged that three per cent of them could start the action by the general assembly, and the other three per cent be held back to know whether the action of the general assembly was satisfactory. Would not we then encounter the same objection that is offered to the committee's plan, that somebody must determine whether the action of the general assembly is satisfactory?

Mr. BIGELOW: That is true, but any three per cent in the state could do it.

Mr. WINN: I understand that, but can the three per cent who sign the petition before the law was enacted be used until somebody must determine whether the action of the general assembly was satisfactory? That could only be determined by the application of the first three per cent.

Mr. BIGELOW: No; the first three per cent is effective in that they can present the measure to the legislature, and that is an end of that three per cent.

Mr. WINN: And the other three per cent is only effective in case the legislature fails to enact the law satisfactory to the first three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: No; in case the legislature enacts the law unsatisfactory to anybody. It is a matter up to the public. No three per cent of the people have a monopoly of this.

Mr. WINN: What I am trying to find out is this: Whether or not it would be right to have the names of the petitioners obtained before the law is presented to the general assembly and part of them used as a means of initiating the law and the other part used after the general assembly has acted to get a referendum of the law.

Mr. BIGELOW: That could be framed up either way, according to how you prefer. Of course, the petition must be signed, and you could fix it so that you would have to have an entirely different three per cent obtained after the law was enacted by the legislature, if you wanted to.

Mr. WINN: It seems to me it must be an entirely new three per cent; if not, the whole thing is a farce.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: If three per cent initiates before the legislature and gets a law and are satisfied with it, then can another three per cent file a petition for a referendum?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes, but only on laws that are initiated by petitions.

Mr. ROEHM: What is there wrong about duplicate names provided they are gotten afterwards or supplementary to the petition? Why should not those who initiated have something to say whether or not it be referred, provided their signatures are obtained after the legislature has acted?

Mr. BIGELOW: That is the only trouble that can be raised, that you have not any official way of consulting them.

Mr. ROEHM: Why could not they be eligible to sign a second time?

The PRESIDENT: Oh, I didn't understand. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. HARBARGER: Does that contemplate the initiating of laws only under this plan?

Mr. BIGELOW: No, sir; both laws and constitutional amendments.

Mr. HARBARGER: And it does away with the direct initiative on constitutional amendments?

Mr. BIGELOW: No; it does not propose to touch

Initiative and Referendum—Regulating State Printing.

anything in this proposal except to substitute one indirect initiative for another. Our report would not touch anything else in this proposal, but simply we would bring in the report on the form of indirect initiative which would avoid the ballot complications which we now are confronted with.

Mr. WOODS: I would like to ask why the way to solve this matter is not simply to provide that any bill introduced in the general assembly, say within six months after the general assembly adjourns, may be petitioned for and go on the ballot?

Mr. BIGELOW: I do not see any objection except that when you require petitions of a given number of signatures to be filed with your measure that is presented, you call public attention to that measure, and you restrict the right of initiative to those particular measures. This is a much more safeguarded form of initiative than the one you propose.

Mr. OKEY: As I understand your proposition, the minimum signatures to bring a law before the legislature is three per cent?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. OKEY: Suppose in the first instance four per cent sign the petition—

The PRESIDENT: That would not make any difference. It would require three per cent afterwards just the same.

Mr. OKEY: That was my point.

Mr. PARTINGTON: Referring to what the member from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL] and the member from Erie [Mr. KING] have said in regard to a body to decide the matter of whether the petitioners are satisfied, whether the enacted laws are satisfactory, it would seem to me that the members of the legislature in the minority would be certainly a good committee to act. For instance, a petition has been presented to the legislature asking for a certain law and this law asked for has been changed by that body. The opposition by members of the legislature to the changes, if they were bitterly contested—if these members didn't want the changes made when the votes were taken—there would be a division nearly half and half, and it would seem there is a plain case of dissatisfaction.

Mr. BIGELOW: I do not think we need to open up this question for discussion. Questions are in order, of course, and a motion is before the Convention, and the purpose of this was simply to let the Convention know what they might expect if they instruct us to bring in the amendment.

Mr. HALFHILL: Is not this a result of the proposed plan, that any sort of a measure proposed may go through this channel and eventually be voted upon as a law without anything being done by the legislature?

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes, but with this advantage over the present plan, that if the legislature acts satisfactorily, although they make a change, it does not have to go to a vote at all, whereas, no matter how much the legislature may improve a bill, under our present form you have to have a vote on it.

Mr. HALFHILL: In law all conditions subsequent are looked upon with disfavor. That is a primary proposition. Now all of these conditions are not only subsequent conditions, but there is no way of determining whether definite or indefinite. You say the public is not satisfied. That is so indefinite that it simply means that anybody who started out to submit any kind of a measure can just go on through with it and put it on the ballot. In other words, it goes around, through and above.

Mr. BIGELOW: On the six per cent it would have to go through the legislature.

Mr. HALFHILL: It circumvents the legislature in all respects.

Mr. BIGELOW: No more than the present form. It does the same thing. It goes through in spite of anybody.

Mr. HALFHILL: No, sir; the exception is in the present form, that the legislature can put in a competing measure which goes before the people. Now, in the form proposed any sort of a law framed for any purpose can, by having six per cent and passing through the legislature, go before the people, and the legislature is circumvented in its entirety.

Mr. BIGELOW: No, sir; the legislature has a chance to amend it. It goes into a deliberative assembly for discussion, an official deliberative assembly representing all of the people of the state, the greatest possible publicity, and with all of the advantage of the discussion preceding the action of the people, and also with the advantage which I fancy will occur in a great many cases, when the legislature acts satisfactorily where it approves a measure, everybody would be willing and want to have it stopped with the legislature. Now, why should we have a form of initiative that compels us to vote on a thing that nobody wants to vote on? That is the defect of our present system.

Mr. KING: The question is already saved by the present proposal, that if the three per cent asked for a given law and the legislature passes that law, that ends, of course, the effect of that petition. Of course, those opposed to the law may still go out and get a referendum petition.

Mr. FESS: As I understand the purpose of the whole thing, and I think there is a little confusion here, the work of this committee will be considerable, and they do not care to undertake their work unless instructions are given.

Mr. BIGELOW: Yes.

Mr. FESS: But there is no thought that what the committee does is final—it comes back here and everything is open to discussion on the floor?

Mr. BIGELOW: Certainly.

Mr. FESS: I think the members are confused. Now let it go to the committee.

Mr. STOKES: I move the previous question on this matter.

The main question was ordered.

The motion was carried.

Mr. LAMPSON: Now what is before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT: We will proceed to the reading of Proposal No. 261.

Vice President Fess here took the chair.

Proposal No. 261—Mr. Halenkamp was read the third time.

Mr. ELSON: The other day there was some discussion of this matter and it seemed to be understood or inferred that if this proposal passed in the form in which it is now it would preclude the use of the present printed matter in the state offices generally, a thing which we do not wish to tie ourselves down to.

Regulating State Printing—Methods of Submitting Amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. THOMAS: I would answer that emphatically, no! That proposal reads plainly that the state may do its own printing in a manner as may be provided by law.

Mr. ELSON: In the present form?

Mr. THOMAS: It may do it in any manner or form it sees fit.

The VICE PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 102, nays none, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 261—Mr. Halenkamp, to submit an amendment to article XV, section 2 of the constitution.—Regulating state printing.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

The PRESIDENT: The next proposal is Proposal No. 309 which the secretary will read.

The proposal was read the third time.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all of sections 2 and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly shall be of the opinion that this constitution should be revised, altered or amended, they shall recommend to the electors of the state to vote, at a general or special election, for or against the appointment of a commission for that purpose; and if a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor thereof, the governor of the state shall, within sixty days thereafter, appoint a commission of fifteen citizens of the state, the members of which shall meet, within thirty days thereafter, at the seat of government, for the purpose aforesaid. No revision, alteration or amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by such commission shall take effect until the same has been submitted to the electors of the state at a general or special election upon a day to be fixed by such commission and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

SEC. 3. The general assembly shall provide by law the method of submitting the question "Shall there be a commission to revise, alter or amend the constitution?"; and the method of submitting the work of such commission to the electors for adoption or rejection.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Gentlemen of the Convention, I am sure I have no disposition to delay the business of the Convention by any extended statement of the amendment which I have offered. It is shown, I apprehend, that early in the work of the Convention I offered a proposal substantially as the amendment I offer, in article XVI, section 2. The proposal there referred to the time or manner of amending the constitution, and I was treated with the utmost courtesy by the chairman of the committee by being given the privilege of appearing before the committee to make a statement. I was not present in the Convention when the proposed amendment was reported and voted upon at the second reading. I am therefore ignorant of the reasons offered or given to the Convention why this proposal should be adopted. Have the gentlemen of the Convention considered what is proposed in the Taggart proposal now under consideration? What changes does it make in article XVI, sections 1, 2 and 3, of the present constitution? If the members will compare it with article XVI, and it is very short, you will find that there are but three very minor, and I think unnecessary, changes in the section as it now stands. One is a provision for a nonpartisan ballot. I am not seeking to change section 1 of Judge Taggart's proposal. I am leaving section 1 just as the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has left it. The only change in that section, as you will observe, is that it provides for the election of delegates to a future constitutional convention upon a nonpartisan ballot and without party emblem, and it changes the time from six months' publication to, I believe, eight weeks. Now, I appeal to you, gentlemen of the Convention, whether or not the changes are necessary. You go to section 2 of the proposal and the only changes there in our present constitution is the provision that the delegates shall be nominated by petition and elected upon a nonpartisan ballot. There is not a delegate in this Convention who was not nominated by petition and elected upon a nonpartisan ballot without an emblem. Therefore, where is the necessity for this change? I am opposed to the proposal, especially sections 2 and 3, first, because the language of the present constitution is changed wherein it provides the convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives. The language of the present constitution says they shall be chosen in the same manner as members of the house of representatives. This proposal changes that manner and uses the following language: "As provided by law." I do not know that that would make it possible to elect every member of the constitutional convention from one county or not, but why that change, "As provided by law"?

Now, gentlemen of the Convention, I insist that this proposal does not change our present constitution in such a way that it makes it necessary to submit a proposal to the people. Let me have your attention just a moment. I recognize the fact that up to this time every proposal that has passed the second reading has been adopted upon the third reading, and with all deference to my splendid friend Judge Taggart, who is the author of this proposal, and I have no complaint to make that my child that went into the committee came out with new clothing on it—I say that there is no occasion for this proposal. I call the attention of the delegates to what the Constitutional Convention is going to cost the state of Ohio. I insist that there never will be an occasion for another constitutional convention in this state. With section 1 left in the constitution as it is left in Judge Taggart's proposal, which leaves the liberty in the general assembly to provide amendments for the constitution and to submit them to the people, why do we want another constitutional convention composed of one hundred and nineteen or one hundred and twenty men, as the case may be, from the different counties of the state when we have the initiative and referendum, through which the people may amend the constitution?

Now let me direct your attention just for a moment to another matter. For this Convention $200,000 has been appropriated. I hold in my hand the cost to the people of the state of the submission, merely the publication of the proposals, not to include the expense of the election, or the machinery of the election. In 1875 there were two proposals submitted to the people of the state, and the publication in the newspapers of those two amendments cost the people $21,170.37. In 1877 there was one proposal submitted to the people of the state, and the cost of publishing that proposal for the vote of the people, without including the other expenses of the election, amounted to $38,471. Now, gentlemen of the Convention, if the publication of one proposal in 1877 cost the people $38,471, what will forty-two proposals cost them as a result of this Convention? I have made a little calculation, and assuming that these proposals will average with that one in 1877, the forty-two proposals will cost $1,500,000.

Mr. STOKES: This proposal does not refer to the amendment that we are passing now, does it? This has reference to future amendments to the constitution—

Mr. MARRIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STOKES: And has no reference to the forty-two we expect to put before the people now?

Mr. MARRIOTT: I agree with the distinguished gentleman that it has no reference, but I am illustrating the force of my statement. I do not believe there is a necessity, or ever will be, for another constitutional convention to cost the people of this state $2,000,000, which will be the cost of this Convention by the time these proposals are submitted, provided we submit them at a special election.

Mr. STOKES: If we have another constitutional convention, it will be called under provisions of the constitution other than at present, if this is adopted.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Certainly.

Mr. STOKES: Is it not true that this provision makes it much cheaper to have a constitutional convention in this, that the old constitution provides for publication six months while this provides for publication in each county in only one paper for eight weeks?

Mr. MARRIOTT: That would certainly lessen the expense of publishing, but let me suggest that many proposals—I am not criticising or complaining about the number of proposals—I am trying to enforce my argument that there will be no necessity for future constitutional conventions, and that, coming to the point, if the people of Ohio or the general assembly under section 1 ever deem it important to revise or amend the constitution, instead of calling a constitutional convention the amendment should be made by a commission of fifteen men appointed by the governor.

Mr. FACKLER: Is it not a fact that the provision with reference to the publication of amendments in Proposal No. 309 applies only to such proposed amendments as shall be submitted by the legislature and not by any convention which may be called?

Mr. MARRIOTT: If you will read section 2 you will find it does not. I would like only to say, if the Convention will indulge me, that objection has been offered by one of the delegates to the commission plan. First, I am opposed to this proposal because it provides a mandatory provision for a constitutional convention every twenty years.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton. Does it not provide for the question of whether or not a constitutional convention shall be held—that that be submitted to the people?

Mr. MARRIOTT: Yes; it does not necessarily follow that the people will ratify it and call the Convention.

Mr. FACKLER: Point in section 2, to where the provision is that compels the publication of an amendment proposed by a convention.

Mr. MARRIOTT: There is no such provision in that section 2.

Mr. DOTY: I move that this amendment be tabled.

Mr. MARRIOTT: On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 84, nays 15, as follows:

Methods of Submitting Amendments to the Constitution.

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Those who voted in the negative are:

Dwyer,	Longstreth,	Partington,
Elson,	Marriott,	Riley,
Evans,	Miller, Ottawa,	Rorick,
Harter, Stark,	Norris,	Stevens,
King,	Nye,	Winn.

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all of sections 2 and 3 and insert the following:

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide by law, for calling the same. The convention shall consist of as many members as there are members of congress from this state, who shall be chosen by the electors from each congressional district as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election at the seat of government for the purpose aforesaid.

No revision, alteration or amendment of this constitution agreed upon by such convention shall take effect until the same has been submitted to the electors of the state at a general or special election upon a day to be fixed by the convention and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

SEC. 3. The general assembly shall provide by law the method of submitting the question "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter or amend the constitution," the method of electing delegates and the method of submitting the work of such commission to the electors for adoption or rejection provided that no convention shall be called oftener than once in every twenty years.

Mr. MARRIOTT: If this proposal should be adopted, gentlemen of the Convention, it will change the present constitution only that instead of the constitutional convention being elected from the counties, the same number as we have members of the house, they will be elected from the congressional districts, and you will have twenty-one members of the constitutional convention elected, one from each congressional district. The only other change from Judge Taggart's proposal is that it leaves out all about nonpartisan ballot, but provides that the general assembly shall provide the method both for submission of amendments and the manner of electing delegates. I submit that we do not know what plan the general assembly may adopt twenty years from now.

Mr. DOTY: Suppose the state of Ohio through the general assembly should exercise the right to have only one district in the state instead of twenty-one or twenty-two. How many members of the constitutional convention would you have under your amendment?

Mr. MARRIOTT: Qne.

Mr. DOTY: If you think that I am the one, I do not mind voting for it.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I have no doubt that whatever way I would fix it Mr. Doty would try to be the one.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Do you think the general assembly should consist of one member, and if not, why not?

Mr. EARNHART: I move to table the amendment. The motion was carried.

Mr. KING: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 beginning at line 31 and ending with the word "but" in line 38.

Insert before "no" in line 38 the words and figures "Sec. 3." and capitalize the letter "N" in word "no".

Mr. KING: There cannot be any possible reason why we should incorporate in the constitution a provision that there must be a constitutional convention called in 1932 and every twenty years thereafter.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: You have not stated that quite right. Do you not mean that there is not any necessity for providing that the question shall be submitted to the people whether a convention shall be held?

Mr. KING: Yes, that is it. The first two sections cover the whole question, and with the amendment on the revision of the constitution, except the last clause of section 3, which, of course, I concede ought to go into the constitution, that any revision or amendment of the constitution should be submitted to a vote of the electors, and as amended in the proposal, and as reported back it should be adopted by a majority of those voting upon the particular amendment—that should be preserved, and I have preserved it in my amendment by calling it section 3. It might just as well have been attached to and made a part of section 2.

Mr. DOTY: This is only submitted once every twenty years at a regular election for the people to say whether they want a constitutional convention. Now, why take that right away from the people rather than leave it as it is? It does not save any money. I do not suppose it does anything other than "safeguard" the people so that they can't vote for what they want.

Methods of Submitting Amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. KING: That right is fully preserved in section 2 of the constitution.

Mr. DOTY: I cannot keep in mind the sections technically as some of the gentlemen seem to do; but, as I remember, section 2 simply makes it possible for the legislature to say whether the people shall have the right to vote whether or not they shall have a constitutional convention. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. FOX: I offer an amendment to Proposal No. 309.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 11 strike out "eight" and insert "five".

Mr. FOX: Submitting these amendments is a very expensive proposition. The advertising has cost $464,000 for the amendments we have passed during the last twenty-five years, as shown by Judge Marriott. That is a great expense. Now, if we consider that during the next twenty or twenty-five years, with the publicity that is now given to almost everything, five weeks are just as good now as six months used to be, it will save between $150,000 and $200,000. And it is just as good.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 105, nays 1, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Harbarger,	Norris,

Mr. Marriott voted in the negative.

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 309—Mr. Taggart, to submit an amendment to article XVI, sections 1, 2 and 3, of the constitution.—Methods of submitting amendments to constitution.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE XVI.

SEC. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly, shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

SEC. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution", shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. Doty here took the chair as president pro tem.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The next order of business is Proposal No. 329.

Proposal No. 329—Mr. Knight, was read the third time.

Mr. KNIGHT: Owing largely, I think, to what must have been a misunderstanding of the proposal on the part of the school officials of the state, information seems to have been sent abroad over the state that this proposal undertook to place in the hands of every school district complete and absolute control over all school matters. There is not a word, letter, line or syllable in the proposal that warrants any such statement. It is just what it purports to be—direct authority, incontrovertible, in the state to control the public school and educational system of the state, provide for organization, administration and control of it, and provide a referendum in its original form only upon the subject of the size of the school board and its organization. It does not in one particle change the power of the school board when organized. When the proposal passed second reading the motive was to permit the cities of the state to determine for themselves the size and organization of the school board, an opportunity which they had long desired and long needed. It was originally in the cities proposal and was taken out because it was deemed unwise that that proposal should deal with anything like the subject of education, believing that the subject of education was a state and not a city question. Now, in order to provide this for the cities, the original form of this proposal provided that all school districts should have the referendum opportunity, and it seems in some portions of the state, probably due to the fact that the school board had complete control over the matter, that there is objection to its application to rural school districts. As a member of the Convention I have no desire to force a referendum on any people who do not want it. The cities do want it, and I offer an amendment which covers the last objection that there can be to it:

Organization of Boards of Education.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 7 after the word "district" insert the word "embraced wholly or in part within any city"; also in line 10 change "the" to "such".

Mr. KNIGHT: It will read: "Each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city, shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provisions shall be made for the exercise of this power by such school district." It, therefore, does not touch in any way any school district which does not lie wholly or in part in a city.

Mr. FESS: I hope this amendment will pass. It will keep faith with the committee on Municipal Government. I do not want to interfere in any way with the rural community, and this was for the purpose of giving home rule to the cities, without interfering in the matter of schools. I hope the amendment will pass. It will remove all of this fear that rural districts will go back to where they were some years before.

Mr. HARBARGER: What do you understand by district? Is it a subdistrict?

Mr. KNIGHT: No. A district, a township, a city district, and this applies to city districts.

Mr. HARBARGER: They have subdistricts in the country?

Mr. KNIGHT: There is no subdistrict lying wholly or in part in any city. It is to remove that that I am offering this amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I hope this amendment will pass. It will then remove all objections from the rural districts.

Mr. PARTINGTON: What is contemplated in this term "public"?

Mr. KNIGHT: Public schools of the state supported by taxation.

Mr. PARTINGTON: The State University?

Mr. KNIGHT: That is not a public school. The legislature could include any other educational system under the term. It does not make it mandatory, but simply puts it in the power of the lawmaking body of the state to have one system from top to bottom.

Mr. PARTINGTON: In the committee on Common Schools I had remarked that I would favor anything that would improve the school system of the state of Ohio, but then, as now, I am opposed to the state controlling our high schools and our common schools and then permitting separate normal schools for the state of Ohio doing as they like. If this law or this proposal contemplates or includes the whole system, I would like to know it.

Mr. KNIGHT: It is intended to provide that the lawmaking power may use it whenever the time is ripe for it. One complete educational system for the schools and all educational institutions supported by public taxation.

Mr. PARTINGTON: If such is the case, my objection to this is removed, but it still remains with me if the normal schools of Ohio are above the control and are not operated under these laws as are our common schools and high schools. We are proud of our high schools in Sidney, as is doubtless true of every other man who has the interest of his home schools at heart, and if we are to surrender—you will notice, members, if you surrender to some authority—if I understand aright—the organization of your schools—

Mr. KNIGHT: The school system.

Mr. PARTINGTON: The administration and control. If it is contemplated to build up one grand harmonious system, my objections are removed, but otherwise I am not willing, as a member from Shelby county, to surrender the organization and administration and the control. Those are pretty strong words. You will note this, that your schools, the control and organization of your schools, are taken away from you. They are lodged in the state of Ohio. Now, if you can have in the state of Ohio a man at the head of our school system that is going to build up one harmonious school system for Ohio, that will include these normal schools, and will really mean a school system for Ohio, then my objections are removed, and if it does not do that I am opposed to it, and I pause to reflect what is contemplated when you say to me that the cities, the small cities, would be benefited. We last summer sold $100,000 worth of bonds to build a high school, and this proposal says that the organization, administration and control of those schools of ours is under the domination and control of one central body. Now, if that organization and that system and that man at the head—if it is a perfect system, and if they have the right man at the helm, we may be glad, we may feel proud that we did surrender the organization and the administration and the control of our schools to some central authority, but if that system is wrong or the central authority be not right, gentlemen, I am afraid of what the result might be.

Mr. PIERCE: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line six strike out the words "and educational".

Mr. PIERCE: If we take out those words it will read: "Section 3: Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state." That simply omits the words "and educational" as they are in the proposal. It now says the control of the public schools and educational system. I am afraid that the educational system is too broad, and it might possibly include things that we do not want, and therefore I want to have it stricken out.

Mr. KNIGHT: What else might it include?

Mr. PIERCE: It might include the high schools and the parochial schools.

Organization of Boards of Education.

Mr. KNIGHT: I have no objection to putting before the word educational the word "public". There is no intention to put anything that is not supported by taxation under this system.

Mr. PIERCE: Would you answer me a question?

Mr. KNIGHT: Yes, if I can.

Mr. PIERCE: What do you claim the phrase "and educational" means?

Mr. KNIGHT: In most states, or in many states of the Union organized like ours, as every state in the North is, the phrase "public educational system" means educational system supported in whole or in part by general and local taxation. In a majority of the states, as in this state, the general organization has been in the hands, as it should be, of a central lawmaking body. Now the import of those two words, "and educational" is this: We are reaching out at the present time and developing a normal school for the training of teachers for our public schools. We are supporting and maintaining three colleges, Ohio State, Ohio University and Miami University. The intent of that phrase "and educational" is that whenever, or if ever, it seems wise to the lawmaking body of the state to try to make a unified public educational system from the kindergarten at the bottom to the highest educational institutions supported by taxation, this proposal gives undoubted authority to do that, and there is nothing intended beyond that, and the insertion of the word "public" before educational will remove any ambiguity and all doubt about the intent to cover parochial schools in any way. That never entered the mind of anybody who had anything to do with this.

Mr. ELSON: I think the word "public" inserted would not cover the objection at all. I think a general objection is that under such educational system the public schools and universities should not be included. If there is a system for the organization, administration and control of the schools it should not include the universities. The first thing that would naturally come up would be whether to coordinate the high schools with the lower classes of the university and articulate them, which would be an exceedingly unwise thing to do. Not many months ago I attended a faculty meeting and this subject came up. The subject of articulating the high schools and the colleges of liberal arts in the universities. I made the statement there and will make it here that we cannot afford to do it. If the university wishes to modify its entrance requirements in such a way as to make it a high school, very well, but we cannot expect to modify the high schools and colleges so as to articulate them. We would simply have to choose between the two, to do away with the universities or with the high schools. It would be better to sink our universities in the sea than to give up the high schools. I said that certainly not from the standpoint of personal indulgence, because I have never been connected with high schools to amount to anything. My life is identified with university work, but I realize that high schools are of far more benefit to the state of Ohio than the universities, and if this goes through to include both, the danger will be that there will be an articulation between the two which would not be best for either.

Mr. McCLELLAND: The argument which has just been advanced by the member from Athens [Mr. ELSON] seems to me to be one of the strongest arguments against the conclusion he reaches. One of the great things he justly complains of is the apparent dictation of the universities to the high schools in regard to what they shall do to prepare for the university, and this matter leaves it in the hands of the general assembly, which will represent the high schools rather than the universities. It seems to me it would be very unfortunate for us to accept the amendment of the delegate from Butler [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. OKEY: I hope the amendment of the delegate from Butler will prevail. If you leave the word "educational" in this proposal it is too comprehensive. It can mean almost anything, and from my standpoint I think it has entirely too much latitude. Now, as far as I am concerned, it seems to me there has been no explanation that is satisfactory, to me at least, as to the ultimate object of this proposal. I want to vote for the proposal if it will tend to benefit the schools, but I want to know wherein it benefits them. And I want to know exactly what these very comprehensive words "organization, administration and control of the public schools and educational system" mean.

Mr. KNIGHT: It means the public school system and the educational system. That is what it means.

Mr. OKEY: What do you mean by "system"?

Mr. KNIGHT: This proposal puts in the hands of the lawmaking power unquestioned authority to organize such a system. It does not contemplate taking out of the hands of the local authorities the control and administration of their local schools, but it does give to the state, beyond any question, the right to fix the standard and the right to organize an entire system, leaving to each local community the determination of the schools in the system.

Mr. OKEY: Does it contemplate the appointment of the teachers?

Mr. KNIGHT: No, sir.

Mr. STOKES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 6 after "state" add "supported by public funds".

Mr. KNIGHT: I will accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment offered by the delegate from Butler [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. KRAMER: I want to ask this question of Professor Knight: In his amendment he limits the right to control, etc., to cities. We have villages in Richland county, or one village at least, that are very near the limit of a city, and I do not see why a village that desires to change its school organization ought to be forbidden the right.

Mr. KNIGHT: Because under the present law that is likely to continue a village and not a township school district. Unless it becomes a special district by some special action it is not taken outside of the township district and that is not true in the case of a city.

Mr. COLTON: I want to call attention to a provision of the present constitution: "The general assembly shall make such provisions, by taxation, or otherwise, as, with the income arising from the school trust fund, will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state; but no religious or other sect, or sects, shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this state."

Organization of Boards of Education.

Now that gives full control over the general schools, but there is doubt whether the legislature has complete control over the educational system of the state that we desire it should have. The provisions of the amendment leave to the legislature full control over the public schools and educational system of the state, and I hope this proposal will pass without the provisions proposed by the member from Butler.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I trust the proposal as amended by the member from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] and as it stands by the acceptance of the amendment of the member from Montgomery [Mr. STOKES] will pass. The member from Franklin has stated the case as nearly as it could be stated. Instead of having three or four systems the scheme is to have one grand system under the charge of the legislature. Your committee on Municipal Government was broad enough to surrender and strike from their original proposal section 4 in which large latitude was given to the municipalities, but we wanted the whole matter of education to be under the direction and charge of the state. Our committee agreed to the elimination of section 4 and asked the committee on Education to provide one in its place and to give to the cities the right and power to designate the size of the school board for the various cities. The amendment of the gentleman from Montgomery has removed the last possible objection that could be raised by anyone, and that objection is the fear—an object never contemplated or dreamed of, and I don't think it could possibly be so interpreted—that this proposal might give the state the power to take charge of or direct the parochial schools of the state. There was nothing of that kind in our minds, but the objection is absolutely removed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montgomery, and I therefore move that the amendment of Mr. Pierce be tabled.

The motion was carried.

Mr. HALFHILL: Gentlemen of the Convention: I have no doubt that several gentlemen who have spoken and who claim that by virtue of this amendment every possible objection to this proposal has been removed, believe what they say, but it occurs to me that there may be some objections to this proposal that have not yet reached the ears of the gentlemen. I am perfectly willing to be convinced that this proposal is the right thing, but up to date the objections that have come to me from outside of the Convention have more convincing weight and power with me than the arguments that I have heard here. I agree that it is advisable and right for the city districts to have entire control of their boards of education so that they may limit the number or in any other way do that which seems best. That is removed from competent objection because it was argued that under this proposal as originally drawn we might go back to the old system of three directors of a sub-district and thus destroy what we have built up through the intelligent action of the legislature. But I say that is removed by this amendment introduced by the author of the proposal, so that that objection is out of the way.

But another objection that has come to me from sources outside of the Convention is to this effect, that when you read this proposal down you will find it contains within it power of creating an administrative board of officers who can usurp and take away the absolute control of the local schools to the full extent save and except a local board that will levy taxes and provide for supplies. That objection comes to me and it looks to me much like an administrative effort under the first part to take away all authority of the local board save and except the right to levy taxes. I see the author shakes his head and thinks that the objection is not good, but there is certainly another objection which was referred to in argument and which I must hurriedly scan and that is it is to be hoped at least under this we are not endeavoring to dovetail the high school into the university. I have not heard that sufficiently answered. The objection to the high school now is that it teaches too many things and puts on too many frills and fanciful things and has become a sort of preparatory school so that you can graduate from it into the college. The fact is a great majority of the children of the state never even get through the grades and only a very small per cent of them get through the high schools, and in getting through the high schools this small per cent ought to have experience and accuracy to do things brought to their attention better than they have it brought to them under the present system. Now I am not an educator, but I have great respect for those men whose life work is in that profession. I candidly believe that this proposal will meet with very grave objection even as now amended, and I would like to hear my objection as outlined answered a little further. I call on the author and would be pleased to have him answer the questions.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The member from Allen has one minute. If the gentleman from Franklin wishes to occupy it with the permission of the gentleman from Allen he can do it.

Mr. KNIGHT: There are two things to be stated briefly about this proposal. The primary object is from the standpoint of the public schools. There is no man in the state of Ohio who would be less inclined than I am to do a single thing to injure the public schools. In this proposal there is not a working of the public school into the high school and of the high school into the university, but provision that there shall be on behalf of the educational authorities of the state the guiding and controlling of the educational public school system. There is not a single word in it, in my judgment, that warrants the idea that we are taking out of the hands of the local board anywhere control over the administration of the local schools. It just points the way toward the general unification of the public educational system.

Mr. ELSON: I move to take from the table this amendment. I think we voted this down without any reason and I would like to explain.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The motion to take from the table the amendment of the delegate from Butler [Mr. PIERCE] is carried and the question is on the motion of the delegate from Butler [Mr. PIERCE] to amend the proposal.

Mr. McCLELLAND: I rise to a point of order. The member from Athens has spoken on that amendment.

Organization of Boards of Education.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair would ask the gentleman from Athens if that is so?

Mr. ELSON: I spoke on something.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will resolve the doubt in favor of the Convention and if anybody else wants to speak on the amendment will recognize him; if not, the chair will recognize the delegate from Athens.

Mr. ELSON: I gave one reason for securing the adoption of the amendment and I wish to give another which I hoped I would not have to mention. The reason I gave was that the danger of such a board having control of the organization of the public school system of the state is that it will articulate the high school with the university, which will be a calamity to the school districts because the high school is a place to educate the children and only a small percentage of the people that live there get into the university.

Mr. COLTON: Under our present constitution has not the legislature the power to coordinate the high schools in the university?

Mr. ELSON: I do not know.

Mr. COLTON: I think it has.

Mr. ELSON: My other reason is this: I fear it would be a source of trouble among some of the higher educational institutions. Three or four years ago there was a crusade made through the state legislature—I don't say how it originated, the object of it was to rob two of our time-honored state universities of much of their importance and prestige and to use that in building up the State University at Columbus. The idea was to degrade them to mere normal schools in order to build up the State University at Columbus. I believe the state of Ohio will not stand for anything of the sort. That movement was resisted and successfully. Now, if there was such a thing as this proposal provides for passed, I feel sure the same old trouble would arise. I do not say Professor Knight had anything of the sort in his mind, but it opens up the old fight and it is not good for higher education. We all know the universities at Athens and Oxford are old time-honored institutions, doing an immense good in the state. The Ohio University at Athens is the oldest collegiate institution west of the Alleghenies unless we except Transylvania at Lexington, Kentucky, which claims priority by about one year.

Mr. ULMER: I think the American Book Trust is behind this movement.

Mr. ELSON: I do not know. If Ohio intended to build up one single great institution as Michigan and Wisconsin have done it should have begun sooner, but Ohio has three instead of one, and while that fact may to some extent preclude the possibility of building up a great university in the center of the state, nevertheless the educational facilities of the state are doubtless better than they would be with one such central university. Go down to Ohio University and Miami University and you will find the best possible opportunities for the people to get education. They go there at little cost and it would be a calamity to the educational institutions of the state if we were to degrade them to mere normal schools.

Mr. ULMER: I move the previous question on the amendment and the proposal.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Butler.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 49, nays 54, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Farrell,	Marshall,

So the proposal not having received the requisite number of votes failed to pass.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The next proposal is Proposal No. 252.

Proposal No. 252—Mr. Weybrecht, was read the third time.

Mr. HOSKINS: What I desire to say is at the request of Mr. Weybrecht, who came to my desk and asked me to speak on it when the proposal was called. The section is just the same as the old one except that it adds the last sentence and permits a suit to be brought against the state in a manner to be provided by law. On the second reading the author explained that we have often had cases where by special acts of the legislature somebody was authorized to sue the state, and there is not any reason why the state should be any different from a private individual. The legislature ought to have a right to provide by law for the adjustment of controversies between its citizens and the state. That is the sole purpose of this proposal.

Mr. WOODS: I am against this proposal and I want to tell you why. If you are going to pass this proposal you ought to add an amendment to it to just about triple the force in the attorney general's office. I don't think the state can afford to throw open this door. Every time there is a flood from one of the canals the state will have a whole lot of lawsuits on its hands. Every time the general assembly meets they flock around the finance committee with all sorts of claims.

Mr. PIERCE: Would you deny the public justice because it would increase our legal force?

Mr. WOODS: They can get justice now. I don't think this door should be thrown open so wide.

Mr. PECK: Why should the state be exempt from just claims?

Mr. WOODS: The state always pays its ordinary claims.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Is not the fact you have just stated, that so many people come around the finance committee of the legislature, a great reason for the adoption of this proposal?

Mr. WOODS: No, sir; there is no trouble if you have anything like a just claim. If this door is thrown open it will be a great expense to the state. The cases will have to be tried by juries in the local county and the idea will be that "The state has a lot of money and we will make the state pay."

Mr. HALFHILL: In your judgment is there any more danger of the state's being imposed upon when the case is tried under the rules of evidence and the law than there is of the finance committee of the general assembly being imposed upon?

Mr. WOODS: Yes, I think so; and not only that, but you are putting the state to the expense of conducting a court matter. You had better pay the claims off than to fight them, and I think it would be cheaper.

Mr. ANDERSON: Consistency is a good thing to observe. This is the first time that Mr. Woods has ever said anything for the general assembly.

Mr. WOODS: I object.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The objection is sustained and the gentleman from Mahoning will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON: The gentleman's position is that it would be far safer to trust a committee of the general assembly than it is to trust any court in the state of Ohio. That is one reason it ought to be killed. The second reason that this proposal ought to be killed is because it would require more attorneys in the attorney general's office, because if a man's property is injured it is a just claim and we ought not to employ attorneys to take care of just claims and therefore it should be killed.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move the previous question.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 71, nays 12, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Peck,
Antrim,	Harris, Hamilton,	Pettit,

Brattain,	Kerr,	Peters,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 252—Mr. Weybrecht, to submit an amendment to article I, section 16, of the constitution.—Suits against the state.

Suits against the State—Judge of Court of Common Pleas for Each County.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

Proposal No. 304—Mr. Halfhill, was read the third time.

Mr. HALFHILL: I offer an amendment. The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the period at the end thereof and add the following: "and the additional judges, provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914."

Mr. HALFHILL: Gentlemen of the Convention: That amendment has been submitted to the Schedule committee and it meets with the approval of that committee and will coordinate with the general schedule. You will observe that the proposal in no way changes the jurisdiction of the court of common pleas and that the only change in the organization of the court is that there is a provision made for one judge of the court of common pleas in each county and such additional judges as may be made necessary by the size of the county and the amount of business. In other words, the legislature can decrease or increase the number of common pleas judges as it deems proper. That will make some changes. Some counties that do not now have judges will eventually receive a judge under this proposal. The original proposal provides that the judges of the court of common pleas in office elected thereto prior to January 1, 1913, shall hold their office for the term for which they were elected. That was put in so there will be no possible conflict between the operation of this constitution and the judges who would be nominated and elected at the ensuing November election. We think that this amendment just read to you, which is in these words, "and the additional judges provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914," would so shape this proposal that there would be no possible conflict with any existing work of the court.

Mr. WALKER: Are the salaries of these judges paid by the state?

Mr. HALFHILL: In part by the state and a certain part by each county.

Mr. WALKER: I notice that your proposal provides for the possibility of combining the work of the probate judge in the common pleas court. In my county they will not want to do that, but the proposal provides for the probate judge and that salary is now paid by the county. I was wondering how that salary would be provided for if the two are combined.

Mr. HALFHILL: We discussed that fully at the time of the second reading. The probate judge is paid by fees from those who transact business in his office, or rather he gets the fees and covers them into the treasury and then draws back his salary, so that really he is paid out of those fees. That would be done away with and those fees would be covered into the county treasury and if the two courts were combined there would be a saving of a material amount.

Mr. HURSH: It requires some temerity for a mere farmer to enter into a discussion with the legal fraternity of this Convention, but when it comes to a matter of necessity and a matter of economy, we are surely all equally interested.

It has been urged in the former argument for this proposal that our poor common pleas judges of the state of Ohio are very much overworked. Another argument is that the cases are such that many litigants do not get a fair show because the litigants cannot get into the court often enough. I am aware that as the courts of Ohio are now constituted the common ordinary common pleas judges are not permitted to take more than five or six or seven months' vacation during the year, and I am also aware of the fact that litigants are prevented from having their cases heard because, for reasons, that are urged by attorneys, cases are deferred and postponed from term to term and year to year until their cases are oftentimes put off a considerable length of time. The delay is not caused by the few terms of the court in the county each year. This proposal adds from twenty-two to twenty-five new judges of the state to be put on the payroll. What for? I say it is an absolutely unnecessary measure from the standpoint that any business man does his business or that any farmer does his business or that any laboring man does his business. Four thousand dollars a year is certainly enough to compensate the common pleas judges of Ohio for the work they do, and I want to say further that you are making a county office of this thing, and if there is such a thing as lowering the standard of the judiciary, you are doing it here and now. The better lawyers usually do not want the positions of judges. The judge will be a county official who will be seeking the job. It will generally be a one-horse lawyer who cannot make a living at his profession. Really, he does not need to be a lawyer, but only a good politician, and he can draw that extra $4,000 for what? To do six weeks' work in the county for you and me and our farmers and laboring men pay for it. The taxes finally come down on those who produce the wealth, and they will have to produce from $80,000 to $100,000 every year to pay a few men to put in six weeks' work upon the bench that is already provided for. Gentlemen, I cannot see, in the face of the tendency toward economy, how you can favor this measure.

They say you can combine the common pleas with the probate judge. What do we want to do that for? We haven't elected a lawyer in a generation in my county as probate judge. We elect a big-hearted, humane man who doesn't follow all of the technicalities of the law, but who, in the goodness of his nature and the overflowing of the milk of human kindness in his soul, provides for the widows and orphans whose interests come into his court. Now, gentlemen, in all seriousness, as a member of this Convention and as a taxpayer and as a farmer, and one of the men who has every year to help to dig up this $100,000 to help to pay this bill for lawyers who can't make a living for themselves, I am opposed to it.

Judge of Court of Common Pleas for Each County.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out "at such election in line 22 and insert "thereon".

Strike out "at such election" in line 26 and insert "thereon".

Mr. PARTINGTON: If the members will notice, the amendment is in accord with all of the other work of this Convention. Wherever we have submitted a question we have provided that the number of votes cast on it shall control. This is in strict keeping with that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAUCK: I agree with considerable that has been said by the member from Hardin. If the present common pleas judges were properly distributed we have an abundance to do the work. I also sympathize with the movement by Mr. Halfhill because there are some counties in the state of Ohio that ought to have common pleas and probate courts. But in the smaller counties of the state it would be a grievous wrong, as suggested by the member from Hardin, to impose upon the taxpaying public the expense of a common pleas and probate court. I undertake to say that in the majority of the counties of the state of Ohio one able-bodied man with a fair amount of intelligence can do all of the work of a judge of both courts and not consume over one-half of his time. Now the proposal as it stands provides that laws may be passed to combine these courts. In the large counties of the state there ought to be no combination, and in the smaller counties of the state there ought to be such a combination, and the possibility of effecting that combination ought not to be left to the grace of the general assembly.

The amendment I shall presently offer provides within the proposal itself the machinery by which this combination may be effected in the smaller counties of the state. I have taken counties of less than 40,000 and I have drafted an amendment that I think properly provides for the matter. I have sent it up to be read.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all of section 7 after the period in line 19 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"Whenever ten per cent of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county, having less than forty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the county commissioners of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county offices, the commissioners shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question, vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined."

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment of the member from Gallia.

Mr. NYE: I want to ask a question. Has it not been the policy of the Convention not to insert in the constitution the names of merely statutory officers? I wonder if the gentleman cannot find some way that he could not insert county commissioners, which are not constitutional officers?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment of the member from Gallia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EBY: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the semi-colon in line 7 insert the following:

"any civil or criminal action of a general public nature, shall upon the filing of a petition signed by twelve per cent of the electors of the county in which such action is instituted, with the chief justice of the supreme court, the chief justice shall order the removal of such suit from the jurisdiction of the common pleas judges of county from said county to the county's common pleas court, which said petition shall designate;"

Mr. EBY: That language, as a member says, is not very elegant, because it was gotten up on the spur of the moment and sent out for copying, and some mistakes have been made. The object is this: We have certain places in the state where it would be impossible to get these cases of special public interest tried except before a judge who owes his election to a political machine. For instance, in New York several years ago, Governor Hughes said it was impossible to get some cases tried thoroughly before any judge who owed his election to Tammany Hall, and I have heard it repeatedly said that George B. Cox in the proceedings instituted against him before any judge down there could not have been convicted. Now this simply provides that where such condition obtains a reasonable number of the electors can file a petition before the chief justice and have the case removed to some other county. In other words, under this, twelve per cent of the electors of Hamilton county could have had those actions removed to the courts of Butler county, or over to Scioto county before Judge Blair, and given Cox a clear, clean bill of health or convicted him.

Mr. OKEY: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was carried:

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: This proposal of the delegate from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL] seems to be a good thing. It was threshed out very thoroughly on the second reading and it was understood that the added expense by reason of the added number of judges might be compensated for by a reduction of the expenditures in the number of probate judges that will be taken out of office if this is carried. And, in view of that hope, that there would be a sufficient number of probate judges vacated to establish a solvent situation when it comes to the consideration, I think it is not a good policy to combine the counties that can take advantage of this proposal to those in which there are only a population of 40,000.

I think there are counties with 45,000 and 50,000 that may not have sufficient business for the two courts, and in case such a situation is found to be true, those that have a population of over 40,000 could not, under this proposal as amended by the gentleman from Gallia, avail themselves of the provision of this section. Therefore I offer this amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 19 strike out "40,000" and insert "60,000".

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The motion is out of order in the form in which it is presented. If you desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the delegate from Gallia, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which that was adopted and then amend it and adopt it again.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I will offer it as an amendment to the proposal as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend Proposal No. 304 as amended as follows:

In line 19 change "county commissioners" to "judge of the court of common pleas" and in the same line change "commissioners" to "judge of the court of common pleas".

Mr. KNIGHT: The reason for that is because the county commissioner is not a constitutional officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is "Shall the proposal pass"?

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 85, nays 14, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 304.—Mr. Halfhill, to submit amendments to article IV, sections 3, 7, 12 and 15, of the constitution.—Judge of court of common pleas for each county.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. Any judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas, and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

SEC. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per cent. of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county, having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county offices, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question, vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

SEC. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

SEC. 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided. The judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges, provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. King rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 252, by Mr. Weybrecht. His name being called, Mr. King voted "aye."

MR. KING: I move that the rules be suspended and that Proposal No. 340 be taken up for the second reading.

The motion was carried.

Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, was read the second time.

The question being "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 103, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, to submit an amendment to Schedule No. 4.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

That the several amendments passed by this Convention or any of the same when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided in any of said amendments. And all laws then in force not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts at the time this amendment takes effect shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law.

Under the rules the proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Proposal No. 249—Mr. Tannehill, was read the third time.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of said proposal add the following:

"Candidates for all judicial officers of counties and candidates for members of the general assembly shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever."

Mr. TANNEHILL: This proposal is so easily understood that I think it needs no further comment.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: The proposal is an excellent one, but it could be better. The members of this Convention were nominated and elected as provided in my amendment.

Mr. ULMER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of line 16 add the following:

"All primary tickets shall be placed upon the same ballot".

Mr. ULMER: I take it for granted that every member of this Convention, and I think every citizen of Ohio, is in favor of the Australian ballot system. It protects the citizen. It keeps his vote secret. He does not have to expose his political affiliation when he goes to the polls and I think if that is a good thing at a regular election it is a good thing at a primary election. I think every man here will agree with me that this secrecy is one of the fundamental principles of government. It is just as important that this selection be one of the fundamental principles of government. It is just as important to select a man properly as to elect him. After this election is made you have no other choice. If you have a ticket made up of poor men it is simply a choice between three or four poor men. In the last primary I heard a great number of complaints of citizens because they had been asked, "What kind of a ballot do you want? Are you a republican or a democrat or a socialist?" I have seen citizens walk away from the booths saying it is an outrage to compel a free man to express his political affiliation. I say it is all wrong and Primary Elections.

I want as much secrecy in the primary as there is in the main election.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would you think it would be entirely fair to have the members of one party determine the nominees of the other party? That would certainly be done under your amendment.

Mr. ULMER: It makes no difference who nominates the men if the men are good men. If I am a democrat and there is a good man on the republican ticket I should have a right to help nominate him.

Mr. TANNEHILL: In regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Hamilton county I want to say that when my neighbors start a rough house and kill the family cat, I resist with all the power I have any disposition on their part to cast the carcass over into my back yard; and if I have any friends in this Convention, and I think I have, I hope they are going to side with me and not insist on the obsequies being held on my premises. In this proposal I have one of the most necessary reforms that will go out from this Convention. It is a matter that I have given a life study to and I know we have it in good shape. It will carry by a good big majority in the state and I do not believe in this trying to cover the whole field of reform at one sweep. I think we have in this proposal all the reform that we want at this time, and I hope the Convention will stay with me as on the second reading and put the proposal through just as it is. The amendment of the gentleman from Lucas entirely vitiates the proposal as it stands. It injects politics and will endanger the passage of the proposal.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: What has happened over night to make you change so completely?

Mr. TANNEHILL: I am in favor of what you are proposing, but not to fasten it onto this. My proposal deals with primaries, but not with elections. I move that both amendments be tabled.

Mr. FACKLER: I ask for a division and I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PECK: I have been demanding recognition for five minutes.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The gentleman from Morgan had the floor and I could not recognize any other gentleman.

Mr. PECK: That is the fourth or fifth time that this has been done.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: I beg your pardon, I have not done it at all. The question is on laying the amendment of the delegate from Hamilton on the table and the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON: A point of order. The amendment as it reads is meaningless.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The member may be stating a fact, but it is not a point of order. As a point of order it is overruled and the secretary will call the roll on the motion to table the amendment of the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. SMITH].

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 57, nays 49, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Holtz,	Partington,
Antrim,	Hoskins,	Peck,
Baum,	Hursh,	Peters,
Beatty, Morrow,	Kerr,	Pettit,
Brattain,	Knight,	Read,

Farrell,	Leslie,	Wise,
FitzSimons,	Malin,	Mr. President.
Hahn,

So the amendment offered by the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. SMITH] was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is: "Shall the amendment of the delegate from Lucas [Mr. ULMER] be laid on the table?"

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 69, nays 27, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hoskins,	Partington,
Antrim,	Hursh,	Peters,

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line nine strike out "two" and insert "five".

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: The people in my county are unanimously opposed to this proposal. We have two towns of nearly four thousand each and one of over twenty-five hundred, and I do not think there is a single person in either place that is for this proposal. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I move that the amendment be tabled.

The motion was carried.

Mr. STOKES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the word "shall" in line 13 after the word "delegate" and insert "may."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the proposal add Sec. 8, to Art. V.

Sec. 8. The candidates whose nominations for any office specified on the ballot have been duly made, and not withdrawn, shall be arranged in groups under the designations of the office for which such candidates have been nominated. To the name of each candidate shall be added his party or political designation in initials, as the same appears in the certificate of nomination or nomination papers.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PECK: I offer an amendment:

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 6 after the word "petition" insert "or otherwise".

Mr. PECK: I do not think it is wise to tie up this matter of primary election by any hard and fast constitutional rule, that can never be changed, and I want to put in words that will give the general assembly some way to change these matters if occasion requiring a change arises. All the wisdom is not in this room. I do not believe that any system of direct primaries is such a valuable thing as some people think, although it may be an improvement in some cases. I know of cases where the worst machines in this state are supported and run on direct primaries, and you cannot oust the gang, because they control the direct primaries. George B. Cox cannot be beaten in Cincinnati at a primary. Talk about direct primaries! They feed the machines right along because the machines can always get more people out to the primaries than anybody else can. Cox ordered all of his men to vote on a particular election one time and succeeded in bringing out twenty-two thousand votes when there was really no contest and only one ticket, but he ordered his henchmen to turn out and get everybody out they could and they brought out twenty-two thousand votes, which was five times as many as anybody could bring out against him. The primary can be made a machine as well as any other sort of a machine. When you nominate men by direct primaries now the nominations are really made by a little clique meeting somewhere in a back room and selecting the men and then passing out the word that Smith and Jones are the men to be put on the ticket. That is the way it is done now.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I hope the Convention understands that these words vitiate everything that we are trying to get, and I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

On this motion the yeas and nays were regularly demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 45, nays 57, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harbarger,	Pierce,
Antrim,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Roehm,

Those who voted in the negative are:

Beyer,	Harter, Huron,	Mauck,

So the motion to table was lost.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Hamilton [Mr. PECK].

Mr. ANDERSON: Let us be consistent in voting upon this Proposal No. 249. With the words "or otherwise" in it, it means nothing. Let us analyze it.

Mr. PECK: It won't hurt anybody.

Mr. ANDERSON: "Or otherwise" means anything that the legislature wants to do—any old thing. It has been said here, and with truth, that sometimes bosses control at a primary. That is the exception when they do. It is the exception when they do not through the convention. A convention spells boss rule. The candidates elected in a state convention are half made by the bosses and the object of this proposal was to let the people have some chance. Could Pennsylvania have ever thrown off the shackles of the bosses if it hadn't been for the primaries? They tried it for years and years and never succeeded.

Mr. MAUCK: Didn't Pennsylvania hold a state convention—

Mr. ANDERSON: Yes, but in the state convention they didn't dare disregard the primaries.

Mr. PECK: When was it that Pennsylvania threw off the bosses? I thought they had them as bad as ever.

Mr. ANDERSON: I am rather more familiar with Pennsylvania than you are. It is true they threw off a number of bosses and took on one or two bosses, but they have gotten in the habit now of getting rid of the bosses. They couldn't get rid of all because there were some bosses on each side, but they have learned, thank God, to get rid of bosses. If you are not in favor of this proposal with "or otherwise" out of it, vote against it. With those words in it, is absolutely worthless.

Mr. NYE: I do not care especially to speak on the subject of the amendment, but I do want to speak against the whole proposition. I believe that there ought to be in the nomination of officers consultation and conference between the best citizens of the community. You cannot have that in the proposal that was presented here because every individual can go forward and get his name put on the ticket. All he has to do is to say I nominate myself and he can get enough friends to sign the paper to put him on the ticket.

Mr. ANDERSON: Does not that give the people as much of an opportunity to pick any one candidate they please as it does letting a few of these alleged citizens pick them for them?

Mr. NYE: But there is no sort of a connection. Suppose you get ten men on a ticket; no one has a second choice as to who they will vote for, but if you have a convention of representative men from your county or your district or your state you can get together and have a conference and if you cannot get your first choice you can get your second choice. It seems to me you are putting this into the hands of the worst kind of bosses. This is bossism all of the time, but if you have a convention of the leading men of your community you can then get together and confer together and nominate good men. I do not know how it is in the cities, but I have lived in a rural district for more than forty years and we have always had good officers because the people got together and they talked the matters over and listened to objections and argument, and if they couldn't get their first choice they would take their second choice, and under this process that is proposed here you cannot have any second choice. You just vote indiscriminately. Ten men vote for one man, and ten for another, and ten for another, and eleven for another, and the one who gets the eleven votes out of the forty-one votes is nominated.

It seems to me that you are making a mistake in passing this. Read it through. How are you going to carry it out? I do not believe that you have read the proposal or considered it. I believe, as was said by the member from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS] last night, that the life of a country and of a state depends upon parties, and if you cannot have parties you cannot be successful.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Gentlemen of the Convention: I want to ask you in all earnestness to at least vote down the Peck amendment when it comes up. Do not make a joke of the proposal. If you are like the gentleman who has just taken his seat, whom I honor, vote against the proposal. I have no objection to your voting against the proposal, but don't put in an amendment that makes a joke of the whole matter.

Mr. PECK: I do not think that my amendment makes a joke of this matter. It leaves the power plainly conferred by the constitution upon the general assembly to pass such laws as are necessary under the subject of primary elections. I think that is something more than a joke. It seems to me that that is a valuable thing if you want to have primary elections regulated by law, which is a matter of very doubtful propriety at any rate. All of us who are past middle age can remember the time when there was no such a thing as a primary under the law. We got together in a convention and had our ballot and the whole matter was voluntary. It was a meeting of free citizens attending to their public affairs, as they had a right to do, and not at the expense of the community or anybody's expense but their own. We believed that any set of men had a right to meet in any hall and discuss and determine what to do about public affairs and there was no constitutional convention or legislature that had a right to regulate that meeting. It was a thing that was guaranteed by the bill of rights. The people have a right to assemble together to freely discuss their affairs and here you propose to regulate. I say there has never been any propriety in these primary election laws, from the old Baber law down to the present time. They are frauds and humbugs and they have been going on from bad to worse, and this proposal if adopted would give the general assembly what, in my judgment, it never has had, constitutional power to regulate primary elections. I do not believe any general assembly has the right to interfere with the power of the people to come together and agree on whom they will support.

Certainly I did not intend to make any joke of this proposition. I intended it in dead earnest. I do not know how this went through on its second reading. I don't believe I was present. At any rate it had nearly a unanimous vote. But that does not affect me much. I am like the fellow was at the revival meeting. Once upon a time there was a fellow somewhat inebriated staggered into the back part of a church where there was a revival meeting going on, and he dropped down into a pew and went to sleep. After a while the minister got worked up and he was down in front of the platform walking back and forth and he said "All of you who believe in a hereafter and who want to go to Heaven stand to your feet." The congregation rose as one man. Then he requested them to sit down and he called for all who wanted to go in the opposite direction to rise. Just at that moment the inebriated individual awoke and he stumbled to his feet and said, "Mr. Chairman, I don't know just what this question here is that we are voting on, but I do know that you and I are in a very small minority."

I don't care anything about being in a minority if I think I am right and I believe I am right on this subject of primary elections. I have been thinking about it for years and I have never had any faith in them and the legislature should have a right to regulate them.

Mr. WATSON: I hope the amendment by my good friend Judge Peck will not prevail, as each one of us knows that it will destroy the efficacy of the proposal. I hope the proposal will go through as presented.

Mr. STEVENS: I am surprised at the statement that the member from Hamilton does not know how this proposal came to pass on the second reading. If you will turn to the journal of April 16 you will find that the name of the gentleman from Hamilton is recorded as voting for this proposal. That will probably give him some information as to how the proposal got through and there were one hundred votes for it and only two against it. If you don't like the proposal and want to beat it, vote against it fair and square, but don't kill it by amendment. Meet your enemies fair and square.

Mr. PECK: I have no enemies in this Convention. I vote on principles. I never vote for personal reasons.

Mr. WINN: I just want to say a word about the proposal. I have for a good many years hoped to see the day when elective officers of the state, district, county and municipality would all be chosen at primary elections. I believe that is the only fair way, and I have hoped, as many of us have, against hope that sometime the legislature would see fit to enact a statute by which all of those officers would be nominated at primaries. But the legislature has refused, as you know, time and again to make a provision through which senators might be nominated that way; so that we have this peculiar situation: We go to primaries to nominate members of the house of representatives but always go to a convention to nominate senators because there are always so many men in the senate who know they could not get back if they were to depend upon primaries.

Now I hope that this proposal will be adopted. I am not going to be a candidate for anything, but I want this proposal to be adopted nevertheless. If this amendment offered by the gentleman from Cincinnati [Mr. PECK] is adopted it means that the whole proposal is absolutely nothing.

Mr. STOKES: I move the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Hamilton and on the proposal itself.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the amendment offered by Judge Peck, of Cincinnati.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 34, nays 68, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Bowdle,	Hahn,	Malin,
Brattain,	Halfhill,	Marshall,
Brown, Pike,	Hoffman,	Matthews,
Campbell,	Johnson, Madison,	Mauck,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 249—Mr. Tannehill, to submit an amendment by adding section 7, to article V, of the constitution.—Primary elections.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of Primary Elections—Organization of Board of Education.

the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal offices shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers of municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

Mr. MARRIOTT: When Proposal No. 329—Mr. Knight, was before the Convention for final passage, I voted against it and the proposal failed. Since that time I have been reliably advised that the American Book Trust has been for weeks lobbying against this proposal. There must be something good in it if the American Book Trust opposes it. I have known a little of the blighting effects of that monopoly upon the people of this state and I move to reconsider the vote by which this Proposal No. 329 was lost.

Mr. LAMPSON: I now move that we recess until eight o'clock tonight.

The motion to recess was carried.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president pro tem [Mr. Dory].

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby Proposal No. 329 was lost.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I demand a call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: A call of the Convention is demanded. The sergeant-at-arms will close the doors and the secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Beatty, Wood,	FitzSimons,	Redington,
Bowdle,	Hahn,	Rorick,
Brown, Lucas,	Henderson,	Shaffer,
Brown, Pike,	Kilpatrick,	Stamm,
DeFrees,	Leslie,	Tallman,

Evans,	Miller, Fairfield,	Worthington,
Farnsworth,	Partington,	Mr. President.
Fess,	Peck,

The president pro tem announced that ninety-three members had answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The sergeant-at-arms will dispatch his messengers for the absentees.

The sergeant-at-arms appeared at the bar of the Convention with Mr. Partington and Mr. Shaffer.

Their names being called they answered "here."

Mr. TAGGART: I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the motion of the delegate from Delaware [Mr. MARRIOTT] to reconsider the vote by which Proposal No. 329 was lost.

Mr. KNIGHT: Personally I regret extremely that the motion to reconsider has brought into discussion a factor which, as one interested in this proposal, I had purposely avoided introducing. Sometime before this amendment was proposed and offered in this Convention I had been aware of the fact that there were three kinds of opposition to it that might be looked for. I was notified by some of my colleagues and by gentlemen of long acquaintance upon the street, with whom I had talked over the proposal, that as soon as it was introduced it would receive the active opposition of a very large concern interested in the publication of public school books. No sooner was the proposal introduced than that statement seemed to be verified. There have been three kinds of opposition. One entirely honest opposition, as I am glad to believe, from those interested in the rural schools in the state of Ohio, and that opposition I believe has been entirely removed by the amendment, which was offered by myself and accepted and adopted this afternoon, confining the referendum vote to city school districts alone and leaving the rural districts entirely untouched.

The second form of opposition came from an unexpected quarter because it was farthest from the minds of any that it would be involved here and that seemed to hint at suppressing or crippling the good work or life or activity of two old colleges in the state of Ohio, the Ohio University and the Miami University. The proposition has nothing of that sort in view and that opposition may easily be allayed if there is any longer an idea that the proposal has any such purpose, by the acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Butler. I cannot speak for anyone else, but I am so interested in two features of this proposal that I am willing, for the sake of having those two main features adopted, so far as I am personally concerned, to have the amendment adopted striking out the words "an educational," making it applicable to the public school system.

The third opposition has come from those who feared that the proposal would in some way take out of the hands of all school districts and centralize in the state control of every school and the management of the school system of the state of Ohio. As to the last I have given a most careful examination of the proposal and compared it with similar proposals in other states that are now upon the statute books, and I am unable to find anything in the proposal which will warrant, in the least degree, any fear on that ground. If there be anything in it that does it, I shall be extremely glad to have it pointed out so that I can take away that feature. What this tries to provide for is what we have never had—a head of the public school system, a supervisory power, and without doubt control in the lawmaking power over the educational public school system as a unit.

The third opposition came also—and I can see why it came—from a large body of citizens of this state who are interested not only in the public schools, but in the private parochial schools, and the objection from that source was relieved by the acceptance of the amendment of the delegate from Montgomery, which makes it clear that this proposal touches no schools except those supported by public funds. The state has been circularized from one end to another by circulars which are absolutely untrue as to the contents of this proposal. These circulars have stated that the adoption of this proposal would place in the hands of each school district in the state the power to defeat the compulsory education law and would leave to each district to decide whether we would have the schools a minimum length of time, and it would conflict with the state requirement as to the minimum wage scale for teachers, and all that. That statement is false from start to finish. It was furnished to the newspapers of the state to be sent over the state, and but for the kindness of one newspaper man it would not have come to my notice until it was spread over the state. There is not now and never has been in the proposal a thing to warrant any such statement. I know, and other members of this Convention know, that for the last four weeks there have been constantly in the galleries and in the lobbies of this building and in the lobby on this floor those who have been working against this proposal, and I might say incidentally that among those is at least one person who within the last year has been actively working against the initiative and referendum in the state of Ohio and still is. This does not bear on this proposal, but it is information worth while. I regret that this was brought in here. Personally I have no idea that any gentleman who voted against the proposal this afternoon was influenced thereto by any such matter. I have learned that every one of my hundred and eighteen colleagues is here doing what he feels individually to be best for the state of Ohio, and I am very certain that the gentleman who moved the reconsideration has no such feeling with reference to any of our colleagues; but facts are facts, and I feel that no one who voted against the proposal this afternoon should feel that he is under an imputation personally. I desire that this proposal, if it is reconsidered, shall stand or fall upon its own merits, but I do believe that we ought to know, since the subject was raised here these facts. I think that the proposal is necessary for two reasons:

1. Because the municipal home rule proposal which we have passed is so broad that there is a possibility that unless this is adopted the city of Columbus might have power to do a good deal more in the way of control of its educational system than is desirable it should have. It would be inconsistent with the unified public school system of the state. As I stated on second reading, I was convinced more than ever before of the necessity of the first part of the proposal and the second part deals solely with the referendum, the right of the cities to decide the size of their school board. I hope the motion to reconsider will be adopted and if adopted, as I have already stated, so far as I am personally concerned, the amendment of the gentleman from Butler will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOSKINS: I have been in doubt about this proposal and I have been opposed to it. Nobody has put up any argument to me, but I should like to know the specific things which the educators have in view in the public school system.

Mr. KNIGHT: There are no present specific changes of any kind, but simply unquestioned authority on the part of the lawmaking power of the state to make such changes from time to time, under state control and under state centralized legislation, as the advancing of the state education and the demands of education in the state require. I have absolutely nothing up my sleeve.

Mr. HOSKINS: I did not insinuate you had anything up your sleeve. I supposed you had an idea of what you wanted to do.

Mr. KNIGHT: Personally I had an idea that we need in this state two things which we have never had. The best proposal that has been adopted by this Convention takes care of one of those, namely, it does provide for a head supervisor of the entire public school system and practically compels the legislature to provide for that. This one which we are now considering provides for all authority to the legislature to enact such legislation as shall under his guidance and direction make that school a real system. Now I speak as one who has come in contact with education, and while I am interested in higher education I am not entirely a university man. My entire life and education has been in the public schools supported by public taxation. All of my teaching has been there. While it is admitted that we have in Ohio the making of a good school system we have lacked that recognition of it outside of the state which has come from the fact that we have not a head of it as more than half of the states of the Union have provided in their constitutions and that the legislature has never had the power to do those things necessary, nor has the school commissioner, because he is a statutory officer and might be legislated out of office at a moment's notice at any time he urged anything contrary to the desires of the legislature.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it the intention of the proposal to confer any power of any sort to do anything except the management of public schools, and are all colleges and universities excluded from the operation of this proposal?

Mr. KNIGHT: What do you mean by all colleges?

Mr. HOSKINS: Does this proposal affect Miami or Athens?

Mr. KNIGHT: Not with the amendment of the gentleman from Butler, which, so far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to put in.

Mr. HOSKINS: It would not have in contemplation the creation of power to create a state board of regents to have supervision?

Mr. KNIGHT: This proposal does not give it unless it exists now.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do you think there is anything in this proposal that does not already exist in the legislature?

Mr. KNIGHT: In view of what is in the home rule proposal, I will have to answer this way: I feel that this proposal is necessary to make sure that the power hitherto exercised by the general assembly may not be split up into pieces among the various municipalities.

Organization of Boards of Education.

Mr. PIERCE: You have already heard the statement of the gentleman from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] and, so far as I am personally concerned, I trust the Convention will look at it in the same light. I would like to see the reconsideration ordered and thereupon I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. WINN: I shall vote against this proposal and I want two or three minutes to tell why. I shall vote against it because there is not a single thing that can be accomplished under this proposal that cannot be accomplished under existing constitutional provision. I forget what section it is, but one provision of the bill of rights—I think it is the seventh section—enjoins upon the general assembly of the state of Ohio the duty of establishing public schools. Section 2 of article VI provides in general terms that the general assembly shall make provision by taxation or otherwise for the establishment of a system of public education. Now go back with me to the old case of State vs. Cincinnati, decided in 19 O. S., away back before the colored men were enfranchised. Under existing provisions of the constitution Cincinnati provided for a special district to be presided over by a board of education of colored people to be chosen at the ballot box by the colored people. That was the case that first made Judge Foraker famous or infamous, whichever it may have been. It was maintained that inasmuch as the colored men were not citizens they could not be members of the board of education, yet the supreme court said if the legislature saw fit to create that special district of colored people, and to provide that the colored people should choose their own officers, they had a right under the constitution to do it. Just turn to one case decided by our supreme court. It is in the case of the State vs. McCann:

The system of public education in Ohio is the creature of the constitution and statutory laws of the state. * * * It is left to the discretion of the general assembly in the exercise of the general legislative power conferred upon it [by article II, section 1] to determine what laws are suitable to secure the organization and management of the contemplated system of common schools without expressed restriction except that no religious or other sect or sects shall ever have any exclusive right to or control of any part of the school funds of this state.

So you see the general assembly is left to do as it sees fit to do except that it cannot require any religious tests. Now, what can the legislature do under this Proposal No. 329 that cannot be done under the present constitution?

Mr. KNIGHT: Was it not the gentleman from Defiance [Mr. WINN] who introduced—and subsequently drafted an amendment—a complete substitute for section 7 of the municipal home rule proposal in place of the one drafted by the committee?

Mr. WINN: Yes, I did.

Mr. KNIGHT: That was adopted?

Mr. WINN: Yes, it was adopted.

Mr. KNIGHT: And it is because of that amendment so drafted that it becomes now questionable whether the power he has referred to in the constitution of 1851 is still such as to keep the cities from punching holes in the state educational system.

Mr. WINN: And do you claim that this Proposal No. 329 was drafted with reference to that amendment? I think the proposal was introduced long before the amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT: At the time it was on second reading was it not expressly stated that an additional strong reason for this was the adoption in the forenoon of the same day, at the instance of the gentleman from Defiance, of an amendment or substitute?

Mr. WINN: That may have been stated. I would not undertake to say what was said that day by the gentleman from Franklin. He may have said it on the floor or in the hall or in the smoking room.

But let us read this. I regard it as just that much reading matter of no importance. No person has asked me to vote for it or against it and outside of what I read in the paper, which you all read and which was to the effect that there was a movement on foot to defeat the proposal, I know nothing about the opposition. I read that in the paper the day after we voted on it on second reading.

"Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public schools and educational system of the state." This is already in the constitution. Now, there is just this much in the proposal that has some merit in it: "Provided, that each school district shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education."

But that also can be done now under existing provisions of the constitution.

Mr. STALTER: I desire to ask the member from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] if there is any difference between the language used in the present constitution which provides for an efficient system of common schools, and the language used in the proposal for the control of the public schools and educational system of the state. And then, inasmuch as the question has been raised about the American Book Company, I believe the information ought to be made known to this body whether the American Book Company has a registered lobbyist here, and if the company has not it would assist me to learn if the party making the charge about the American Book Company is registered. That would give me information.

Mr. ELSON: May I at this time make a reference to the statement of Mr. Stalter?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The gentleman has five minutes, if he can do it in that time.

Mr. ELSON: When I heard the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MARRIOTT] I felt absolutely sure, as I still feel, that he was entirely sincere in what he said, but that he was altogether mistaken. Soon after that vote was taken this afternoon the air was full of rumors about the American Book Company and it was hinted that a certain person was lobbying for the American Book Company. I knew who was meant and I felt I was well enough acquainted to go to headquarters and make inquiries and I did so. I think it is perfectly proper for me to say about whom I am talking, Mrs.

Organization of Boards of Education.

Mary Lee. I went to Mrs. Lee and I said, "Answer me this question directly and frankly: 'Are you employed by the American Book Company?'" She said, "On my honor I am not, and I never was for a single hour of my life. I have never received a dollar from that company." I said, "Whom do you represent as lobbyist here?" And she took two documents from her pockets and proved to me—I have them both here—whom she represented. One is signed by the master and secretary of the grange at Westerville, showing that she is representing them before the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio. The other is from the Ohio School Improvement Federation, which she has labored for for several years and is laboring for now. I think those are the institutions she represents. I have not the slightest doubt of her statements. She is a woman of absolutely irreproachable and unimpeachable character. She is a public-spirited woman who takes an interest in public questions, and would that we had thousands of other such women in Ohio as Mrs. Mary Lee. She was also accused some time ago of representing the Chamber of Commerce—the Ohio State Board of Commerce. I am absolutely sure that she never did anything of the sort. She opposed the initiative and referendum proposal and had as much right to do that as any one else had to be for it. She did it because she is in sympathy with a large class of farmers who oppose the initiative and referendum. I think it is due to the character of this excellent woman to say on the floor of this Convention what I have said, for if any one thinks she has done anything in the nature of work for the Chamber of Commerce or the American Book Company this explanation refutes it.

Now Professor Knight has agreed to take out the two words mentioned in the Pierce amendment. I have no personal reason to object to the reconsideration of this proposal, and if I do not vote for it in the end it will be because I believe with Mr. Winn, of Defiance, that it is covered entirely now by present provision. It seems to me a proposal providing for a school superintendent with powers to be defined by law would cover the whole ground, and that as far as the number of members of school boards in cities is concerned it seems to me that ought to be taken care of in the home rule proposition.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Gentlemen of the Convention: I think I should state, in justice to myself, my reasons for having made the motion to reconsider, and in corroboration of the statements just made by the gentleman from Athens [Mr. ELSON] I would state that I do not know if I ever saw a lobbyist. I would not know one if I was to see him. Information came to me after the vote was had upon Professor Knight's proposal that the American Book Company was interested in its defeat and that it had a lobbyist here lobbying against the adoption of that proposal. Members of this Convention in whom I had and have the most implicit confidence—as I have in every member of this Convention—gave me that information. Among other things that were stated it was said that the American Book Company had a lobbyist here in the person of a lady whose name has been mentioned by Professor Elson. I had never met this lady. She has never spoken to me nor had anyone else, before the vote was taken, either for or against this proposal. I had the pleasure of meeting that lady as I left the hall and I asked her the same question that Professor Elson has just said that he asked her. I am very sure if she were here she would give her consent that I state that she disclaimed representing the American Book Company and handed me a circular letter which had been sent out over the state, and probably to numerous delegates to this Convention, in opposition to the Knight proposal. She stated that she was interested in its defeat and had spoken to members of this Convention. I have no reason in the world to doubt the statement of the lady when she stated that she was not in the employ of the American Book Company but with the information that came to me I was unwilling to go upon record as voting for this proposal with the word going out that the American Book Company had employed a lobbyist here to lobby against this proposal, and I therefore made the motion to reconsider. I hope very much the matter will be reconsidered and that we may have another vote upon the proposal.

Mr. PARTINGTON: Members of the Convention: When I talked this afternoon I stated then that if the purpose and object of this proposal was to make for Ohio a unified system of public schools and place at its head the very best and brightest and most progressive school man that can be found anywhere in Ohio or outside, I would not object to it. After the amendment had been made this evening you will notice that the proponent has personally said that he is willing that the words "and educational" shall be taken out. That was my objection this afternoon and I want to say to you now that I have served on the educational committee in the legislature and every time that any system of schools was attempted to be worked out by the educational committee in the legislature we had this contest on between the Ohio State University and the other universities of the state. Now, if we are going to have a unified system of education, I ask you, when you reconsider this vote and when the question is before you again, if you can have a unified system of education in Ohio if Miami is absolutely independent and has a board of its own, if the same thing is true of Athens and with the Ohio State University and if it will be true of the normal schools? If these words are taken out those are outside of the unified system of education in Ohio. I state this not to injure the educational institutions of Ohio. I am in favor of them and they ought to be under the system if Ohio is to have a system of education just as well as any schools in the state of Ohio. They want to be independent. The gentleman from Athens [Mr. ELSON] knows that his opposition will cease if this institution can remain independent and run its own affairs as its own board sees fit. That is the question before the Convention tonight, and I say to you now, and I repeat, if Ohio wants to build up a system of public schools of which we and the people of Ohio can be proud, we cannot have half a dozen different boards; we must have one. Nobody from whatever source has any influence with me on this question. No American School Book Company or its agents would swerve me one tittle from my own purpose. I am not wishing to cripple or interfere with in any way Miami or Athens or any other school in the state, but this question is simply, Shall Ohio have a system of public schools with some individual at the head with an office at the state house at Columbus, or will we have half a dozen heads? That is the question, whether we shall have one system or half a dozen.

Mr. HURSH: I just want to say a word in conjunction with what the gentleman from Athens [Mr. ELSON] said. It was said that there was a lobbyist before this Convention for the Grange. I belong to four granges and no person who represents the Grange ought to leave the impression that the Grange is against the initiative and referendum. I am sure that the great majority of the granges in Ohio are in favor of the initiative and referendum.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question now is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

Mr. PIERCE: I offer an amendment to strike out the words "and educational".

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The only way to do that is to move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was lost.

Mr. PIERCE: I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is now on the amendment, which reads, "In line 6 strike out the words 'and educational'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is now on the passage of the proposal.

Mr. HOSKINS: If we had a resolution prepared we would introduce it now to recall you if you do not stop running this Convention too fast.

* The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOSKINS: This proposition is in much better shape than it was before this amendment was consented to. I was opposed to the proposition, and, with the gentleman from Defiance, I yet fail to see any necessity for it. But there is one word of protest I want to utter. I do not like to hear charges that sinister influences are at work in this Convention and that some awful crime against the common people is about to be committed by some poor lone woman on a hundred and nineteen able-bodied men and that some poor woman from somewhere has made her appearance here for the purpose of influencing the gentlemen from Cuyahoga and Ashtabula and all the other provinces of the northeastern part of the state. It is unbecoming to even make such a charge on the floor of the Constitutional Convention. No one has ever approached me upon this proposition. I do not think that I am any better than any other member of the Convention.

DELEGATES: Agreed.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The Convention will be in order and not interrupt the member.

Mr. HOSKINS: I am very glad to have this matter cleared up. I do not like to have a charge made at any time. I will tell you what I am afraid of in the proposal and if the proposal has been cleared up so that it relates only to unification of the public schools, I have no objection to it, but I do want to say to you that there has been a persistent effort in the state of Ohio for ten years past on the part of certain educational forces of the state to crush out the life of the weaker and smaller colleges in the interest of some larger colleges, and they have been laying their grip upon the life and vitals of some of the best educational institutions of the state, and some of the best educational institutions of the state are right now up against the power and influence of a certain college that would choke out their lives. And, when they come to provide the public educational system of the state, I fear that it will extend to the appointment of a board of regents or something of that sort who would have the supervision of the college affairs of this state and the power to grant degrees and the power to describe conditions on which degrees should be granted by different colleges. I want to say to you that I am a believer in the small educational institutions, in the diversified education that brings it nearer to the doors of the people, and I do not want to see anything adopted by this Convention that would militate against that, and that is the reason why I have looked with suspicion on this proposition and the reason why I failed to vote for it when it was up for passage. I have no objection as long as it relates to the unification of the public schools of the state.

As I say, I have been at a loss to see what purpose could be accomplished by the provision of the proposal contained in the first two lines, and not being able to see what purpose could be accomplished except the one I have mentioned, I have been disposed to be against it.

It is a fundamental proposition in constitutional law that the legislature has all legislative power that is not denied it. Now what legislative power has it on the school question under the present constitution?

Another fundamental principle is that if any constitutional provision is to be effective with reference to legislative power it must do one of two things: It must either restrict or deny power or it must regulate or control already existing power.

Now let us see what the present power is. The present power is unqualified except in one respect. There is one thing enjoined upon the legislative power now with reference to the public schools and that is solely to raise enough revenue to provide for those schools. In every other respect the legislative power over schools now is absolute and complete. What can be the effect of this proposed amendment? It is not a grant of power. It does not curtail power and it does not deny the power to act upon any subject, but it is solely an attempt to restrain the exercise of power, to guide or control the exercise of power. Now, the query with me was, What is to be the effect? In what way is it to be guided or controlled? In what way is it to be exercised? The language of this proposal is, "Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state." It therefore follows, this being not a denial of power, that it is a simple provision prescribing the manner in which the power shall be exercised. Not just as with the taxation question. The power of the legislature is complete over taxation now with the provision that laws shall be passed levying, etc. That is simply a regulation of the manner of the exercise of that power. Applying that principle to this proposal, it amounts to a restriction of the manner in which the power may be exercised. It therefore follows that legislation now can be enacted and restricted to what is herein provided. What would that be? Provide for the organization and control of the public school system. Control by whom—by what? If by some central power, what central power? Controlled by this new constitutional officer created by this other provision referred to.

Mr. ELSON: I want to make an answer to a statement by Mr. Partington. He seems to be greatly distrustful from the fact that the universities are not dependent upon one another. Is the work that they are doing coordinate and equal work? Is there any possibility of their being dependent on one another? Are our high schools dependent upon one another?

Mr. ROEHM: I move the previous question on this matter.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 71, nays 26, as follows:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 329—Mr. Knight, to submit an amendment by adding section 3 to article VI, of the constitution.—Organization of boards of education.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. KNIGHT: There was a motion passed the other day that all proposals amended be referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology. I now move that all proposals be referred to that committee in order that they can bring in the grand resolution at the end

The motion was carried.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move that one thousand copies of Proposal No. 304 as passed be printed.

The motion was carried.

Mr. PECK: I desire leave to call attention of the Convention to the matter of the invitation from Cincinnati. It is about time that we should make answer. If we are going down there Saturday they ought to know it.

However, the president suggests that we wait until we are through with this initiative and referendum proposal and I will defer.

Mr. CROSSER: I submit the following report:

The report was read as follows:

The special committee to which was referred Proposal No. 2—Mr. Crosser, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended:

In line 17 strike out the word "twelve" and in lieu thereof insert "ten".

Strike out lines 28 to 50 inclusive and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SECTION 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly, either as petitioned for or in an amended form it shall be subject to the referendum. If said proposed law shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action be taken thereon, within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, the same shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which petition must be filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after such proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months in the event no action has been taken thereon or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of such secretary. Such proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition which shall be either in the form as first petitioned for or after there shall have been incorporated therein any amendment or amendments thereto introduced in the general assembly. In the event that a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect, as herein provided, in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors."

Initiative and Referendum.

In line 52 strike out "in the case of proposed laws" and insert period after "petition".

In line 53 strike out words "or in case of proposed amendments".

In line 107 after "initiative" insert ", supplementary".

In line 110 after "initiative" insert ", supplementary".

In line 131 after "initiative" insert "and supplementary".

In line 135 after "initiative" insert ", supplementary".

In line 149 strike out all after the comma (,).

In line 150 insert after "any" the word "proposed".

In the same line strike out "initiative" and in lieu thereof insert "supplementary".

In line 164 strike out all after the period (,).

Strike out all of lines 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172 and to and including the period in 173.

In line 173 after "initiative" insert the words "and supplementary".

Strike out all of lines 53, 54 and 55 up to and including the period.

The committee further recommends that all pending amendments be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CROSSER: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: The committee's report simply carries into effect that which the president suggested as a good compromise this morning. Of course, it is unnecessary for me to say it is not entirely pleasing to me. At the same time I presume it is equally as good or better than what was there before.

The only thing that needs explaining is in the solid type on the first page. The other amendments were to take care of the changes made by that. The provision for competing measures had to be cut out. I suppose in strict justice I ought to say that Mr. Cassidy could do more toward answering questions than I can.

Mr. CASSIDY: The object of the committee was to get rid, if possible, of the form of ballot which gave us so much trouble this morning. In order to do that we had to remodel entirely section 4, lines 28 to 50, inclusive. The committee struck out entirely the indirect initiative on constitutional amendments. That goes out entirely. We have recommended in place of that the direct initiative on constitutional amendments, reducing the percentage on direct initiative from twelve to ten. That is the change made in line seventeen. We suggest that "twelve" be stricken out and "ten" be inserted, reducing it two per cent on the direct initiative on constitutional amendments.

With regard to conditions for legislation, in the original proposition as passed on second reading, there was the indirect initiative on constitutional amendments on eight per cent. Striking that out as we did, we recommend to reduce the direct per cent from twelve to ten. With regard to petitions to be filed to secure legislation, we applied, to distinguish all of the way through from initiated petitions, what we call supplemental petitions or referendum petitions. This suggestion of the committee would require a petition signed by three per cent of the electors of the state. This percentage must be distributed over the state in the different counties just the same as the percentage required in the original proposal. When the petition filed by three per cent of the electors is presented to the secretary of state or filed with him ten days before the opening session of a general assembly, he transmits the proposed bill so petitioned for to the general assembly just as in the former proposal. The general assembly can either fail to take any action on it, amend it and pass it in its amended form or pass it just as proposed. If the general assembly enacts the proposal as asked for, that is an end of it all, unless six per cent ask for a referendum under the referendum section, which is left intact, just as it was.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: After that law is passed according to the initiative petition, then six per cent refers it?

Mr. CASSIDY: Yes.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: The three per cent that has already been used, does that count in the six per cent?

The PRESIDENT: Go on with your explanation.

Mr. CASSIDY: Let me continue and I will come back to that point a little bit later. When a bill has been petitioned for by three per cent of the electorate the general assembly can either pass it as it was proposed or in an amended form, or can reject it or take no action on it. If it is passed as proposed or petitioned for, that is the end of the whole matter, unless action is taken under the referendum section, which is left intact as it was in the original proposal.

If they amend it and pass it in the amended form then it becomes a law unless an additional three per cent — not the same petitioners in the first petition, but an additional three per cent, making it altogether six per cent. Unless this additional three per cent file a petition within ninety days afterward for an election, asking to have that proposed law, either in the form in which it was petitioned originally or containing any amendment which may have been offered thereto while in the general assembly, submitted in that form at the next regular or general election. If such petition is filed within ninety days after the bill has been passed or filed with the secretary of state, then the bill as petitioned for in that supplementary petition is submitted to the voters to be voted on. If a majority vote against it then the amended bill as passed by the general assembly remains the law, but if a majority vote in favor of that bill as asked for in the supplemental petition, then it takes the place of the bill as passed by the general assembly and becomes the law. If the general assembly fails to take action on the proposed bill for four months, then, within ninety days after the expiration of that four months, an additional three per cent to the three per cent originally petitioning can present a petition for that measure and that also is submitted to the voters; or, if the bill has been rejected by the legislature and voted down by the legislature, then within ninety days after it has been so rejected, if an additional three per cent petitions for it, it is also in that case submitted to the electorate, requiring a total percentage of six, the same as in the original proposal, to put any measure to a vote of the electors. The requirements for this supplemental petition, as far as being verified, and all others, are the same as for the petition in the original proposal.

The only other change made was the inserting of the word "supplementary" where it was necessary all through the proposal. We leave out entirely the lines referring to the former ballot. Now, if any one has any question I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. HALFHILL: I would like to inquire when the signers must put their names upon that additional three per cent called the supplementary petition?

Mr. CASSIDY: There is no specific requirement in the report saying when they shall put their names to it. The presumption would be that they would not be called upon to prepare this supplementary petition until it is evident that it will be needed.

Mr. HALFHILL: Why not make that clear by the language, "which petition must be filed with the secretary of state ninety days after the proposal shall have been rejected"? Why not make it read this way: "Which petition must be signed and filed—

Mr. CASSIDY: I had not thought myself that those supplementary petitions would ever be gotten up until they were evidently necessary.

Mr. HALFHILL: Don't you know that six per cent could be taken at the time the petitions were circulated and three per cent could be filed and the other three per cent held as a club to compel the general assembly to do what was wanted?

Mr. CASSIDY: The present proposal requires an election on six per cent, but the proposal also provides for a competing measure. This proposal takes out all question, and there is no competing measure here that goes to the people.

Mr. HALFHILL: Have you any objection to inserting the words that the petition must be filed and signed with the secretary of state, etc.?

Mr. CASSIDY: Speaking as one member of the committee, I would have to think of that. I cannot answer for the whole committee. The point was not discussed.

Mr. HALFHILL: What do you think about it?

Mr. CASSIDY: I do not think I would personally want to vote for that.

Mr. HALFHILL: Why not?

Mr. CASSIDY: I would not without further consideration.

Mr. HALFHILL: What objection have you to it personally?

Mr. CASSIDY: It might be that ninety days would prove a mighty short time to get three per cent of the voters of the state. If I were preparing a bill I might want to work longer than that. We have only three months after the bill is rejected.

Mr. HALFHILL: Suppose you make it one hundred and twenty days; would you have any objection?

Mr. CASSIDY: Not so much as to ninety.

Mr. HALFHILL: Is there any objection in your mind against having these signatures taken at a date subsequent to the first signatures?

Mr. CASSIDY: Not if the time is long enough.

Mr. KNIGHT: May I ask you right there: Is it not true that in the case of a pure referendum you have only ninety days to get the per cent?

Mr. CASSIDY: That is true.

Mr. KNIGHT: Would there be more objection here to getting three per cent in ninety days than getting six per cent in ninety days?

Mr. CASSIDY: The point is novel to me. I hadn't thought of it.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to ask what, if anything, in this proposal would prevent—assuming the general assembly has not passed the measure, but that several different amendments have been offered in the general assembly—what prevents two three-per-cent petitions?

Mr. CASSIDY: There might be something.

Mr. KNIGHT: One would embody a certain amendment, and the other would embody a certain other amendment.

Mr. CASSIDY: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: That thing has happened in the general assembly itself in some years.

Mr. CASSIDY: And the result would be taken care of by lines 60 to 64 of the original proposal.

Mr. KING: You have all of those made pretty short. I do not know a state in the Union that has a system like this that doesn't give much longer time. Wisconsin requires those petitions to be filed four months before the next general state election, giving ample time, and the period of four months after the legislature looks to me that you might find it was too short.

Mr. CASSIDY: But the reason why I personally adhere to four months and ninety days provided the measure was introduced in the legislature on the first of January is in order to get the law before the people in time for the November election—that would be seven months.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: As a member of the committee, I feel like answering Mr. Halfhill's question myself, to say that it is a simple, practical, common-sense proposition. Why should we go to great expense and trouble to get the six per cent petition until after the legislature had refused to enact the law? We always have to furnish that additional three per cent. The whole object of the general underlying principle of this proposal is to avoid as many elections on questions submitted back to the people as possible. If the legislature appreciates the wisdom of the proposed law and enacts it, that ends it, and we are satisfied. Now, if the legislature refuses to do it for good reasons, then we have to furnish three per cent more, making a total of six per cent before we can get it before the people.

Mr. HALFHILL: I understand, but I do not know whether you understand fully what I had in mind. I want that extra three per cent signed within ninety days after the bill is passed on by the legislature. In other words, I object to getting six per cent and then presenting three to the legislature and holding the other three back to present at a later time.

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: It is a self-evident proposition that the securing of the three per cent when one-half of them have to be secured in not less than one-half of the counties of the state, is an expensive sort of a proposition, and nobody would try to get six per cent in the first throw out of the box because of its enormous expense and trouble. This thing is not a spontaneous proposition and there is no necessity for that additional expense and trouble until after the legislature has refused to accept the bill. Then the greater burden is put upon those who advocate the bill by having to go out again to get the additional three per cent. And yet they will do it in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases on account of the first initial charge of getting the six per cent.

Mr. HALFHILL: Would you personally as a member of the committee, object to inserting the necessary words to have it read "which petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days" and so forth?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: That question did not come up in the committee while I was there. Now permit me to ask a question. Assuming, for the sake of argument, we will agree to do that, will you agree to support this proposal?

Mr. HALFHILL: Not until I look over it and find out what it means. I do not know whether I shall support it or not. It is a wide departure from what it was before.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I think it is conservative.

Mr. ANDERSON: I want to ask Mr. Cassidy a question. To get a law initiated there must be three per cent and then we will say that the legislature refuses to pass the law. Then on supplemental petition of three per cent it could be submitted to the voters?

Mr. CASSIDY: Yes—six per cent in all.

Mr. ANDERSON: But if the legislature passed it in an amended form—assuming, for the sake of argument, that in its amended form it would be entirely satisfactory to all the people who signed the first petition, that would not in any way prevent its enemies from getting up another petition of three per cent. Then, as a matter of fact, haven't you left the door wide open so that the enemies of any measure can have full power to nullify practically everything the friends of the measure have done?

Mr. CASSIDY: You cannot close the door against enemies and leave it open to friends.

Mr. DWYER: You strike out in line 17 the word "twelve" and insert "ten"?

Mr. CASSIDY: We suggest that.

Mr. DWYER: This says, "If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to the referendum." Why do you put that in?

Mr. CASSIDY: If any person wants to defeat the measure entirely he can exercise the powers under the referendum at six per cent.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I take it that under this proposed plan it is probable that any one seeking to submit a law will usually try to get the six per cent while they are on the job, and that they could use the three per cent to bring it to the attention of the legislature and hold the other three per cent in reserve. Now the question is, after the legislature has amended the proposal and passed it, who are we going to have determine whether this three per cent is satisfied or dissatisfied with the amendment? I do not know whether the committee has considered that, but if you have let me have an explanation.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: In case the measure is initiated and the legislature passes it just as presented could it be referred by three per cent more or would it require six per cent?

Mr. CASSIDY: It would require six per cent.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to say that the committee that had charge of this work delegated to a subcommittee the actual drafting of the report. This subcommittee has worked very hard all afternoon and the total output is upon one sheet of paper. I only call your attention to that to show you that while their work took a long time the net output of words is comparatively small. Every word there has been carefully considered. I am speaking about this with special reference to the inquiry of the gentleman from Allen as to whether the members can answer all questions, and if not whether they will admit one word or two. The putting in of those one or two words might unbalance some other part. The other suggestion he makes I cannot answer, and I doubt whether the subcommittee which has been working on this matter this afternoon can do it. Now, I suggest this, that we vote upon receiving and agreeing to the report of the committee and when we have done that we can offer amendments. When we have done that, we are then in a position where it would be possible to amend if there is any part of the report you desire to amend further. It is not possible to amend the report of the committee. I suggest that we get it in the shape of a proposal so that we can proceed in regular order in the way that we are familiar with.

Mr. KNIGHT: Would not the committee consent to the change of one word in line 20?

Mr. DOTY: The committee might agree to make the change, but the Convention cannot.

Mr. KNIGHT: I suggest that the committee change the word "such" to "the".

Mr. DOTY: If there is no objection the secretary can incorporate that. Now I trust that we may at this time adopt the report, and then we have the proposal in engrossed shape so that we can proceed in regular order if we desire.

Mr. PETTIT: I move that the report of the committee be agreed to.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is "Shall Proposal No. 2 pass?"

Mr. STILWELL: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out of lines 65 and 66 the words "and approved by the electors".

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. STILWELL: The sentence will then read, "No law proposed by initiative petition shall be subject to the veto power of the governor".

The purpose is that after the law has been initiated and passed by the general assembly it may not be vetoed by the governor, and if that is left in as it is the veto power of the governor extends to initiated legislation, which in my judgment is wrong. That was not the intention of the framers of this proposal.

Mr. WOODS: You want to amend this so that the governor cannot veto a bill which the electors of the state have not voted upon?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. WOODS: The three per cent may petition now and the general assembly may enact the bill into law and the people never vote on it.

Mr. STILWELL: That is true.

Mr. WOODS: Do you not think that if the people have not voted upon it that the governor should have the right to veto it?

Mr. STILWELL: Not if it has been initiated by the people. Not after going to the trouble of petitioning for the bill and it has been taken to the general assembly and the general assembly has passed it. I do not think that should be open to the veto power of the governor.

Mr. WOODS: I do not think that the three per cent influence should be so great as to override the ninety-seven per cent.

Mr. STILWELL: But it should be sufficient in this instance to overpower the governor after it is approved by the general assembly.

Mr. COLTON: What would be the case as to the veto power of the governor if the bill submitted by the initiative has been amended so that it comes from the legislature practically a different bill from that initiated by petition?

Mr. STILWELL: In my judgment the veto power of the governor even in that instance should not be applicable. After a matter has been thoroughly threshed over by the general assembly the governor should not be allowed to veto it. It has not been long that the governor had any veto power at all.

Mr. ULMER: Would not the veto power rest in the people when they can change it by three per cent? When we have the referendum the governor would have no veto power at all. It is with the people.

Mr. STILWELL: If there were such serious objection as to require the veto power of the governor it could be beaten by a referendum.

Mr. KING: About one-third of the way down, after having spoken about the three per cent—about the middle of the proposal—it says, "shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which petition must be filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after such proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months in the event no action has been taken thereon or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of such secretary." Does not that admit the power of the governor to pass upon the bill and veto or approve by filing it in the office of the secretary of state and does not your amendment conflict with that of your colleague [Mr. CROSSER]?

Mr. KEHOE: Might not the governor's veto be an advantage sometimes when the proposed measure was amended to such an extent as to justify the veto? Would it not save the expense of a referendum?

Mr. STILWELL: I hardly think so. Personally I would not expect the general assembly to emasculate a bill petitioned for by the people. The referendum will always operate as a veto if it is seriously objectionable to any considerable number of people.

Mr. KEHOE: Would it not save the trouble if a measure was mutilated and the governor's veto could be effective?

Mr. STILWELL: Personally I would not expect him to do that.

Mr. MOORE: If they mutilate by amendment would not the three per cent come in on the original proposed law and the governor's veto become null and void?

Mr. NYE: Would you not be taking away from the governor the power to protect the people?

Mr. STILWELL: That protection is still there with the three per cent additional as provided for or the six per cent upon the referendum, if there is any serious objection to it.

Mr. NYE: Then with the three per cent of the electors are you not taking away from the ninety-seven per cent the right of the governor to protect the rest of the people?

Mr. STILWELL: No, I don't think that way, for the very reason that if there is any merit in the veto it can be accomplished by an additional three per cent of the electors.

Mr. NYE: Suppose the people wanted this and you are depriving the people of the right to ask the governor to veto it?

Mr. STILWELL: But that can be done with the additional three per cent.

Mr. NYE: But you have to vote on it?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes; you have to vote, of course.

Mr. NYE: Would it not be better to leave this in as it is?

Mr. STILWELL: I do not think so. That is simply my opinion. They have gone to the expense of initiating legislation and it has been approved by the general assembly and I maintain that the governor ought not to have the power to veto legislation of that character.

Mr. NYE: In the case you are speaking of you have the petition only.

Mr. STILWELL: That is true and the legislature might amend it to the disadvantage of those who had petitioned for it and still the governor could not veto it. That is true.

Mr. NYE: And the legislature might amend it to the disadvantage of those who had petitioned for it and still the governor could not veto it; doesn't that put it in bad shape?

Mr. KING: Do you understand that your amendment taking away the veto power only applies to those bills passed as petitioned for?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. MOORE: Suppose the bill as petitioned for by three per cent of the electors has passed the general assembly precisely as the petition was and the governor sees fit to veto that; what happens?

Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. STILWELL: The bill fails.

Mr. MOORE: How would you get it before the people?

Mr. STILWELL: A referendum on six or eight per cent.

Mr. FLUKE: There is a part of this proposed amendment that provides for a petition, but it must be by three per cent of the voters of the state. That is purely an initiative petition?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. FLUKE: Is there anything in this amendment that would interfere with getting six per cent of the voters and using one-half of them to initiate and reserving the other one-half to secure the referendum?

Mr. STILWELL: That question was asked and answered by Mr. Cassidy a while ago.

Mr. FLUKE: It seems to me that the three per cent should be obtained after the action of the legislature.

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. FLUKE: It seems to me that the three per cent to initiate should be first secured and then the additional three per cent obtained in the way of a referendum petition after the action on the bill. Is not that right?

Mr. STILWELL: No; the three per cent is additional and added to the original three per cent.

Mr. ROEHM: Suppose a law is initiated and there should be a number of amendments proposed in the legislature and those amendments should be voted down and possibly a substitute amendment adopted. Then upon a three per cent petition of signatures could any subsequent amendment go right directly to the people?

Mr. STILWELL: Yes.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It was suggested here this evening that those interested could in securing the three per cent with which they expected to initiate a law, get an additional three per cent to hold in readiness as an additional requirement to refer with. If that could be done how is it to be decided which half of the six per cent would be used for the initiative and which for referendum? In other words, would it not be obtaining signatures under false pretenses and would it not be better to put in this proposal that the subsequent three per cent must be secured at a date later than the time when the legislature acted?

Mr. STILWELL: That same question has been asked and has been answered.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I was called out of the room and I don't know what the answer was.

Mr. STILWELL: The last three per cent must be secured after the legislature has acted.

Mr. WOODS: I want to call attention now to this proposed amendment. This amendment strikes out words from lines 65 and 66 and if you adopt the amendment it will read, "No law proposed by initiative petition shall be subject to the veto power of the governor." Now a bill may be petitioned into the general assembly and that general assembly may strike out everything except the title and insert something else. Now that something else may be something that the people do or do not want and you have it so that the governor cannot veto it. It seems to me if the governor is to have the veto power at all it is for that very proposition. I think we want to be careful. I do not think that this amendment should go in and I move to lay it on the table.

The motion to table was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I offer an amendment. The amendment was read as follows:

Insert after "signed" in line 17 of section 1b as shown in the journal "subsequent to actions on the proposed law by the general assembly or in case the general assembly fails to act then subsequent to four months after the proposed law shall have been transmitted to the general assembly by the secretary of state".

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I am not quite sure where I want that to go in, but it is in the committee's report and it is after the word "signed" in line 17.

Mr. HALFHILL: I have an amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: Do you not think it would be best to handle one amendment at a time?

Mr. HALFHILL: Mine is on the same subject.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Allen offers this as a substitute.

The substitute was read as follows:

In line 19 of section 1b as shown on the journal insert "signed and" after "be".

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: If it saves time I will accept that amendment in lieu of mine.

Mr. READ: I offer an amendment:

Strike out all of section 1e, beginning with line 96 and ending with line 101 inclusive.

Mr. LAMPSON: I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Does the member from Summit yield to the motion?

Mr. READ: No.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Then the member has five minutes.

Mr. READ: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: The amendment I have offered proposes to strike out the section from the initiative and referendum proposal which reads as follows:

The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and the "referendum" shall never be used to enact a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

In requesting the Convention to eliminate that section I am only asking you to remove the barrier which prevents this body of constitution framers from recognizing the unlimited and sovereign power of the people in government.

If the American citizen is a sovereign he has a right to express his will at the polls upon any measure he wishes to approve or reject. In other words, the principle of the initiative and referendum, from its very nature and purpose, inevitably implies that in the enactment of governmental or economic laws, there can be none in the whole category of statutes or parts thereof upon which the will of the people shall not be supreme. We have claimed for it undeniable right to be used everywhere, by anyone, rich or poor, for any purpose, sectional or state wide, firmly relying on the justice and wisdom of the popular verdict.

Now, when we come to crystallize it into practical form what do we find in that provision? A denial of its essential features, a limitation of its application. That is what an exception to the use of the initiative and referendum means. If direct legislation is a practical means of having government by the people, then there should be perfect freedom to use it on every question affecting the welfare of man.

In the concrete case before us there is an inhibition against its use for ascertaining the popular judgment on a certain phase of tax problems. It is not because the inhibition applies to a taxation question that I object to it. I would deplore it just as much if the ban were placed on bond issues, on good roads, on the liquor traffic, or on any question which might come up for popular decision.

The only correct conception of a true initiative and referendum proposal is that it must have universal and uniform application to all questions alike, and that any and all persons with remedies to propose, whatever be their merits or demerits, if there is a sufficient demand for a popular verdict thereon, they should be considered and disposed of by the electorate.

Take away from direct or indirect legislation its unlimited and its unqualified use to the needs and desires of man and you destroy its fundamental principle. Restrict it in application and you repudiate its crowning virtue. Deny its right to be used on one economic question and you grant the right to deny its use on others, or on all questions, and thus undermine the whole principle. These are the reasons why that restrictive and prohibitory section should be stricken out. It is irrelevant and repugnant to the doctrine of popular government.

There is an old maxim which says: "We need not fear error so long as reason is left free to combat it."

No agency ever devised by man affords a more candid exercise of sincere individual opinion than the referendum. And if error stands no show of success with truth in a free, fair contest, why should any one fear that an economic fraud might be foisted on the people by such means? Calm your perturbed spirit; there is no such peril pending. Under the referendum, right alone will conquer, intelligence reign and justice prevail.

I do not accuse those delegates of sinister motives who succeed in placing this handicap on the referendum. I do not challenge their honesty nor their sincerity. I believe they were prompted by an honest desire to checkmate a supposed contemplated movement to get the single tax by that means. I do not believe they realize how vitally they were affecting the efficiency of the initiative and referendum by their action. And again, I do not believe they realize how very remote is the possibility of getting single tax by that means. You can never fasten anything on the people by their own consent that they do not want. And they do not want the single tax now and maybe never will. But whether they ever shall or shall not want it, we have no moral or constitutional right to say they shall not have the opportunity of securing it for themselves if they ever should want it.

Another argument used by some of those favoring the inhibition in the proposal was that if the people were assured that the single tax would not be voted upon under the referendum the initiative and referendum proposal would be adopted at the constitutional election and otherwise it would fail to meet approval at the polls. What is our duty in this matter, our obligation as constitution framers? To circumscribe and weaken our propositions merely to catch votes, or to perform our work with fidelity and courage regardless of consequences?

Having enlisted in the cause and pledged our honor, will we falter and surrender without giving battle? The citizens of Ohio expect us to "hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." They expect us to have the courage of our convictions, to be true to ourselves and trust in them.

This imaginary fear of a single-tax blight is ridiculous in the extreme. Do we underestimate the judgment, the intelligence and the common sense of the average Ohio citizen that we fear he would deliberately put his neck into the yoke of bondage on the one hand, while on the other he asks for a fair and just provision in our constitution for the referendum? Do you not think he wants an opportunity of expressing himself against certain propositions as well as for others? To view the voter from any other standpoint is to deny his independence of thought and freedom of the ballot. What does experience teach on this point? When Oregon adopted a direct legislation amendment to her constitution ten years ago by a vote of over ten to one there were many more singletaxers in Oregon in proportion to the population of the state than there are in Ohio at the present time. What has been the result? After ten years of voting, on nearly one hundred propositions, about one-third of them being adopted, a single-tax measure was placed before the people once, and what was the result? Why, it was voted down at the polls by a decisive majority. There being less of the single-tax sentiment in our state comparatively than in Oregon, do you think there is any danger from this source in Ohio? No, no, my friends, there is no ground for alarm; simply be candid and honest and the referendum itself will be your safeguard. It is the only safeguard you can give the people and it is the only safeguard they want; but they want it in its purity and fullness and in its unqualified use.

You have heard and read individual protests against the introduction of foreign matter and incoherent ideas into the initiative and referendum proposal. Now let me quote some brief comment from newspapers which appeared shortly after said proposal had passed second reading in this Convention. A part of the comment editorially of the Ohio State Journal was as follows:

It does not seem illogical to adopt a plan directly appealing to the people and then declare there are two subjects the will of the people shall not control. In other words, the Convention, which affects so much devotion to the popular will, declares that on two questions the popular will is no good—that its own opinion is wiser and safer than that of the people.

We make no objection to these exceptions, for it is the duty of a constitutional convention to place restrictions on the popular will. Its duty is to say to the majority—"you must behave yourself; you must not tramp on the rights of the few." And yet, these two exceptions come so close to legislative control that it looks very inconsistent for a body in love with the people to deny them the exercise of their judgment upon these subjects.

Another editorial about the same time appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer under the caption of "Limiting the Initiative." After a few introductory words it said:

Opponents of the initiative and referendum are taking the wholly unsound position that these legislative devices should be circumscribed in such a way as to prevent their use to secure certain proscribed statute alterations. Had this unexpected argument not been forced to the front it is probable that the direct legislation mandate voted by the people last fall would have been written into the constitution before this.

The machinery of direct legislation was devised to give the people better facilities to secure the kind of laws and constitutional amendments they desire. It is merely a measure of popular rule, designed to facilitate majority control.

What these opponents of the initiative suggest, then, is that the people of Ohio shall be permitted the laws they want so long as they do not seek laws covering a few forbidden subjects. That reads like popular rule with a string tied to it. It is proposed to trust the majority—if. Direct legislation should not be arbitrarily limited in any such way.

Delegates cannot safely play horse with any popular issue. In regard to this particular branch of its endeavor, the duty of the Convention is as plain as its ultimate intention. Nothing, certainly, is gained by senseless controversy.

Such is the trend of thought expressed by other leading papers over the state, and such is the opinion of fair-minded men generally. What will we think of ourselves in after years by giving our sanction to such an incongruity in this proposal? Our constituents expect a comprehensive frank declaration of this principle; nothing more, nothing less. We are in honor pledged to give them a definite, consistent, coherent and effective direct-legislation provision. Shall we keep faith with them?

Down with the idea that the people have so little confidence in themselves and are so fearful of their future fate that they want this Convention to insure them against self-destruction, or that they would have us blunt the instrument of progress we hand them lest they harm themselves therewith.

Fellow delegates, I appeal to you in the name of fairness and popular rights to lay aside all fear of chicanery in the free use of the referendum. There can be no wiles successfully practiced under it and no frauds perpetrated by it. It is a veritable citadel of liberty founded on the integrity and sovereignty of American citizenship.

Its chief virtue rests in its full guardianship of all legislative propositions. Question this unlimited right and you manifest distrust in self-government.

We are on the crest of an advancing wave, a popular uprising, that demands honesty of action. The temper of the times has placed the stamp of condemnation on all tricks and on all delusive movements as well as on all big schemes of plunder. In these days of trial, of readjustment and testing of men, if there is one thing Ohio demands of us more than another, it is that we be frank, fearless and honorable in all our conclusions. Why should we hesitate or shy at an imaginary lion in the way? Was there ever a noble purpose attained by this halting and turning aside?

Tell me, fellow delegates, is there one among you who regards his honor so lightly as to place his plighted faith on the bargain counter? Then, whatever we do, let us do it so well that no flaw can be found therein. In all events let us have the courage and firmness to rise above any possible breach of trust.

Better never to have raised the banner of pure democracy than to permit it to be marred and struck down in our hands.

Better never to have waged battle in the cause of human rights than to compromise the principle upon which those rights are founded.

Mr. LAMPSON: I move that the amendment be tabled.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. PECK: I move the previous question on the proposal.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. KING: This is in awful shape to pass. There should be some provision in here as to when it takes effect.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 85, nays 14, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 2—Mr. Crosser, to submit an amendment to article II, section I, of the constitution.—Initiative and referendum.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal shall be submitted to the electors to amend article II, section I of the constitution as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 1. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws.

SEC. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Amendment to the constitution proposed by initiative petition to be submitted directly to the electors."

SEC. 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly either as petitioned for or in an amended form it shall be subject to the referendum. If said proposed law shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action be taken thereon, within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, the same shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after such proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months in the event no action has been taken thereon or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of such secretary. Such proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition which shall be either in the form as first petitioned for or after there shall have been incorporated therein any amendment or amendments thereto introduced in the general assembly. In the event that a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect, as herein provided, in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors.

All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Law proposed by initiative petition." Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in Section 1a and Section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the constitution shall be the amendment to the constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

SEC. 1c. The second aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law, appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

SEC. 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a yea and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a yea and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

SEC. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

SEC. 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

SEC. 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality, the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be it resolved by the people of the state of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved.

The proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. HALFHILL: I want to make an explanation more in sorrow than in anger of my vote. I wanted to vote for the indirect initiative somewhat along this line and with proper percentages, but after the sixth attempt and at the eleventh hour not to have had this printed and laid before us so that we could understand it, was wrong. I think there was ample time to have this report printed so that we could examine it and I voted against it because I did not have that opportunity.

Mr. PECK: I voted for this proposal because I think it is the right thing and the best form of the initiative and referendum I have ever seen. Now I want to ask the Convention to give me answer to the invitation of the Business Men's Club for the Convention to come there, and fix the time. I suggest that the Convention can go down Saturday afternoon and take dinner easily with the club that evening and they will be delighted to see us though the notice is a little delayed. I would like to have an answer so that they could make proper arrangements.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that the invitation be accepted and that we leave here on the two o'clock train Saturday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT: The president would like to state that he has been informed that one railroad is willing to provide the best Pullman equipment and a special train to go and return at the pleasure of the Convention and that at no extra cost.

Mr. DOTY: I move that we strike out the word "extra". Would it not be well for us to have the roll call and let those indicate who will go?

Mr. PECK: It would be desirable to know how many will accept.

Mr. STILWELL: I am not accustomed to riding in Pullman's and I would like to know the actual cost.

Mr. ANDERSON: It is necessary, of course, as you can easily understand that those who invite us should know the number that are coming, and if we have only a few we ought not to go. We ought not to go if we cannot make a good showing. I move that this Convention when it adjourns Saturday afternoon adjourn to meet that evening in Cincinnati.

Mr. HALFHILL: I would like to impress upon you in a very few words how very gracious this invitation is from the people of Cincinnati. I know somewhat of their hospitality. I attended law school there and have had many pleasant professional engagements there and this club extending the invitation is composed of some of the very best men in the state of Ohio. It is a very gracious invitation, and I wish that we might go as a convention and hold a session there even though it might be somewhat of disadvantage.

The PRESIDENT: If the Convention meets there in regular session the fare will be paid out of the Convention fund.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM: I asked one of the Hamilton county delegation if he really expected us to go there and he said that he didn't know, that if we were fools we would.

Mr. FOX: Many of us could not go. I would not like to see delegates go and have me stay in the rear. I wish they would arrange for some future time.

Mr. DOTY: I am in favor of going to Cincinnati. I always have a good time when I go there, but I am opposed to this Convention going to Cincinnati and taking the money out of the treasury to pay our expenses. If we are going to accept this very gracious invitation, we ought to accept it because we want to go and not because the state is going to pay for it.

Mr. MARSHALL: I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman from Cuyahoga and I suggest that we finish our work.

Mr. DOTY: I move that we accept the invitation to go to Cincinnati to visit the Business Men's Club and to take dinner with them on Saturday evening.

Mr. ANDERSON: I had already made that motion.

Mr. DOTY: That is so.

The motion was lost.

Mr. KING: I move that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology be instructed to amend Proposal No. 340 by providing that Proposal No. 2 shall take effect on September 25, 1912.

The motion was lost.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, after it has amended Proposal

Printing of Additional Copies of Proposal No. 2—Petitions and Memorials.

No. 2 and concluded its report upon the proposed amendment, have enough copies printed to allow the secretary to send twenty-five copies to each member by mail and five hundred additional copies.

Mr. PARTINGTON: The time is coming when we shall have the whole constitution printed.

Mr. DOTY: The time is coming when all the resolutions will be put in, but some of the members have suggested that they would like to have this proposal reprinted just as it is, and I make the motion to carry that out.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I do not see the necessity for that.

Mr. DOTY: If there is objection I shall not insist.

Mr. HALFHILL: Why do you say that the proposal should be referred to the committee on Phraseology?

Mr. DOTY: The Convention has already done that to every proposal that has been amended.

Mr. HALFHILL: Proposal No. 2—do you refer to that?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: It was referred to the committee on Phraseology.

Mr. DOTY: And they have not reported on it.

Mr. HALFHILL: Was this reading tonight the second reading or the third reading of the proposal or the final reading, and if so, why was it done before the committee on Phraseology has reported?

Mr. DOTY: The committee on Phraseology had it after second reading and it was accepted by the Convention and it was amended and passed on third reading, and turned back to the committee on Phraseology just as was done with every other proposal.

Mr. HALFHILL: What I cannot get through my head is why, when this report of the subcommittee came in and we considered that, the thing was not printed and sent to the committee on Phraseology and returned to the Convention to be amended and passed.

Mr. DOTY: Personally, I do not care to go into that, but if there is any objection to my motion I will withdraw it. If you don't want it vote it down.

Mr. HALFHILL: I want to get this thing straight. It is most unusual. I supposed the committee on Phraseology had this to pass on and bring it back to the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: We did.

Mr. HALFHILL: Then it was passed on, and no chance given to amend it.

Mr. DOTY: Yes, there was chance to amend it and there is chance to amend it in the grand resolution.

Mr. HALFHILL: This was the third reading tonight?

Mr. DOTY: Yes; the proposal had its third reading.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: What we did tonight was not unusual. We simply amended Proposal No. 2.

Mr. WOODS: I think, gentlemen of the Convention, we ought to have some of these proposals printed. This is so changed that we cannot get exactly what it is unless we have it printed. Let us have some of these printed so that the people can know what we have done.

The motion of the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty] was carried.

Mr. PECK: In view of the fact that only fifty-three members of the Convention have expressed their willingness to accept the invitation to go to Cincinnati, I think it probably better that the Convention should send its regrets to the members of the Business Men's Club, saying that the condition of business is such that the Convention cannot find opportunity to accept their invitation, and I move that the secretary be directed accordingly.

The motion was carried.

Mr. READ: I would like to call up Proposal No. 331 and move to instruct the committee on Phraseology to make a change by inserting the word "four" in lieu of the word "one". The effect of that is to give the superintendent of public works a term of four years instead of one.

Mr. DOTY: Well, if that is it, I move to lay it on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that ten thousand copies of the finished work of this Convention be finished in such manner that the constitution of 1851 will be on one side and on the other side the work that we have done.

Mr. DOTY: That will cost more money than it is worth. I suggest that this matter of printing copies for future use can be decided Friday.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. Bigelow presented the memorials of the Rev. W. H. Sauder, of Ravenna; of the Rev. Clarence A. Gibson, of Camden; of the Rev. W. J. Venen, of Youngstown; of Ira M. Rickett, of Troy; of M. J. Walters and other citizens of Chagrin Falls; of H. A. Reaster and other citizens of Defiance; of M. C. Kinker and other citizens of Toledo; protesting against the passage of Proposals Nos. 65 and 321; which were referred to the committee on Education.

Mr. Bigelow presented the petition of the city council of Cleveland requesting the Constitutional Convention to designate the day known as Good Friday and the day set aside for general elections throughout the state of Ohio, as legal holidays; which was referred to the committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

Mr. Bigelow presented the memorials of F. T. Moreland, of Portsmouth; of C. A. Loehmann, of Cincinnati; of O. K. Hewes, of Medina; of Wm. J. Seelye, of Wooster; of F. C. Bond, of Cleveland; of Howard M. Holmes, of Cleveland; of Frank W. Mariner and many other citizens of Ohio asking for the adoption of Ohio Federation of Labor amendments to the initiative and referendum proposal; which were referred to the committee on Initiative and Referendum.

Mr. Stilwell presented the remonstrance of F. Burgdorff, of Euclid Heights, protesting against the passage of Proposal No. 170—Mr. Worthington; which was referred to the committee on Taxation.

Mr. HOSKINS: I move that the Convention adjourn until Friday morning at nine o'clock.

The motion was carried and the Convention adjourned accordingly.

SEVENTY-NINTH DAY

MORNING SESSION.

FRIDAY, May 31, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the member from Knox county, the Rev. Dr. McClelland.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. Johnson, of Williams rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his name be recorded on Proposal No. 329, by Mr. Knight. His name being called, Mr. Johnson, of Williams, voted "no."

Mr. Winn rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Winn voted "aye."

Mr. Stokes rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Staokes voted "aye."

Mr. Campbell rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Campbell voted "no."

Mr. Eby rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Eby voted "aye."

Mr. PIERCE: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 132:

Resolved, That in the consideration of business this day, and for the remainder of the session, that Rules 39 and 94 shall be interpreted and held to mean that it is not in order to amend any proposal which has been adopted on third reading except as to form, or form of submission or to correct errors.

Mr. PIERCE: Rule 39 reads:

RULE 39. After the report of any committee upon a proposal, said proposal shall be read a second time and considered by the Convention. After favorable action by the Convention, said proposal shall be referred to the standing committee on Arrangement and Phraseology and shall thereafter be read a third time in full, for final action.

Rule 94 reads:

RULE 94. Any proposal may be amended until the final vote is taken after third reading thereof. When a proposal is on its second or third reading any number of amendments may be made; but pending a motion to amend one part of the proposal, it shall not be in order to amend any other part of the proposal, unless the second amendment is necessary to a proper construction of the first. One amendment shall not prevent another in any other part of the proposal.

Now I think it is necessary to have this matter settled and I feel that the Convention has threshed all of these matters out on two readings and have gone over it fully. We have adopted forty-two proposals, and I believe it should be the sense of this Convention that those proposals should remain as adopted without further amendment. If we expect to get through this week and adjourn, it is necessary to take this course of procedure. There have been quite a number of suggestions made by members of the Convention that we change certain proposals, and a number of such suggestions have been made to me. If this Convention is foolish enough to enter upon a discussion of these matters we will be here two or three weeks longer. I hope it will be the sense of the Convention that the resolution be passed as now proposed.

Mr. HALFHILL: I hope that this resolution will not prevail for two or three very manifest reasons. The committee on Arrangement and Phraseology labored during the whole of the recess and all yesterday endeavoring to get everything in perfect form. With all the care it exercised there is every possibility that some mistake will be discovered and must be rectified before the end of this session.

Mr. PIERCE: Will you allow me—

Mr. HALFHILL: When I get through.

Mr. PIERCE: I want to correct you.

Mr. HALFHILL: Well, wait until I get through and you can say what you want. Further than that, the greatest question in this Convention has not yet been properly determined. Upon the subject of taxation there is a strong desire among many that there be inserted in the proposal an alternative for the uniform tax system. The member from Highland, I think, has an amendment which ought to be considered by the Convention. I desire to offer the question of the alternative proposition which is identical in every part of the proposal with the proposal that has been adopted by this Convention, save and except that in section 2 it inserts the right of classification of property, so that all propositions in this proposal that the majority has adopted will be covered in my substitute in the identical words, and the only difference will be the insertion in section 2 providing for classification instead of the uniform rule.

Now, gentlemen of the Convention, a thing is never settled until it is settled right. It is never settled in a case like this until the people of Ohio have an opportunity to vote fairly and squarely upon this question, and I want you to consider the responsibility that you are under. You know well enough if you throttle this question in this Convention within twelve months there will be a constitutional amendment proposed to the people. Of course you know that, and do you realize that if this proposal that you have here should be adopted in the lengthy form you have drawn it under the existing rule of the present constitution, it would cost $250,000 to submit it? A proposal of that nature which was submitted in 1889 with two other amendments cost the state almost $100,000, and it was but a small paragraph of organic law. Here we have the opportunity of presenting and submitting it to the people at this time without one penny of additional expense. Let them, the people, determine for themselves what the form of taxation shall be in Ohio. It is not time now to make any argument on this question either for or against these theories, and that is not what I rise for, but when these amendments are presented the Convention can be assured that so far as the argument of theories is concerned it is at an end. We have threshed that out. It will not take us fifteen minutes in the Convention to again present this amendment. Then let the two propositions go to the people, because "in the last analysis," with apologies to Brother Jones, the people will do the fair thing. I trust that this resolution will not prevail.

Resolution Relative to Amendments to Proposals After Third Reading.

Mr. PECK: How many times has this same proposition been rejected by this Convention?

Mr. HALFHILL: I suppose twice or three times.

Mr. PECK: What is your reason for believing that they will accept it now?

Mr. HALFHILL: I have faith to believe that when the uniform rule has been framed as it has been, when they have taken out of it the one per cent tax limit as they have taken it out, when they have considered that action, when they consider the criticism made on this Convention as a body for not fairly submitting these two theories of taxation to the voters, that they will at the last moment rescind that action and do fairly by the people of the state of Ohio.

Mr. PECK: Do you not think that those of us here who have supported other losing propositions believe just as strongly in our propositions as you do in that? Every one of them can be brought up if you bring up this.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not believe there is a proposition championed by any member in this Convention that compares in importance with the question of taxation.

Mr. PECK: Everybody's proposal is the most important.

Mr. HALFHILL: Taxation is conceded to be the most important matter before the Convention by everybody who knows enough to look at the world outside, other than through a key hole.

Mr. KING: I was for the proposition that has been voted down as often as I could get a chance to be for it, but I raise the question here and now that this Convention has no authority under the rules it has adopted, unless it shall repeal them, to amend any proposal that has passed its third reading. Those things, so far as this Convention has power, have gone into the fundamental law of the state. We are at an end of every proposal that has passed its third reading. I deny the power of the Convention to amend it by a word. They have provided here as plainly as the English language can be written the course that every proposal shall take. We have followed that course and completed the proposals, and we cannot begin our work and do it over again.

Mr. DOTY: Will you yield for a question? The member made a statement that he didn't believe the Convention had power to make any amendments. You do not include anything from the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology as to form?

Mr. KING: How did the committee get this referred back to them?

Mr. DOTY: By the Convention.

Mr. KING: Did they repeal the rule or amend the rule, or was there a suspension of the rules?

Mr. DOTY: I wish to state that the Convention by a simple motion which it had the power to pass, in my judgment, referred all proposals after their third readings to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, and the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has been sitting up and working on them.

Mr. KING: I heard you do it and I voted for the resolution. But under Rule 84 and subsequent Rules 94 and 95 there was absolutely no authority for that reference to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology again. If these are submitted under a so-called fourth reading you do not know what questions of law will meet them hereafter or what will be their fate.

Mr. LAMPSON: I think the gentleman is wholly right in his argument that there was a resolution adopted here unanimously referring all these proposals to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, and so far as that was concerned it waived the rule because the point of order was not made at the time. If it had been made, I concede under the rules it would have been sustained. So far as the report of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology is concerned, the rules have been made and it can make its report.

Mr. KING: You do not claim that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has authority to do anything more than to make the proposal read right?

Mr. LAMPSON: They report back with amendments as to form, but nothing as to substance. If this rule is adopted, no further amendment except as to form or a form of submission or correcting an error can be adopted, and if the rules were simply interpreted as Judge King suggests even that might not be done, but that certainly ought to be done and that is an additional reason for the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Butler. Now Rule 94 provides that any proposal may be amended until the final vote is taken after third reading thereof. When a proposal is on its second or third reading any number of amendments may be made. So the rule merely contemplates that after third reading amendment shall cease. But the Convention unanimously adopted the motion of the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. HARRIS] to refer back to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology all of the proposals, together with those that were slightly amended the other day, and we, therefore, waived this rule so far as the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology is concerned, but the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has not jurisdiction to report out anything except as to form. So when its report comes in it will be in order to go under Rule 94 and no amendment as to substance is in order. I think the resolution of the gentleman from Butler should be adopted so that we can make the necessary corrections as to form of submission or as to any error in transcribing that may appear after the final reading. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. HALFHILL: I ask the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 72, nays 27, as follows:

Resolution Relative to Amendments to Proposals After Third Reading—Reports of Standing Committees.

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harbarger,	Moore,
Baum,	Harter, Huron,	Okey,
Beatty, Morrow,	Henderson,	Partington,
Beyer,	Holtz,	Peck,
Brattain,	Hursh,	Peters,
Brown, Highland,	Johnson, Williams,	Pettit,
Brown, Lucas,	Jones,	Pierce,
Brown, Pike,	Kehoe,	Shaw,
Cassidy,	Keller,	Smith, Hamilton,
Cody,	Kilpatrick,	Solesher,
Collett,	King,	Stamm,
Colton,	Kramer,	Stevens,
Crites,	Kunkel,	Stewart,
Crosser,	Lambert,	Stilwell,
Cunningham,	Lampson,	Tallman,
Dunn,	Leete,	Tannehill,
Dwyer,	Longstreth,	Tetlow,
Earnhart,	Ludey,	Thomas,
Eby,	Marshall,	Ulmer,
Fess,	Mauck,	Wagner,
FitzSimons,	McClelland,	Watson,
Fluke,	Miller, Crawford,	Winn,
Fox,	Miller, Fairfield,	Wise,
Harris, Ashtabula,	Miller, Ottawa,	Woods.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Antrim,	Hahn,	Nye,
Bowdle,	Halenkamp,	Read,
Campbell,	Halfhill,	Riley,
Cordes,	Hoffman,	Rockel,
Donahey,	Hoskins,	Roehm,
Doty,	Kerr,	Rorick,
Dunlap,	Knight,	Smith, Geauga,
Evans,	Malin,	Stokes,
Fackler,	Matthews,	Taggart.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LAMPSON: The gentleman from Wood [Mr. BEATTY] has gone away and will not be back. He is a member of the committee on Submission and Address to the People. It is desired that his place be filled because there is certain work that that committee has to do in arranging an address to the people and so forth that requires men who will give attention to it, and I move that Mr. Cassidy be named on that committee.

Mr. DOTY: I second the motion. We want some one on the committee to do the work for us.

The motion was carried.

Mr. READ: A question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT: State the question.

Mr. READ: I can state the question by explaining.

The PRESIDENT: I would like to have a suggestion as to what it is.

Mr. READ: There has been an injustice done me on a certain report with regard to an amendment that I proposed the other evening, and I want to get that impression corrected. It is a matter of personal privilege. I desire the privilege of the floor to explain the injustice that has been done me and I claim my right to ask the indulgence of the Convention for one minute.

The PRESIDENT: The member asks the indulgence of the Convention for one minute.

Mr. READ: It may be two minutes. I have been cut off a good many times already and I want to be heard now.

The PRESIDENT: There are forty roll calls to be taken and I hope that you will not consume unnecessary time.

Mr. READ: I read in yesterday morning's issue of the Ohio State Journal the following:

Delegate A. Ross Read, who is one of the singletaxers, tried to have the single-tax inhibition taken out of the proposal, but he was turned down overwhelmingly.

That along with the context implies that I introduced that amendment on account of the single tax, which is absolutely incorrect, and I do not want that impression to go out. Again I read in this morning's issue of the same paper the following editorial:

As every observing person knows, the Con-Con. was packed for the single tax; not directly for that, but for the initiative and referendum, which was to have been the instrumentality used for the adoption of the land value tax.

The PRESIDENT: The president will rule that that is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. READ: I wish to say to this Convention that that is absolutely false so far as I am concerned and I want it strictly understood that I offered that amendment for the sole purpose of having a correct initiative and referendum and for no other purpose—

The PRESIDENT: The time is up.

Mr. READ: And I am opposed to anything in that proposal which denies the principle of the initiative and referendum no matter what it may refer to.

The PRESIDENT: The time is up.

Mr. READ: That is the only reason I offered the amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The time is up. Will the member take his seat?

Mr. READ: I am done.

Mr. PECK: I would like to have unanimous consent to make a motion which will take but a moment. Judge Dwyer has written a brief intended for use as a speech. It is a very splendid condensation of the authorities on the subject of the ordinance of 1787. He was shut off from opportunity to deliver it by the previous question which was suddenly called at the end of Judge Norris' speech. I move that Judge Dwyer be given the opportunity to print his speech as if delivered.

The motion was carried.

[Judge Dwyer's address immediately follows the address delivered by Judge Norris, to which reference is made, and will be found in the proceedings of the Convention of the seventy-third day, May 22.—THE EDITOR.]

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. COLTON: I offer a report.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, to which was referred Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended: Strike out title and insert: "Schedule to amendments."

Between lines 3 and 4 insert subhead: "SCHEDULE."

Reports of Standing Committees—Schedule—Report of Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

In line 4 strike out "That" and change first "the" to "The".

In line 4 strike out "or any of the same".

In line 4 insert "and submitted" after "passed".

In line 6 strike out "in" and insert: "by the schedule attached to".

In line 6 strike out "the".

In line 6 strike out "and" and change "all" in line 7 to "All".

In line 7 after first "force" insert a comma.

In lines 8 and 9 strike out "at the time this amendment takes effect" and insert: "on the first day of January, 1913".

The report was agreed to. The proposal was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. Colton moved that the proposal be read the third time at once.

The motion was carried.

Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, was read the third time.

Mr. Lampson here assumed the chair as president pro tem.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is this to be submitted and voted on as a separate amendment?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: What will be the effect if this fails?

Mr. DOTY: A large number of the proposals have a separate schedule. If they are passed they will go into effect and if any fail they will not.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: There is no time fixed as to the initiative and referendum.

Mr. DOTY: We have that.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is, "Shall the proposal pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 103, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Fox,	Mauck,
Antrim,	Hahn,	McClelland,

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart:

SCHEDULE TO AMENDMENTS.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

SCHEDULE.

The several amendments passed and submitted by this Convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law.

Mr. DOTY: I desire to submit a report from the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology and I would like to submit the report in a peculiar way. We have our report so framed that the amendments proposed are set forth in the report itself for each separate proposal. I would like to read the report and explain it as I go along and I will answer such questions as I can.

The introductory clause of the report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, to which was referred Proposals Nos. 2, 5, 7, 15, 24, 34, 51, 54, 62, 64, 72, 91, 93, 96, 100, 118, 122, 134, 151, 163, 166, 169, 170, 184, 209, 212, 236, 240, 241, 242, 249, 252, 261, 272, 304, 309, 322, 329, 331, 333 and 334, having had the same under consideration, reports said proposals back with the following amendments and recommends their passage when so amended:

Mr. DOTY: This gives in numerical order all of the proposals that were referred to that committee except Proposal No. 340, which has only been referred a very short time. You will find them in numerical order in the yellow book and the first proposal is Proposal No. 2. I will state that this proposal for the first part of the report is according to the line numbers in the book; as to the others, we will have to tell you where they come in.

The amendments to Proposal No. 2 were read as follows:

In line 32 insert a comma after "provided".

In line 36 insert comma after "assembly".

In line 37 insert a comma after "form".

In line 38 strike out "said proposed law" and insert "it".

In line 39 after "action" insert "shall".

In line 39 strike out second comma.

In line 41 strike out "the same" and insert "it".

In line 43 insert a comma after "election".

In line 46 insert "supplementary" after "which".

In line 47 change "such" to "the".

Report of Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

In line 49 insert a comma after "months".

In line 49 strike out "in the event" and insert "if".

In line 50 insert a comma after "thereon".

In line 52 strike out "such secretary" and insert "the secretary of state".

Strike out all of line 52 after the period and all of lines 53, 54, 55 and 56 and insert: The proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition, which form shall be either as [first] petitioned for or with any amendment or amendments which may have been incorporated therein by either branch, or by both branches, of the general assembly.

In line 57 strike out "In the event that" and insert "If".

In line 59 strike out both commas.

In line 71 change both capitals "S" to lower case "s".

In line 67 change semi-colon to period.

No paragraph between lines 67 and 68.

In line 91 strike out "comma".

At the end of proposal add:

SCHEDULE.

The foregoing amendment, if adopted by the electors shall take effect [mentioning a date].

Mr. DOTY: That is all on that proposal.

Mr. RILEY: Allow me to inquire how you fixed that date.

Mr. DOTY: It is fixed tentatively to get a schedule in here for the consideration of the Convention.

Mr. RILEY: Why is it necessary to make this take effect at a time different from that of almost all of the other proposals? I do not see the object.

Mr. DOTY: If the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. CROSSER] will step up and take care of his own matter I will be obliged to him.

Mr. RILEY: My point is that the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology has assumed to dictate. It should have been left blank.

Mr. DOTY: That is satisfactory. It was only fixed that way to get it before us.

The PRESIDENT: There is no objection and the schedule will be left blank. The question is upon agreeing to that part of the report that the committee has made which has just been read.

Mr. KNIGHT: Does this mean final action if we agree?

The PRESIDENT: There are amendments as to form, or correcting errors that are in here, and we will have opportunity also to correct errors after this.

Mr. KNIGHT: Was not the word "first" in there? Ought it not be "shall be either as first petitioned for"?

Mr. DOTY: I think so and if there is no objection I will incorporate that. I think that is a mistake in copying.

Mr. THOMAS: I noticed that some language has been incorporated in there which makes it a good deal different from the original proposition.

Mr. CROSSER: I was on the subcommittee which prepared this so-called compromise proposal. The proposal as now reported to the Convention is entirely different from that which the committee appointed on Wednesday agreed to and I for one am not satisfied with it.

The PRESIDENT: I don't see the difference.

Mr. CROSSER: Here is the difference: In the proposal reported to the Convention—of which I was not particularly fond—it was stated that an additional petition containing three per cent of the voters be submitted after the general assembly had passed an amended form and that would require to be submitted to the voters, either the original proposition by three per cent petition or that proposition as amended by any amendment offered in the general assembly. This must be incorporated.

Mr. DOTY: The member is very much mistaken. He may have meant to do what he says, but he did not do it. All we did was to make this thing do exactly what this language here attempted.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: If Mr. Cassidy is here I would like him to give us his idea.

Mr. DOTY: Let us get the idea from the language. I don't object to Mr. Cassidy, but I would rather get the idea from the language.

Mr. THOMAS: Why not use the word "introduced" instead of "incorporated?" The word "introduced" as used there is absolutely meaningless. Frankly, the idea that I got from that was that the word "introduced" was absolutely useless and I didn't see where it possibly could be correct.

Mr. BIGELOW: That word "introduced" was taken out of the Wisconsin amendment. We did not want to be limited to amendments that the general assembly might adopt.

Mr. DOTY: The word "incorporated" is there.

Mr. BIGELOW: The word "incorporated" ought not to be there.

Mr. DOTY: That may be, but it is there.

Mr. BIGELOW: The word "introduced" was in the report.

Mr. DOTY: So was the word "incorporated."

Mr. BIGELOW: No.

Mr. DOTY: I say yes. There is the bill with it to work on. Wherever it came from, it is there. Now you gentlemen can get an idea of what the committee on Phraseology was up against.

A vote being taken, the report of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, as far as read, was agreed to.

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 252, by Mr. Weybrecht. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye".

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 304, by Mr. Halfhill. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye."

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 249, by Mr. Tannehill. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye".

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 329, by Mr. Knight. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye".

Mr. Fess rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Fess voted "aye."

Mr. Norris rose to a question of privilege and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Norris voted "no".

Report of Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. Kilpatrick rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Kilpatrick voted "aye".

Mr. Evans rose to a question of privilege, and asked that his vote be recorded on Proposal No. 2, by Mr. Crosser. His name being called, Mr. Evans voted "aye."

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the adoption of the final proposal. There is a blank to be filled, but that cannot be filled until the committee on Submission makes its report.

Mr. WINN: My notion is that this proposal should take effect as all others, January 1, 1913. I am just as earnest about that as anybody else. I want it to be workable and I do not want it to come into disrepute any quicker than necessary. This provides that it shall take effect October 1, 1912. I know there is an element now waiting, like a race horse champing on the bit, to start the fight, and before the people come to know what the initiative and referendum are the legislature will be deluged with laws. This will bring the measure into disrepute. But if we have cooling-off time and then act upon it intelligently, in my mind it is just as safe a method of enacting laws as any other, but we must not do it in this way. I do not know whether it is in order to move to strike out or not.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will hold that, being part of the form of submission, it is in order to move to strike out.

Mr. WINN: Then I move that we strike from the report of the committee "at the end of the proposal add" and the further word "schedule" and the further words "the foregoing amendment if adopted by the electors shall take effect."

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The form of the motion should be to strike out the word "schedule" and all thereafter.

Mr. STILWELL: I hope this amendment will not prevail. I believe that the principle should be incorporated into the law and should become operative at the earliest possible moment. We shall not have another session of the general assembly until two years from the coming January, and it will be almost three years before it is possible to have a vote upon any initiated legislation. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. WINN: And on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted—yeas 58, nays 50, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Fackler,	Kilpatrick,
Beyer,	Farrell,	Kunkel,

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. THOMAS: Is there any final date set in that proposal?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: No.

Mr. THOMAS: I move that the date be filled in with October 1, 1912.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The secretary will call the roll upon the final passage of this proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 82, nays 18, as follows:

So the proposal finally passed.

Report of Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. DOTY: The next is Proposal No. 5. The amendments are as follows:

In line 8 strike out second comma.

In line 10 strike out "No. 2" and insert period after "Schedule."

In line 11 strike out all after "further" and all of line 12 and up to "be" and insert: "That if the amendment to article V, section 1, to the constitution.—Woman's Suffrage,".

In line 13 change "proposal" to "amendment".

The foregoing amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The secretary will call the roll on the final passage of the proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 91, nays 1, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Mr. Davio and Mr. Halenkamp voted in the negative.

So the proposal finally passed.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to make a statement before the next roll call. Those of you who can multiply forty-two by ten will find that it will take us about seven hours to call the rolls and that is what is ahead of you if you are going to get up and insist on having your names called after the roll has been once called. If it is a matter of getting the necessary sixty votes, all right; but if we don't need the votes why delay the roll call?

The next is Proposal No. 15—Mr. Riley, to which there is no amendment.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The secretary will call the roll on the final passage of this proposal.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 85, nays 10, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the proposal finally passed.

Report of Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Mr. DOTY: The next is Proposal No. 100. There are some amendments:

In line 12 strike out "No. 1" and add period after "Schedule."

In line 13 change semi-colon and insert comma and change "that" to "That".

Strike out all after "that" and all of line 14 up to "be" and insert: "if the amendment to article IV, section 1, 2 and 6".

In line 16 change "proposal" to "amendment".

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is upon agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. HOSKINS: This is Proposal No. 100 and it seems to be different from what I thought it was. I would like to hear some explanation.

The SECRETARY: That change was put in on the third reading and the committee on Phraseology did not make any change in that.

The amendments were agreed to.

The question being "Shall Proposal No. 100 finally pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 93, nays 2, as follows:

Mr. DOTY: I desire to introduce a resolution and it is rather a lengthy one. I shall ask that further consideration of it be postponed and that in the meantime it be printed.

The resolution was presented as follows:

Resolution No. 133:

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That the amendments proposed to the constitution and adopted by this Convention, as hereinafter set forth, shall be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection on the third day of September, A. D. 1912, and that the president and secretary of this Convention be, and they are hereby, directed to certify the same to the secretary of state for submission to the electors according to law.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. I. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws.

SEC. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Amendment to the constitution proposed by initiative petition to be submitted directly to the electors."

Submission of Amendments to the People.

SEC. 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided, proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly, either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to the referendum. If it shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action shall be taken thereon within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly it shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election, if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which supplementary petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after the proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months, if no action has been taken thereon, or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state. The proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition, which form shall be either as first petitioned for or with any amendment or amendments which may have been incorporated therein by either branch or by both branches of the general assembly. If a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect as herein provided in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors.

All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof, in the case of proposed laws: "Law proposed by initiative petition first to be submitted to the general assembly". Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in section 1a and section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the constitution shall be the amendment to the constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

SEC. 1c. The second aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law, appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

SEC. 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a ye and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a ye and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

SEC. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

SEC. 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

SEC. 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality, the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county.

A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state; as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it Enacted by the People of the State of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be it Resolved by the People of the State of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, That if the amendment to article V, section 1, of the constitution—Woman's Suffrage, be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

ARTICLE III.

SEC. 8. The governor on extraordinary occasions may convene the general assembly by proclamation and shall state in the proclamation the purpose for which such special session is called, and no other business shall be transacted at such special session except that named in the proclamation, or in a subsequent public proclamation or message to the general assembly issued by the governor during said special session, but the general assembly may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance can not be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents, for death, injuries or occupational diseases, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payment shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employees and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employee when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employees. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rate of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit in or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without the state of Ohio, and such goods made within the state of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made". Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political subdivision thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association; provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with murder in the first degree, where proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted; nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime. Until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary during life.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and all other minerals.

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he or she resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank", "banker", or "banking", or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor, for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, That if the foregoing amendment be adopted by the electors it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law; provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, That if the amendment to article IV, sections 1, 2 and 6, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then section 9 of article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever; provided, however, that laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds to an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed fifty million dollars for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of inter-county wagon roads throughout the state. Not to exceed ten million dollars of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing and maintaining the same shall be paid by the state. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by section 6, of article XII.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 34. Laws may be passed fixing and regulating the hours of labor, establishing a minimum wage, and providing for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of all employes; and no other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 21. Laws may be passed, prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the state, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to punish for contempt. No order of injunction shall issue in any controversy involving the employment of labor, except to preserve physical property from injury or destruction; and all persons charged in contempt proceedings with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall, upon demand, be granted a trial by a jury as in criminal cases.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local subdivision while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word "saloon" as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

Resolved further, That at said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

	For License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.
	Against License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License" if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the words "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

If the votes for license shall exceed the votes against license, then the article above mentioned shall become section 9 of article XV of the constitution, and the present section 9 of said article, also known as section 18 of the schedule shall be repealed.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector: provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public, or as member of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political sub-division thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 33. Laws may be passed to secure to mechanics, artisans, laborers, sub-contractors and material men, their just dues by direct lien upon the property, upon which they have bestowed labor or for which they have furnished material. No other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 10. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision.

ARTICLE XII.

SEC. 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

SEC. 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritances, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 8. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such incomes as may be designated by law; but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 9. Not less than fifty per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originate.

SEC. 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals.

SEC. 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

SEC. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, in cases of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court.

SEC. 6. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold session shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The courts of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and precedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction, and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its record to that court. No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed, is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decisions in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county, to hold court.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the repassage of a bill.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all powers, necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation, or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 2. All elections shall be either by ballot or by mechanical device, or by both, preserving the secrecy of the vote. Laws may be enacted to regulate the preparation of the ballot and to determine the application of such mechanical device.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal offices shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers of municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

ARTICLE XVIII.

Municipal Corporations.

SEC. 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities; all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

SEC. 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

SEC. 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

SEC. 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

SEC. 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

SEC. 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter." The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter; provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held therein. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

SEC. 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof, and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission; and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

SEC. 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality not be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. Any municipality appropriating private property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited, shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

SEC. 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

SEC. 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

SEC. 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, That if the foregoing amendment to the constitution be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution it shall take effect on November 15, 1912.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. Any judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas, and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

SEC. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per cent. of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county officers, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

SEC. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

SEC. 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, If the foregoing amendment shall be adopted by the electors, the judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914; each county shall continue as a part of its existing common pleas district and subdivision thereof, until one resident judge of the court of common pleas is elected and qualified therein.

ARTICLE XVI.

SEC. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

Submission of Amendments to the People—Resolution Relative to Recess.

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

SEC. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, after, or amend the constitution", shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, with the powers and duties now exercised by the board of public works until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

Resolved further, That section 13 of article VIII is hereby repealed.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 11. Laws may be passed regulating and limiting the use of property on or near public ways and grounds for erecting bill-boards thereon and for the public display of posters, pictures and other forms of advertising.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof; and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interests in, lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

SCHEDULE.

The several amendments passed and submitted by this Convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law.

Mr. DOTY: I move that further consideration of the resolution be postponed until 8 o'clock p. m. and that it be made a special order for that hour.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 134:

Resolved, Section 1. That when this Convention adjourns on Saturday, June 1, 1912, it be to meet at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, August 26, 1912, unless a meeting of the Convention shall be called in the meantime; the written demand of any ten members of the Convention filed with the secretary of the Convention shall constitute a call for any such meeting, and the secretary shall notify each member of the Convention by mail of such call, provided that the time for convening the Convention for such called meeting, shall be not less than five days from the time when the notice therefor shall have been filed; and that such meeting shall be held in the city of Columbus, Ohio.

SECTION 2. The president and secretary shall continue to keep their present office rooms and shall have general charge of the issuing of such pamphlets and documents and the preparation and placing of such advertising matter, as the Convention shall authorize; the indexing, proof reading and publication of the journal of the Convention; the editing, proofreading, indexing and publication of the debates of the Convention. For this work the following employes of the Convention are hereby continued at their present compensation: Ira I. Morrison, Ella M. Scriven, Julia Kersting, Katharine Kellar, George Cartwright, for such length of time, not longer than August 26, 1912, as the president and secretary may find their services necessary; and in addition and at the same compensation and for the same time, E. S. Nichols, expert proofreader, is hereby employed, to assist in the editorial and proofreading work upon the debates of this Convention; the services of J. B. Lewis and H. S. Brown, bill clerks, are hereby authorized during the month of June, for the purpose of sorting, filing and forwarding the documents of this Convention to the delegates and to the public and such other documents as may be authorized by the Convention; and their services may be continued by the president and secretary after the month of June for any distribution of documents that may be authorized by the Convention; the services of Carl A. Mutschler, clerk of the historian and reference librarian, are continued for the month of June at his present compensation; the services of the postmaster are hereby continued up to June 16, 1912, at his present compensation.

SECTION 3. The services of the sergeant-at-arms, J. C. Sherlock, and of the custodian, Fred Blankner, are hereby continued for the period of ten days after this date, and they are hereby instructed to procure boxes and all necessary material for packing and shipping documents of the delegates; they are hereby authorized to retain from the present force, the necessary help required not to exceed five persons; they shall receive for such service the same per diem as is now being paid them by this Convention; the president of the Convention is hereby authorized and instructed to sign vouchers therefor and for necessary material and express charges.

SECTION 4. Ten days after June 1, 1912, the sergeant-at-arms of this Convention shall turn over the hall and committee rooms to the proper custodians thereof; except such rooms as may be required by the president and secretary for the work authorized by this Convention, which rooms are hereby retained until August 26, 1912.

SECTION 5. The bill clerk is hereby directed to cause to be filed one complete set of documents, proposals, reports and printed matter, except the daily journal, with the state librarian for preservation in the state library. The secretary of this Convention is hereby directed to deposit with the state librarian one complete printed journal and printed debates, after publication.

SECTION 6. The secretary of this Convention shall attest one printed copy of the journal of this Convention and file the same with the secretary of state as the official record of this Convention. He shall file with any certificate of proposed amendments, engrossed copies of the proposals as finally passed by the Convention and each engrossed copy shall be certified to by the secretary of the Convention, showing the date of final action.

SECTION 7. The services and compensation of all employes of the Convention, not provided for in this resolution, shall cease June 1, 1912.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution be considered at this time.

Mr. WOODS: I don't like to consider this proposition until I can have a copy of it and know more about it, about what it is. There are some things in there that I for one will never stand for. I would like to have a copy of that before we vote on it.

Mr. DOTY: I have no objection to letting it lie over.

The PRESIDENT: The question before the Convention is to suspend the rules.

Mr. DOTY: I said that if there was any objection I would not make the motion and there seems to be objection.

Mr. LAMPSON: I move that further consideration be postponed until 8:05 o'clock this afternoon and that in the meantime it be printed.

The motion was carried.

Mr. MILLER, of Fairfield: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 135:

Resolved, That the secretary of this Convention is hereby authorized and directed to secure for the state a copyright of the Proceedings and Debates of this Convention as published in final form.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I wish to make a report from the committee on Claims.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Claims Against the Convention, to which was referred Resolution No. 129—Mr. Lampson, having had the same under consideration, reports it back and recommends its adoption.

Resolution No. 129 was read as follows:

WHEREAS, The contract of the official reporter was not made with any idea of night sessions other than Monday nights and

WHEREAS, The Convention has held and intends to hold other night sessions; therefore Additional Pay for Official Reporter and Certain Stenographers.

Be it resolved, That the official reporter be and is hereby allowed the additional sum of thirty dollars for each night session other than Monday nights.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: From the reading of the resolution it is clear that the additional compensation for night sessions is involved and a few words of explanation are not out of order. Rule 41 as contained in the red book is the one upon which bids were asked for doing the stenographic reporting work of the Convention. That rule provides the hours to which the Convention shall stand adjourned from day to day shall be seven o'clock on Monday, one o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and ten o'clock a. m. on Friday. Unless otherwise ordered no additional sessions shall be held. It was clearly shown in the committee that Mr. Walker understood at the time that he was asked to bid that the sessions would be four daily sessions and no night sessions except on Monday evening; that he especially asked if there were to be any other night sessions; that his attention was called to that rule and his bid was made accordingly. When we started holding night sessions other than those on Monday, Mr. Walker very promptly informed the chairman of the committee on Claims that that was not in his contract and was in excess of what his duties were supposed to be and that he should expect additional compensation for it. It was clearly shown to the committee that he had a right to suppose that his bid covered only the four days and, except on Monday, no evening sessions. As every one knows, the holding of these sessions has entailed an immense amount of additional work upon the reporter and the committee was clearly of the opinion that the additional compensation as asked should be allowed.

Mr. KRAMER: How many of those night sessions are there?

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I think seven or eight up to the present.

Mr. KRAMER: Might we not have the contract read?

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: It was clearly shown that the contract did not cover the night sessions, and as everyone knows, that the evening sessions have involved more than a half day's work, and all that Mr. Walker is asking for night sessions is the equivalent of one-half a day. I am informed now that there are ten additional night sessions.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on agreeing to the committee's report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is, "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 89, nays 9, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Cody,	Dunlap,

Those who voted in the negative are:

Baum,	Johnson, Madison,	Wagner,
DeFrees,	Kramer,	Watson,
Harbarger,	Soletier,	Winn.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Antrim submitted the following report:

The standing committee on Claims Against the Convention, to which was referred Resolution No. 100—Mr. Antrim, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its adoption when so amended:

In line 6 strike out "$75.00" and in lieu thereof insert "$37.50".

In line 9 strike out "$75.00" and in lieu thereof insert "$37.50".

Mr. ANTRIM: This represents extra compensation for the stenographic service in the Convention prior to the time that Mr. Walker, our expert stenographer, was employed. Two of the most expert of the young ladies were selected and they did this work for two weeks and they rendered bills for extra compensation for $75 or $5 a day each. The committee on Claims has cut that in two and allowed them $37.50. I certainly feel that we should be liberal enough to allow these young ladies $37.50 for what they did.

Mr. WINN: I quite agree with the gentleman that after having made a contract with a person to report our debates at a given amount per day and then having given that person a gratuity of $30 per day extra for quite a number of days we should at least vote $5 to these young ladies.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I object to the statement of the gentleman calling the compensation allowed Mr. Walker for night sessions a gratuity. If it were a gratuity the committee would not have reported it favorably. The committee on Claims did not regard it as a gratuity at all. They regarded it in the light of compensation for services not embraced in his contract. And this is not the time to make objection to a claim that has already been allowed.

Mr. WINN: Perhaps my objection should have been made at another time. I voted against the resolution because I regarded it as a gratuity. The person who has received this extra compensation has a written contract with this Convention by which he agreed to report the debates and proceedings for $60 per day. When that contract was reduced to writing and when it was subscribed to by the contracting party it became binding at the rate stipulated in the contract.

The PRESIDENT: Is the member discussing the question under consideration?

Mr. HALFHILL: I don't think he is and I don't think he thinks he is.

Mr. WINN: I withdraw the statement then if necessary.

Mr. HALFHILL: I quite agree with the Claims committee and I think the amount allowed to Mr. Walker for night sessions was not a gratuity, but a well-earned added compensation. I am in favor now of paying the amount here recommended to these young women who did that work too.

Mr. KRAMER: It seems to me that we should have had the contract with Mr. Walker read. It looks to me as though we are spending money as if we had an unlimited amount. Here there is a resolution to allow the sergeant-at-arms with five helpers ten days to send junk. It will cost about $600 and it isn't worth $6. You can just see where we are running to. I don't want to find fault with Mr. Walker, but we ought to have had that contract read and it seems to me that these young women were regularly employed and put in the time they were regularly paid for to attend to their duties. I am not favor, simply because we have $10,000 left, to spend it anywhere and to anybody.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not know whether the delegates know what their services were or not. There were two young women employed at the desk here to take down the proceedings and make a stenographic report when the Convention first met. The first days of that work, before Mr. Walker was employed, were done by these women. It was work they were not hired to do, and as a delegate I was personally responsible for getting at least one of them to come up here and do that work on the first day.

Mr. THOMAS: Is that in addition to the $5 a day that they have received regularly?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, but that $5 a day is for the ordinary stenographer. We have several of those out there and that is not compensation for expert work such as these women were required to do.

Mr. WOODS: I am not a miser and I believe in paying what is justly owing. I believe that those two ladies that did that work are entitled to the money and I believe that we ought to pay it. When we get up against some of these other propositions that call for an expenditure that we ought not to make, then I am for cutting those out, but let us not go the other way and not pay a thing that we really owe.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The roll will be called on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 95, nays 4, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Brattain,	Collett,

Jones,	Peters,

Those who voted in the negative are: Johnson, of Madison, Mauck, Solether, Walker.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. PETERS: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 136:

Resolved, That the sum of two hundred and ninety-three dollars ($293.00) be paid to the Baker Art Gallery for the large framed group picture of the Convention, the same to hang permanently in the state house.

On motion of Mr. Peters the resolution was referred to the committee on Claims against the Convention.

Mr. Dwyer offered the following resolution:

Resolution No. 137:

Resolved, As the sense of this Convention, that expression is hereby given to our sincere regret at the severe and long-continued illness of our esteemed fellow member, Judge Worthington, by reason of which he has been prevented from aiding us in our work in which he took an earnest and active interest, and we have been deprived of his valuable aid and counsel.

In this connection, it affords us pleasure to bear testimony to his gentlemanly courtesy, painstaking application to his work and scholarly presentation on the floor of the Convention of every proposal with which he was connected during the time he was able to be with us.

It is therefore our earnest hope and prayer that our friend and co-laborer, Judge Worthington, will soon be restored to full health and usefulness, for which nature, education and experience has qualified him.

Further, it is hereby provided that the copy of the constitution, when ready for the signatures of delegates, shall be taken to the home of Judge Worthington by the sergeant-at-arms of this Convention, for him to affix his signature thereto.

Relative to Illness of Mr. Worthington—Distribution of Printed Copies of Proceedings and Debates.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

Mr. Doty moved to amend Resolution No. 137 as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"The president is hereby authorized to sign a voucher for the expenses of the sergeant-at-arms in carrying out the provisions of this resolution."

Mr. NYE: It seems to me it is unwise to send a paper that we have all signed to Cincinnati, or to take it away from the office where it belongs. With the other part of the resolution I am entirely in accord, but to take this instrument, which is our most important official instrument, to Cincinnati for one person to sign is wrong. I suggest that there be a resolution providing the Judge Worthington sign it hereafter, when he gets able to come to the office of the secretary of state.

Mr. LAMPSON: I suppose the sergeant-at-arms could take just one page upon which the signatures will be attached, have Judge Worthington attach his signature to that page and bring it back and attach it to the other pages of the manuscript. That is probably the way it will be done.

Mr. NYE: That is entirely different from the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted—yeas 117, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I move that a copy of the resolution and the roll call attached be forwarded by the secretary of the Convention to Judge Worthington.

The motion was carried.

Mr. WATSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 138:

Be it resolved, That the distribution of the printed debates of this Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio shall be as follows:

1. To each member of the Convention two complete sets of the Debates and index.
2. To the state library of each state in the Union one complete set.
3. To the secretary and official reporter two complete sets.
4. To each public library in the state, whether state, county or city, one complete set.
5. One copy to each accredited reporter for press.
6. One set to the library of each college and university in the state.

That all the remaining sets shall be turned over to the secretary of state and shall be placed on sale by him at $4 per volume or $12 per set of three volumes, the money from same to be covered into the state treasury.

All resolutions or orders of the Convention in conflict herewith are repealed, revoked and rescinded.

Mr. WATSON: I feel that there should be some steps taken in regard to this matter, and I move that the rules be suspended and that this resolution be placed on its passage.

The motion to suspend the rules was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I want to tell you what is going to happen if this resolution is carried out. There are one thousand and nine hundred sets left in the hands of the secretary of state to be sold at $12. There will be about twenty-five sets sold or maybe fifty for $12. There are about that many people in the state who would be willing to give that much for them. Next winter when the general assembly meets some wise member, probably from my county, will find out that those books are there and they will just pass one simple resolution dividing them up among them and they will distribute them and they will be distributed through them instead of through us. I am in favor of amending that by inserting fourteen instead of two. That will leave about two hundred sets in the hands of the secretary of state for sale, which I think is ample.

Mr. ANDERSON: I do not agree with the gentleman. In my opinion after the members of the coming legislature get hold of those books and find out what we have said about the legislature they would pass a resolution to suppress them.

Mr. DOTY: That is an additional reason why we should not leave it to them to distribute.

Mr. EVANS: I want to amend the resolution by including law libraries of the state and one complete set to each employee. Each law library ought to have a copy.

Mr. DOTY: Then I will move to amend by inserting law libraries of the state and that would include the law libraries of Cincinnati and Cleveland.

Distribution of Printed Copies of Proceedings and Debates—Schedule.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Scioto moves an amendment that each law library and each employe be included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I think it would be a gracious thing to send one set to each law library and one set to the congressional library at Washington.

Mr. DOTY: The state libraries are provided for in the resolution and we have to send two to the congressional library to get a copyright.

Mr. HALFHILL: I hope that the amendment of the member from Cuyahoga will prevail. I know very well in my county there are places for at least fourteen of these sets, to say nothing of a whole lot of libraries in the county that would like to have them. We cannot do better for ourselves than to let the people have them instead of allowing the legislature to control it.

Mr. PECK: I hope the amendment will prevail, and the suggestion I want to make in this connection as a member is the act under which we are assembled directs among other things that we shall provide for the securing of a copyright on the debates in the name of the state.

Mr. DOTY: We have passed a resolution on that.

Mr. MILLER, of Fairfield: That was attended to an hour ago.

Mr. WINN: It has occurred to me that it would be appropriate for us to send one copy to the Ohio State Board of Commerce and I move that the member from Coshocton be specially appointed a committee of one to deliver that.

Mr. STOKES: I want to add to the amendment of the gentleman from Cuyahoga that they shall be for free distribution by the members.

Mr. DOTY: The members can be left to decide that.

Mr. STOKES: It would be nice to put it in there.

The amendment was agreed to and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. TAGGART: I move that the vote whereby Proposal No. 340 was passed be now reconsidered. The purpose of that is to add to it a little addenda to make certain that the sections of the article adopted by the Convention and ratified by the people will repeal the corresponding section of the constitution.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

Mr. FACKLER: I ask unanimous consent to introduce an amendment to Proposal No. 340.

The consent was given and the amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the proposal add: "All amendments to existing sections of articles of the constitution, passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors, shall be held to repeal the sections so amended."

Mr. FACKLER: There is a strong probability that this is unnecessary. You can amend in two ways, by substitution and by addition. Ordinarily with bills introduced in the general assembly, they amend them so that every amendment provides that section so and so of such an article shall be amended. Now it may follow that by the addition of these amendments and the addition of sections, we have adopted them with the understanding that they shall take the place of the existing sections, so that that question might never be raised.

Mr. PECK: Suppose your amendment consists simply of an addition; you do not want to repeal the former part of the section?

Mr. FACKLER: No, sir.

Mr. PECK: This says all sections shall be repealed.

Mr. FACKLER: No, sir; we have no such language. There is not a single amendment where there is something added to a section already existing.

Mr. PECK: Take Mr. Mauck's blue sky proposal.

Mr. FACKLER: Wherever there has been an addition to a section the whole section has been repeated with the addition to it. It was so arranged.

Mr. PECK: I don't think there has been any uniform rule about that.

Mr. FACKLER: Section 1 of article I as we adopted it on second reading repeats part of section 1 in the old constitution and then adds something, but the proposal we adopted would repeal old section 1 and take the place of it. When we have adopted any proposal here which places an addenda to a section we have pursued the policy of repeating all of the section we desire to retain. Mr. Mauck's proposal would not be affected by this. That will be section 1 of article I.

Mr. PECK: I don't think the proposal would be affected by it, but I fear you are repealing the first part of the section.

Mr. FACKLER: No, sir; you can make a comparison. Mr. Mauck repeats the old part of section 1 and adds something.

Mr. PECK: I think there are others in the same fix.

Mr. FACKLER: I do not think there are any of that kind.

Mr. PECK: Why not add the words "in so far as they are inconsistent therewith"?

Mr. FACKLER: Because in certain places we have repealed something and haven't adopted anything.

Mr. PECK: I don't feel certain enough to urge the matter, but I rather think my idea about it should be adopted in some form. I move that the consideration of this be continued until tomorrow morning until we can investigate the bearings and that it be placed at the head of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT: We cannot defer matters of this sort until tomorrow.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the proposal pending be referred to the committee on Judiciary with instructions to report this evening.

Mr. PECK: I will accept that.

Mr. DOTY: I said the Judiciary committee—I mean the committee on Schedule. It will be almost ready to report. If this is going to get in we must know it so that we can take care of it in other places.

Mr. PECK: I think something of the kind ought to go in. I have been thinking for some time that there should be some general provision, because none of these amendments expressly repeal the portions of the constitution that they are intended to supersede.

The motion by Mr. Doty was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS: I want to read a telegram that has been sent us from Cleveland:

Congratulatory Telegram to Convention—Printing of Constitution with Amendments—Table on which First Constitution was Signed.

Congratulations and thanks to the Cuyahoga delegation and all progressives of the Convention. It was a long, hard fight and a splendid victory for the initiative and referendum. Your children's children will be proud of you.

EDMUND VANCE COOKE.

Mr. FESS: Edmund Vance Cooke is one of the recent and best poets living. I would like to quote two of his favorite stanzas:

Did you tackle that trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart and cheerful?
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?

O, a trouble's a ton or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble's what you make it.
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only, how did you take it?

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that the committee on Printing is hereby instructed to have printed the constitution of 1851 and the present amendments in such form that the original section and the present amendments will be in different type.

The object is that each one of us may have our complete work and the constitution of 1851 before our eyes, so that we can determine immediately the change. I am told that it will cost less than five cents per pamphlet.

Mr. DOTY: How many will we get?

Mr. ANDERSON: Ten to each one.

Mr. DOTY: The amount involved here is a very small amount, but we will have to call the roll on it. And it doesn't seem to me to be necessary at all. It seems to me to be an absolute waste of money.

Mr. ANDERSON: It seems to me that we ought to get this in simplified form so that anyone, be he a lawyer or not, can immediately make any explanation desired of any changes.

Mr. HOSKINS: I am half lawyer and I am half farmer and I think this is the proper thing to do. Mr. Doty may believe otherwise. He may be able to carry all these things in his mind, but I am not, and I don't think many others are.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Just a question: Is there anything in the resolution that makes it compulsory on a member to receive the pamphlets unless he wants them?

Mr. ANDERSON: I didn't mean it for the smart members. I meant it for the members of less intelligence, like myself.

Mr. WINN: There will be no committee on Printing. It seems to me that the secretary is the one that will have this in charge.

Mr. ANDERSON: I accept that suggestion and will substitute the secretary instead of the Printing committee.

The PRESIDENT: The motion now is that the secretary be directed to prepare what was suggested by the member from Mahoning and on that the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 81, nays 3, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Halfhill,	Okey,
Antrim,	Harbarger,	Partington,
Baum,	Harris, Hamilton,	Peters,

Messrs. Brattain, Doty and Malin voted in the negative.

So the motion was carried.

Mr. KERR: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 139:

WHEREAS, The table on which the first constitution of Ohio was signed is, by the courtesy of the commissioners of Ross county, now in possession of the state house custodian; therefore

Be it resolved, That the commissioners of Ross county be and are hereby requested to allow said table to remain in the state house, and that the secretary of this Convention be instructed to send said commissioners a copy of this resolution.

Mr. Knight moved to amend Resolution No. 139 as follows:

Strike out "the state house" and insert the following: "possession of the state of Ohio for preservation in the custody of the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Society."

Mr. KNIGHT: I favor the resolution in every way, but somebody should be given the custody of this table and the society I mention is the proper one. It has many other valuable relics of the state in its possession and I am suggesting that this be turned over to it.

Mr. WATSON: I rise to a point of order; the member from Hamilton county is smoking.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: He has no "edge" on the member from Cuyahoga.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: As the Convention is in a good humor I would timidly inquire whether Mr. Doty is willing that this resolution should pass?

Mr. DOTY: This is the first time that the member from Hamilton county [Mr. HARRIS] has been at all timid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

Resolution of Congratulation—Schedule.

On motion of Mr. Doty, the Convention recessed until 7:55 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 140:

WHEREAS, On February the 7th, 1912, there was born to the member from Fairfield county, and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Miller, a fine baby boy;

Be it therefore resolved, That the Convention extend to the happy parents congratulations.

Be it further resolved, That whereas baby Francis Edwin Miller was a guest of the Convention at its first banquet, that an invitation is hereby extended to him to attend all future banquets of the Convention.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Taggart submitted the following report:

The standing committee on Schedule, to which was referred Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, and the amendment by Mr. Fackler, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendment, and recommends its passage when so amended:

At the end of the proposal add:

"Any section of the present constitution inconsistent with any section of the amendments passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors, shall be held to be repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: Why say "held to be repealed". Why not say it "shall be thereby repealed?"

Mr. TAGGART: I think that is right—to strike out that "held" if you want to.

Mr. KNIGHT: That is one of the most delicate subjects we have to deal with. In one instance the supreme court has held that the constitution applies to municipal and public, and not only to municipal and public, but to private corporations. That is the first section or article XIII. There is another section which applies to municipal corporations, but the first one seems to be applicable to both private and public corporations. With the language just embodied and incorporated in this proposed amendment the status of that section seems doubtful. If it is a total repeal, it would seem to be knocked out of existence as affecting private corporations too. I am not prepared to submit an amendment, but I raise the question whether it is safe to adopt the proposal in this form.

Mr. TAGGART: The only question that can arise is as to the determination of whether or not any amendment which has been adopted by the Convention and will be adopted by the electors is inconsistent with these provisions of the constitution, and they are the only provisions I know of wherein the question could arise. The committee was unable to determine whether we should anticipate and settle that question in advance. Its recommendation is simply a matter of precaution, and it seems desirable to some of the members of the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: I call attention to the special order for this hour, being Resolution No. 133.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman from Cuyahoga calls attention to the special order of this hour. Now, is it understood that the amendment shall remain as worded?

Mr. TAGGART: I would not suggest any change.

Mr. PECK: It seems to me good enough.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I simply want to go a little slow on adopting the proposal. I do not think it is necessary. Any article submitted to the people must necessarily be held by any court to repeal any section of the constitution inconsistent with what the people adopt, but I want it clearly shown that we are not endangering that portion of our present constitution which we may not want to change. My own view and that of a number of gentlemen of the Convention is that such a schedule as this is not necessary. I still adhere to that view, but I yielded my ideas at the urgent request of some of the members.

Mr. DOTY: I, for one, am not only willing, but anxious to take the opinion of so painstaking a lawyer as Judge Taggart. I think, in view of his opinion, that we should lay the amendment on the table and pass the resolution.

Meantime, I want to call attention to the special order for this hour, which is Resolution No. 134.

Mr. PECK: I was one of those who was inclined to think that it would be desirable to stop this. I am not certain, because one cannot be certain about that until he has examined every single proposal with reference to the existing constitution, which would be a job of some length, but I do not see how this as worded could do any harm. It only provides that those things inconsistent with it shall be held to be repealed.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: Does it not provide that any section or article shall be repealed?

Mr. PECK: No, sir; it says any portion, I think.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: No; it says section or article.

Mr. PECK: Any portion that is inconsistent will be repealed. Any portion not inconsistent will not be repealed. This doctrine of repeal by implication, which you rely upon, has a good many things to it, and one of the primary rules with reference to it is that the court will not hold an article or law to be repealed by implication unless it is driven to it, unless there is no escape from it. If there is any possible way of reconciling the two, it will be done rather than say the former law is repealed. That is the last resort of the court. If the conflict is perfectly square and straight and there is no escape the repeal takes place, but if there is any escape, it is not repealed. If the two can by any possible language be construed so as to let them both stand, it is a rule that the court shall do so. Applying that here, I could not say that everything affected by what we have done is repealed, nor do I believe that anybody can, and for that reason I think it desirable that something like this shall be adopted; that the courts shall understand that what we have done here shall prevail over what existed before if there is anything like a conflict; that we shall not rely merely upon implication.

Schedule.

Mr. KNIGHT: This is really the same question raised by your colleague from Hamilton county. The amendment proposed here does not simply say any item or portion of the constitution held in conflict, but it says that if in any existing section there is found a conflict between what we are doing here and that existing section, the entire section is repealed.

Mr. KING: I don't think that is there. Please read it. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. KNIGHT: It repeals the entire section.

Mr. KING: When this amendment was first suggested I did not believe it was necessary. Assuming, of course, that the proposal upon the same shows that it is extended to a section or one or more sections or articles, and apparently takes the place of the one that is now in the constitution, if it is adopted, that would be a complete substitution and repeal of the original section of the constitution. That is true of most that have a title, but there are a few, you will remember, that are additional sections which absolutely refer to nothing in the present constitution. But take a proposal to submit an amendment to article IV, section 3, 7, 12 and 15 of the constitution, relating to judges of the court of common pleas. Then this proposal provides that sections 3, 7, 12 and 15 of article IV of the constitution are repealed. That would certainly repeal the present sections on the subject.

Mr. PECK: Are not some parts of those sections repeated?

Mr. KING: Yes; some words are. But the first section is almost entirely newly written. The seventh section and the third section provide that there shall be a probate court. That is all in the present constitution, but there was added to it a provision for the submission to the electors of any county, the question of combining that court with the common pleas court. Section 12 is a re-enactment. When it comes to Proposal No. 272, there is a difference. Proposal No. 272 is a proposal to add article XVIII to the constitution, entitled "Municipal Home Rule." Beginning with section 1 and running to section 14, all of it might be said to be absolutely new matter, and yet section 1 specifies how municipal corporations may be classified. Now, somewhere there should be a repeal of section 6 of article XIII, which relates to the same subject, and is the only section in the constitution of Ohio today that does particularly mention that. Of course, there is a provision in relation to all corporations which declares that no special act shall be passed conferring corporate powers and which the supreme court holds applies to municipal as well as private corporations. You cannot repeal that. But section 6 of article XIII relates to the organization of municipal corporations. That ought to be repealed. That is the only section not specially repealed that I know of. That still remains, and that ought to be referred to. I do not believe that, where these proposals enumerate the exact number of article and section as it is now, and purports to be an amendment to that section and covering the whole of said section and perhaps adding to it, it is necessary expressly to repeal it.

Mr. PECK: Take a section like this—I remember one—where a section is substituted on the same general subject, but in entirely different language, making entirely different provisions, containing no part of the original section, and where nothing is said about the repeal. Do you say that operates as a repeal when there is no necessary conflict between the two?

Mr. KING: I would like to see the case.

Mr. PECK: Perhaps I have one right here, section 7 of article V. No; this is absolutely new. I am mistaken in that. If the learned lawyers of this committee are satisfied to go on without this I do not propose to set my judgment up against theirs and insist upon it. I have always, however, practiced law upon the proposition that it is much better to avoid a possible difficulty by adding a few words in an instrument than to leave it open for doubt.

Mr. KING: If that is so, let me submit this: Ought not the repeal then to indicate expressly what is repealed rather than to leave it to construction?

Mr. PECK: Either way you leave it to construction; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. DOTY: Change the word "section" to "portion" in the proposal.

Mr. MARRIOTT: In view of the very great importance of this matter before the Convention, and the seeming indecision, I move that Proposal No. 340, with pending amendments, be referred back to the Schedule committee to report at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. PECK: I am inclined to insist upon my motion to substitute the word "portion" for "section".

Mr. TAGGART: Would not the word "provision" be better than "portion"?

Mr. PECK: That has been suggested by several, and I am not sure whether it would be better, but am willing that it be used. I will accept that.

The section as it would read in this amendment was read as follows:

Any provision of the present constitution inconsistent with any provision of the amendment passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors of the state shall be held to be repealed.

Mr. PECK: I move the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT: At the risk of violating all rules and knowing that I am not a lawyer, I still insist that this language does not cover the situation. At the time Proposal No. 272, the municipal home rule proposal, was reported to this Convention, it contained as the last section the specific statement that the adoption of this article would repeal section 6 of article XIII of the constitution. That was stricken out on second reading after a statement from several lawyers that if we repealed specifically that section it would leave the inference that all other parts of the constitution assigned to municipal corporations were in force.

Now, there are unquestionably upon the subject of municipal corporations two other clauses of the constitution which have been held by the supreme court to have an application. Yet those clauses do not apply to municipal corporations alone, but apply to other corporations. Therefore, we should not say that those sections or provisions shall be repealed, because you cannot take half of the meaning out of the words and leave the words themselves there. You cannot take the words out that apply to the private corporation. It seems to me that a phrase must be added here, not that the section is repealed, but that any conflicting provisions shall be held to be inoperative so far as conflicting, rather than striking out certain words.

Mr. KING: How would it do to provide that where provisions are not specially repealed, if there is a conflict between the amendments adopted here and the present constitution, the amendments so adopted shall prevail?

Mr. KNIGHT: That is a better way to put it. If the gentleman will put that in proper form, it will save the situation.

The PRESIDENT: The member will please reduce the amendment to writing.

Mr. TAGGART: I suggest the following, which may govern the contingencies: "Should any provision of the present constitution be inconsistent with the provisions of any amendment passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors the latter shall be held to control."

Mr. PETTIT: That is just what Judge Peck has been saying.

Mr. KING: That is all right. That seems to me to be the exact language that Judge Peck wanted.

Mr. PECK: I don't think that ought to be "shall be held to control." I think it should be "shall prevail."

Time was here given to reduce the various suggestions to writing.

Mr. COLTON: I have a matter that I would like to present, and I can do it while we are wasting this time. I would like to call the attention of the Convention to the grand resolution on your desk. Perhaps you will better understand what I want to call your attention to if you turn to the journal of May 24, page 25. I am doing this for the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology. You will notice that Proposal No. 96 begins "Resolved by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio, That a proposal to amend," etc. Now, when that proposal came to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology there came also from the Schedule committee a schedule to be attached to it. That schedule follows here. You notice how it begins, "Schedule No. 5." We have omitted those numbers in the grand resolution, because we do not need them. "That in the event the above proposal passed by the Convention," etc., beginning with "in the event," we change in all cases by prefixing "Resolved further that" to make it correspond with the "Resolved" with which each proposal begins. Now, if you will turn to the grand resolution on page 3—turn over about four pages—you will see how it looks in article V, on that page. You will notice in that the "Resolved by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio" is dropped out. The "Resolved" with which the proposal was introduced is dropped out in our grand resolution, but the schedule following article V on this page begins still with "Resolved further", with the words which we inserted to make this correspond with the "resolved" with which the proposal begins. You will see that these words, "Resolved further" in this schedule have no relation to any other "Resolved," and do not belong there, and what I ask is an amendment to remove "Resolved further" from each schedule provision, so that the schedule will begin, "If the amendment to article—", etc. If you will turn to the last page of this grand resolution you will see that that begins not with "Resolved further," but with the simple statement. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "Resolved further" and "Resolved further that," wherever they appear, and begin the sentence following with a capital.

Consent was given.

Mr. KING: I offer an amendment to Proposal No. 340.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the last sentence of the proposal and all amendments and insert the following:

"That if any provision of the amendments passed by this Convention and adopted by the electors, conflicts with any provision of the present constitution, the former shall prevail".

Mr. PECK: I accept that amendment.

Mr. FACKLER: I think that is defective. If we take a certain section of the constitution and make a change and part of the old constitution is left out and part left in, there might not be anything that conflicted with the old, and yet the intention was to take out that whole matter from the old.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I now offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the last sentence of the proposal and all pending amendments and insert the following:

"Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors inconsistent or in conflict with any provision of the present constitution shall be held to control".

Mr. PECK: That is the same as the other, except that the word "control" is used instead of "prevail".

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: There are conflicts that are going to come, and they will be decided by the supreme court. If there is any provision in these amendments which we submit and which are adopted and which seem to be inconsistent with the present constitution, the question is bound to be tested in the courts, and this amendment provides in case of conflict of that kind the court shall hold that the amendment we submit and adopt shall prevail.

Mr. PECK: How does that differ from Judge King's? I have no objection to it, but I cannot see the difference.

Mr. JONES: What is the gentleman offering?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: You recall what Professor Knight said about section 1 of article XIII, which provides that the general assembly shall pass no special acts conferring corporate powers. We do not want to repeal that section or any portion of it, so far as it affects private corporations. but the courts have held it applieto municipalities too, and we only want to repeal or control it in so far as it conflicts with the proposal of Mr. FitzSimons.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move that that subject be referred to a committee consisting of Mr. Fackler, Mr.

Peck Mr. Smith, of Hamilton, Judge King and Judge Taggart.

The motion was carried.

Mr. FACKLER: I have a report to submit.

The report was read as follows:

The standing committee on Submission and Address to the People to which was referred Resolution No. 118, Mr. Lampson, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its adoption when so amended:

Strike out all after the word "Resolution" and in lieu thereof insert the following:

Resolved, That the several proposals duly passed by this Convention shall be submitted to the electors as separate amendments to the constitution at a special election to be held on the third day of September, 1912.

The several amendments shall be designated on the ballot by their proper article and section numbers and also by their approved descriptive titles and shall be printed on said ballot and consecutively numbered in the manner and form hereinafter set forth. The adoption of any amendment by its title shall have the effect of adopting the amendment in full as finally passed by the Convention.

Said special election shall be held pursuant to all provisions of law applicable thereto including special registration.

Ballots shall be marked in accordance with instructions printed thereon.

Challengers and witnesses shall be admitted to all polling places under such regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of state.

Within ten days after said election the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections of the several counties shall forward by mail in duplicate sealed certified abstracts of the votes cast on the several amendments, one to the secretary of state and one to the auditor of state at Columbus. Within five days thereafter such abstracts shall be opened and canvassed by the said secretary of state and auditor of state in the presence of the governor who shall forthwith, by proclamation, declare the results of said election.

Each amendment on which the number of affirmative votes shall exceed the number of negative votes shall become a part of the constitution.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

To vote FOR license to traffic in intoxicating liquors place a cross-mark in the blank space to the left opposite the words:—"For license to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

To vote AGAINST license to traffic in intoxicating liquors place a cross-mark in the blank space to the left opposite the words:—"Against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

	For license to traffic in intoxicating liquors.
	Against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I desire to explain this report on behalf of the committee on Submission and Address to the People. Briefly it covers these points; that there shall be a special election held on the third of September next, that the regular election laws of the state shall apply in all respects, so far as they can apply, to this special election. The penalties, the hours to vote, the election officers, the legal holiday, witnesses and challengers at the polls, and all, shall apply under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. We found that that was the only practical way to work it out, because there might be such a large number of committees interested in these forty-two proposals that we would fill the booths with witnesses and challengers;

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

so we put that problem up to the secretary of state. The various proposals are to be printed upon the ballot, designating the article and section of the constitution which they either amend or supplement or change, and are to be printed with the approved title, that is, with the title which we have adopted here. The ballots will be marked as we are accustomed to vote, with a cross-mark at the left of each proposition, two boxes being provided, one for yes and one for no.

DELEGATES: Boxes?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I mean squares. The provision is made for sending the abstract of returns in duplicate and sealed to the secretary of state and auditor of state within ten days after the election. These officers were chosen, because they happen at this time to belong to different political parties. Within five days after the returns are sent to them the returns are to be opened in the presence of these officers and of the governor, canvassed, and the result of the election made known to the people of the state of Ohio by proclamation of the governor. Each amendment upon which the affirmative vote shall exceed the negative vote shall become a part of the constitution at the time fixed by the schedule applying to that amendment. Your committee has had great difficulty in agreeing upon a form of ballot. The form of ballot has been under consideration for two weeks or more and until tonight the committee has never been able to agree upon a form of ballot. Again and again the vote was a tie, but tonight a majority of your committee agreed on this report recommending the adoption of this resolution, and the report is signed by twelve members of the committee. The form of ballot places all of the proposals except the license proposal in a single column in the order in which the various articles of the constitution appear in the present constitution, so that each proposal or amendment appears in just the form in which it will be printed in the constitution, the proposals amending article I coming first, and so on down the list. That rule has been followed in all respects save in the license proposal. It is recommended by the committee that the other forty-one proposals appear in a single column without any circle in which to vote for or against all of them. The license proposal appears at the right of the ballot and at the top with a special direction how to vote for that, for the reason that in that proposal it is determined how the proposal shall be placed upon the ballot, and it is impossible to use the words yes and no; it is therefore necessary to have a special rule for that. The purpose of the committee was to submit separately the license proposal, and the others all appear in their order on the ballot.

Mr. WATSON: Do you not think it would be a little plainer if the longer bars were in upper case and the shorter bars in lower case?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: The detail of printing will be possibly much improved. This is a sample form and the typewriting machine had just such type to use.

Mr. DWYER: Why was it necessary to give the liquor proposal so prominent a place on the ticket?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: It is not. The purpose of it was simply to separately submit it.

Mr. PETTIT: Was it not the purpose to submit the right of franchise separately?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Yes; I was on the subcommittee that favored the separate submission of that amendment, but the whole committee overruled the subcommittee of which I was a member.

Mr. PETTIT: I am not in favor of giving the whisky proposal any more prominence than any other.

Mr. HARBARGER: How about the ballot?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: All on one ballot appearing in two columns.

Mr. HARBARGER: Why two columns?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: So that the literature sent out affecting any proposal may refer to it by the number.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Then could not the person vote by the numerals?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: No one would remember the numerals.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Yes; it would be easy to say to vote against such and such a number.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I do not think it is unreasonable to aid the voter in finding what he wants to vote for.

Mr. KEHOE: What did I understand you to say as to what passes a proposal?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: If the number of affirmative votes exceeds the number of negative votes, the proposal is part of the constitution.

Mr. KEHOE: Do we determine that in this constitution, or are we under the provisions of the old constitution in determining whether these amendments are passed?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: We are under the old constitution.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not exactly understand your statement as to why the committee put numerals on the margin of the proposals?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: So that the voters might have every possible aid in finding a proposal that they wish to vote for or against.

Mr. HALFHILL: If this is to be a campaign of education, would it not be just as well for the literature the voter gets discussing the proposal to give a number on it?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Of course; it has to discuss the proposal, and you would not think of voting anything because you got a letter from me asking you to vote against No. 23.

Mr. HALFHILL: Of course not; not because I got a letter from you, but because I was in favor of it.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: But if No. 23 were discussed and good reasons given, I think you would be glad to have that number, to find it on the ballot.

Mr. ANDERSON: With the numbers on the side, at least on the ballot, as here appearing, would it not permit a voter who could not read but who could understand numbers to take in his vest pocket into the booth certain numbers and then mark accordingly?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I suppose he would be able to read enough to read yes and no.

Mr. ANDERSON: In other words, is that not putting a premium upon the densest kind of ignorance and assisting those who are too ignorant otherwise to pick out certain things to be killed or to be voted for?

Mr. DWYER: I do not object to the numbers, but all I want to know is, does the committee intend to mail a facsimile of the ballot to every voter in the state before the day of the election with the numbers and the explanations on the different proposals, so that every voter before he comes to the polls will have a copy of that ballot and could mark it himself? That would enable every voter to know every proposal on the ballot.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. WINN: How did you obtain the information that the committee proposes to do that?

Mr. DWYER: I understand that. I am a member of the committee.

Mr. WINN: Well, how did the committee get authority to do that?

Mr. DWYER: That is what we have in fact decided.

Mr. WINN: You mean that your committee proposes to recommend to the Convention that this Convention take that action?

Mr. DWYER: We do, on the score of economy.

Mr. WINN: I want to know whether the committee has mapped out a certain line of action that it intends to take irrespective of the wishes of the Convention?

Mr. DWYER: Do you not think that is a highly proper thing to do?

Mr. FACKLER: I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT: The point of order is sustained.

Mr. READ: Do you not think it proper that a person who can read well and who is well informed, or can be, should be assisted by numerals when he has made up his mind?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: The argument against numerals would apply to having any index to a book.

Mr. KNIGHT: If the ballot is to follow this form, would it not be better for six, seven, eight and nine, down to seventeen, article II instead of article XI?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: That is article II. That is simply that much more work for the committee on Phraseology.

Mr. KNIGHT: This does not come to us. It is not a proposal.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: That can be rectified. It applies to article II.

Mr. KNIGHT: I insist that we correct it now.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Well, we will correct it.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Is the liquor proposal numbered?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: That is not numbered.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Will you number it?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: If you prefer.

Mr. MARRIOTT: Have you numbered it?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: No, sir; it is entirely by itself on the ballot. I see no objection to numbering it if anybody wants it numbered.

Mr. EVANS: Why did you put the liquor proposition off in a place by itself? I would like to understand the meaning of that. Why was that done?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: The reason was this: The majority of the committee believed that that was the right way to submit it separately, so that everybody would see that the liquor amendment stood by itself in this proposal. Now some of us think there are people who want to vote for the liquor amendment regardless of anything else, and that some want to vote against it regardless of anything else. We thought if it were in a column with the other proposals, some people might desire to vote simply upon that and vote straight down that column one way or the other. Some of us signed statement No. 1 under the Green law that we would separately submit the liquor amendment, and not have the rest of the constitution carried along with it. Several of us thought that was the place to put it, where everybody could find it, and everybody who wanted to vote for it could find it and everybody who wanted to vote against it could find it.

Mr. EVANS: Is it at the bottom or at one side?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: This comes right here opposite Mr. Elson's proposal at the top.

Mr. EVANS: Why did you put it to one side that way?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: We simply wanted to submit that separately. To be consistent we should have them all together, and we should not have given anyone precedence of position over the other.

Mr. EVANS: Well, doesn't this give that precedence?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: We don't think it gives precedence, because everybody can find it.

Mr. EVANS: The committee thinks that would give him a chance to find it anyhow, and he can find the others or not.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: No; the point was this: We do not want anybody who wants to vote against the liquor amendment to vote against everything else, as was done in 1873.

Mr. ULMER: A great many of the delegates here have at least signed a statement by which they pledged themselves that the liquor amendment should be submitted on a separate ballot. That was the first thing. Then the second thing was that the woman's suffrage proposal should be put on a separate ballot. Now, why put the liquor question separately this way and not submit woman's suffrage in the same way?

Mr. EVANS: I am not in favor of woman's suffrage.

Mr. WINN: A point of order, who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman from Lucas. Mr. Brown yielded the floor to Mr. Ulmer.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: There is one other point that I wish to make about this separate submission of the license proposal. That is the only alternative proposition before us. One is that license shall be granted, and the other is that license shall not be granted. That is not true of any other of these proposals. If the affirmative vote exceeds the negative vote on any other than this proposal, it becomes part of the constitution. If the negative exceeds the affirmative, the whole matter is gone.

Mr. WATSON: Why not leave a blank space underneath the same as all of the others and submit it that way instead of wasting so much space and time on it?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Why leave a blank space?

Mr. WATSON: Why not submit it on a separate ballot?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Every separate ballot requires a separate ballot box and tally sheet and all of the machinery of an election.

Mr. FACKLER: Is it not a fact that the license proposal as adopted by the Convention provided a different method of voting on the proposal from that which the committee recommends?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Certainly, and it so appears on this ballot.

Mr. THOMAS: Do the polls close at 5:30 or 6

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

o'clock? Was there not an amendment to close the election at six o'clock last year?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I think not.

DELEGATES: Yes; there was.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: If so, whatever the law it is applicable to this election. I now move the adoption of this report.

Mr. WINN: I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend the report of the committee on Resolution No. 118 as follows:

Strike out the following on the last page of the form of ballot: "Intoxicating Liquors. To vote for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors place a cross-mark in the blank space to the left opposite the words:—'For license to traffic in intoxicating liquors.' To vote against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors place a cross-mark in the blank space to the left opposite the words: 'Against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors,'" and place the form of ballot for vote on liquor license proposal in the column with the other propositions to be voted upon, and in its proper place, under the rule followed in the resolution giving place to the other propositions on the ballot.

Mr. WINN: I am not certain, gentlemen of the Convention, whether any other amendment to the resolution is necessary. I have not the text of the resolution before me, but the form of the ballot is part of the resolution, so I suggest by this amendment that the third page of the form of the ballot be changed by striking out the words "Intoxicating liquors" and all following down to the form of ballot for the vote on the last proposition—

Mr. DWYER: Will the gentlemen permit me?

Mr. WINN: Not now.

Mr. DWYER: I want to read a section?

Mr. WINN: I cannot yield for that now. In a moment I will—and that that be placed in the column in its proper place, following the rule adopted by the committee. Proposal No. 151 is an amendment of section 9 of article XV of the constitution, so that, if the same rule is applied to this as to all of the other proposals, it would appear probably as No. 36 or No. 37. Now, I do not believe that the temper of this Convention is favorable to the submission of this proposition or proposal off on the right of the ballot as recommended by the committee. I appreciate this fact, gentlemen, that around about saloons there are a great many men who have spent the best years of their lives cleaning cuspidors and in similar service for their masters, who are the saloon keepers, and they are not qualified in many instances to vote upon a proposition unless it is put some place on the ballot where they may be able to pick it out without reference to the language used in it. I do not believe that there is a majority of this Convention ready to submit the result of our own labors on these proposals to the determination of that class of men, and that is what is proposed by this plan of submission.

Mr. DWYER: Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. WINN: If it does not come out of my time.

Mr. DWYER: These are the laws of 1911 under which this Constitutional Convention was assembled, and is doing business. It makes provision about this. It reads:

Statement No. 1. I hereby state to the people of Ohio, as well as to the people of my county, that during my incumbency of the office of delegate to the Constitutional Convention, I will always vote for a separate submission to the people as a separate part of the constitution, of the alternative questions, "Shall the constitution provide for the licensing of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, or shall the constitution prohibit the licensing of the traffic in intoxicating liquors?"

Mr. WINN: I think we are all familiar with that.

Mr. DWYER: I want you to construe that.

Mr. WINN: It would be an insult to the intelligence of this Convention to assume that its members are not advised of that. But I am not asking that any person who was foolish enough to sign any pledge respecting that question shall violate his pledge. There is no such purpose as that in the amendment I propose. I propose that it be separately submitted. I am not even suggesting the violation of any pledge. When the general assembly enacted this law bringing into existence this Convention it was presumed (as we first presumed) that the result of our work would be an amended constitution to be submitted to the people on a question of "New constitution, yes", or "New constitution, no"; and that the constitution would be rejected or ratified by the people. So having that in mind, it was proposed that candidates might be pledged to submit this separate from the general constitution. The latter part of March or the first part of April we passed a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the Convention that we submit each proposal separately. That is what we all intended to do until the last two or three days when the very same influences that procured the general assembly to provide for that pledge in the law got in its work on the floor of this Convention and undertook to secure enough pledges for the submission of this question on a ballot in such a way that a man who might be described as the finished product of the saloon may be able to defeat our work at the polls. To me it seems that it would be belittling ourselves and would be an insult to the intelligence of the voters of Ohio for us to do a thing of this sort. Now there are some who wanted to put a circle at the top so that the voters could vote easily. But that has been rejected, and now it is urged that all the proposals be in one column, allowing the electors of Ohio to go to the polls and intelligently decide whether or not our work shall be ratified.

Mr. FACKLER: The amendment you have proposed is impossible. If you will turn to Proposal No. 151 you will find on page 3 what the committee found this afternoon when we started to make up the ballot. You will find that the form of the ballot is described in Proposal No. 151 and that it differs from the form in which all of the other proposals are to be submitted, and your amendment would throw the whole report on submission out of gear.

Mr. WINN: It might require a little further amendment, and the words "for or against license" might be used instead of "for or against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors." I believe those words have not been changed and the words are "For license to traffic in intoxicating liquors. Against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. FACKLER: You have evidently misunderstood me. If you notice the form of the ballot on the change in the jury system is yes and no, but that is not the form on the liquor question.

Mr. STEVENS: I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment offered by the member from Defiance [Mr. WINN].

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the first and second columns of the report of committee and the pending amendment and insert the following:

Mr. STEVENS: This amendment does simply this: It places every amendment to this constitution in a straight line from top to bottom on a straight ballot, and it puts them on in the order in which they will be inserted in the old constitution when the whole work is done and the people have voted upon it. There is no other rational way in which to submit the work of the Convention, and anybody who desires to change that order has some motive other than a fair, square vote all around. Now, about the circle at the top of the ballot—

Mr. ULMER: Is the circle square?

Mr. STEVENS: No, a circle is not square. A circle is like a whole lot of people on the other side of the question. They are not square. Now if a person wants to vote for all of the amendment he can simply put a cross in the circle instead of making forty-two. It may be said that that puts a premium upon the work of the Convention. I want to say to you that I am in favor of putting a premium upon the work of this Convention. The state of Ohio has elected one hundred and nineteen delegates and spent $200,000 in getting out this job, and if that does not create a presumption in favor of the work of this Convention then such presumption cannot be created. If we are not able to do this work we ought not to be here. The people sent us here. We have spent five months of painstaking work, and everything, I think, raises the presumption in favor of our work being adopted, and that circle does it. It is a right of every citizen, humble or otherwise, to have an opportunity of voting for or against any amendment, and for the purpose of extending that right to him I have used these words to the right of the circle:

To vote for or against any amendment separately mark X to the left of "Yes" or "No."

Suppose one of you men wishes to vote; if you want to vote for the whole business, mark X in the circle. Suppose you don't want to vote for all of them but want to vote against some; mark the X in the circle and then mark the X in the "No" square opposite those you wish to vote against. There cannot be a simpler method than that, and it is absolutely fair. If any of you men have friends not sufficiently intelligent to express their wishes on that ballot, I am sorry for your friends.

This plan will make it very much more easy to get these votes in. Ninety-nine per cent of the voters will vote for all of the amendments except three or four, and the method I submit with the circle is the easiest and quickest and simplest method that can be devised to vote on these matters.

Mr. HALFHILL: I think the report of the committee deserves commendation, but also think that this last amendment that came in here for your consideration, and which is said to be fair, is the most unfair thing that could be presented to this Convention or to the people of Ohio. When the gentleman boasts about the intelligence of this Convention and the presumption in favor of its work, he ought to remember that pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall, and he should not set himself up as being so exceedingly haughty as to think the Convention has done a thing that everybody in Ohio will agree with.

If we want a campaign of education and intelligence, follow the report of the committee, because I believe that is the surest way to get rid of both the vicious and the ignorant vote. I do not think we ought to adopt this circle at the top of the ballot so that everybody can vote for the whole thing by simply making a cross mark within the circle. I expect to vote for and advocate most of the work of this Convention, but some of it I shall not vote for. But I commend the work of this committee, and in regard to that separate submission that the gentleman from Defiance refers to, I would like that gentleman and everybody else to understand that not everybody in this Convention has signed any pledge. I did not sign any pledge under the Green law or any other law, but ever since I have had enough knowledge of the existing conditions to know what would be right and wrong upon submitting a proposal of this kind, I have known enough to know that it ought to be submitted on a separate ballot and voted for in a separate ballot box.

The gentleman from Defiance in his discourse didn't tell us what he stood for. He said it would defeat the work of this Convention, but he didn't tell us what the voters he described would vote against. After listening to his speech, I do not know now, and I do not believe any body in the Convention knows; but I do know a whole lot of people in the state of Ohio do not believe in license at all, and they are just as much entitled to vote their sentiments against license and for retaining the existing provisions of the constitution as the men who believe in license have a right to vote for it. It ought to be a separate ballot, and I always supposed that a separate submission meant putting it in a separate ballot box.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

We all know what defeated the constitution of 1873. Probably that was the best constitution ever submitted to any state in the Union.

Mr. STEVENS: What about this one of ours?

Mr. HALFHILL: This is only a partial constitution. Now another thing: We cannot have the major part of our work carried at the polls unless we have the support of the great newspapers of the state of Ohio. You know that the Cincinnati Enquirer and the Columbus Dispatch beat the constitution of 1873. How many newspapers are there in the state that would support the work if we put a circle at the head of this ballot and allow all electors to vote for each amendment by voting in the circle, and make them vote "No" opposite each proposal if they want to vote against them all? I have heard the Longworth law denounced time and time again in this Convention because by virtue of that and the indorsement of the two political parties a constitutional amendment was carried. I hope whatever we do with these amendments we will observe substantially the report of this committee because it is eminently fair.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Did you hear the statement made by the member from Tuscarawas [Mr. STEVENS] that in his judgment ninety-nine per cent of the people who go to the booths will vote for all of the amendments? Are you aware of the fact that not sixty per cent of this Convention voted for all of the amendments?

Mr. HALFHILL: I heard substantially that statement, and I think it was just as wide afield and as far from fact as some of the other statements of the gentleman from Tuscarawas.

Mr. STEVENS: I didn't make any such statement. I did not say that ninety-nine per cent of the voters would vote for all of the propositions. I said that ninety-nine per cent of the voters would vote for all of the propositions except three or four.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move that the amendment of the gentleman from Tuscarawas be laid on the table.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 75, nays 33, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Baum,	Fox,	Ludey,
Beatty, Morrow,	Hahn,	Malin,

So to the amendment was tabled.

Mr. DWYER: Now I move the previous question. The motion was lost.

Mr. ANDERSON: I think it is our duty to provide some way on this ballot that will permit those who have only a short period of time in which to vote to vote intelligently upon this all important question. Take the city of Youngstown. As I remember it, the statutes of Ohio provide that you can compel the big manufacturing establishments to close down for a period of three hours to permit their men to go and vote. Now some of those plants are a number of miles from the voting booths. There are from five thousand to seven thousand five hundred men employed there. With those great plants, where they take a billet of metal and send it down through the huge machinery operated by electric power at the other end, if certain men quit all have to quit. Therefore it means that all of those men are relieved at the same time to go to the polls and vote. A great many other men can sit in their office and have their chauffeurs bring their cars around and go at any time and take all the time they please to vote. Now, to be equally fair to all who wish to vote I insist that some means ought to be provided by which a man with two strokes of the pencil can vote for the whole constitution. "Oh," you say, "that is a premium on ignorance." Let us analyze it. The voter is not educated in the booth. The form of ballot does not make him any brighter or smarter. What he has done before he goes into the booth determines whether he has voted intelligently or not. He is not going to make a study of the proposed new constitution after he goes into the booth. What is the result? I am speaking of Youngstown. Those men working for the plants are relieved from work at a certain hour of the day. It takes them a certain time to get to their homes or to the voting booths, and they will be struggling there in long rows waiting to get in. And those in the booths will do what? They will know there are those outside waiting to get in, and do you think the man in the booth will make forty-two marks? Just get your watches out and see how long it will take you to read this ballot. It will take three and one-half minutes to read it, and I want to say to you that it is utterly impossible for those men in Youngstown to vote.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. PECK: If they cannot vote on these amendments how can they vote under the initiative and referendum when we refer so many things to them?

Mr. ANDERSON: We are talking about this now and not discussing the other, but I am just as anxious to provide time for the men to vote under the initiative and referendum as upon this new constitution that it has taken us months and months to make.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: I move the previous question.

The motion was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is, "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 81, nays 29, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: The special committee to which was referred Judge Taggart's report, submits the following report which was unanimously agreed to:

The select committee to which was referred Proposal No. 340—Mr. Taggart, having had the same under consideration, reports it back with the following amendments, and recommends its passage when so amended:

Strike out the last sentence of the proposal and all pending amendments and insert the following:

"Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors, inconsistent with, or in conflict with, any provision of the present constitution, shall be held to prevail."

The report was adopted.

The PRESIDENT: The question is upon the passage of the proposal, and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 97, nays none, as follows:

So the proposal finally passed.

Mr. THOMAS: I offer a report.

The report was read as follows:

The committee on Submission and Address to the People, having had under consideration plans for publishing information concerning the amendments to be submitted to the electors in the state, recommends the following:

First, that a pamphlet be prepared by the committee on Submission and Address to the People, containing a notice of election, a facsimile of the form of ballot to be used, a copy of each amendment, and a brief statement explaining each amendment, said statement in the case of each amendment to be drafted by the author and the chairman of the committee which had the amendment under consideration, and edited and approved by the committee on Submission and Address to the People, and then when thus approved said pamphlet shall be printed by the secretary of state and mailed as far as practicable to all the electors of the state, cost of the same to be paid by the state.

Second, that the committee on Submission and Address to the People be authorized and instructed to prepare statements concerning the amendments, to be sent free in plate form to such Ohio publishers as agree to use the same, and that this plate matter be distributed under the direction of the committee on Submission and Address to the People, provided, however, that an appropriation of the Convention's funds be and is hereby made for this purpose, not to exceed the amount of $1600.

Third, that the date and nature of the election to ratify the amendments, be advertised in at least two papers of opposite politics in each county of the state, provided such advertisements are accepted by each paper at a rate not to exceed the usual quoted rates for unofficial advertising, and that the committee on Submission and Address to the People furnish the copy and determine the number of insertions of such advertisements, and the papers in which they are to be placed, and report to the secretary of state a complete itemized statement of the cost of the same, which cost shall be borne by the state.

Fourth, That the members of the committee on Submission and Address to the People shall receive the usual mileage for meetings which they deem it advisable to call, and that requisitions shall be made in the usual manner by the president and secretary for necessary postage and materials required for the work of the committee.

The report was adopted.

Mr. DWYER: I offer an amendment that in any county of the state where there is a German newspaper published it shall be published in one German newspaper.

The PRESIDENT: That is not in order at this time.
Mr. CASSIDY: I offer a resolution, and as the resolution is in my handwriting, I will have to read it.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 141:

Resolved, First, that a pamphlet be prepared by the committee on Submission and Address to the People, containing a notice of election, a facsimile of the form of ballot to be used, a copy of each amendment, and a brief statement explaining each amendment, said statement in the case of each amendment to be drafted by the author and the chairman of the committee which had the amendment under consideration, and edited and approved by the committee on Submission and Address to the People, and that when thus approved said pamphlet shall be printed by the secretary of state and mailed as far as practicable to all the electors of the state, cost of the same to be paid by the state.

Second, that the committee on Submission and Address to the People be authorized and instructed to prepare statements concerning the amendments, to be sent free in plate form to such Ohio publishers as agree to use the same, and that this plate matter be distributed under the direction of the committee on Submission and Address to the People, provided, however, that an appropriation of the Convention's funds be and is hereby made for this purpose not to exceed the amount of sixteen hundred dollars.

Third, that the date and nature of the election to ratify the amendments, be advertised in at least two papers of opposite politics in each county of the state, provided such advertisements are accepted by each paper at a rate not to exceed the usual quoted rates for unofficial advertising, and that the committee on Submission and Address to the People furnish the copy and determine the number of insertions of such advertisements, and the papers in which they are to be placed, and report to the secretary of state a complete itemized statement of the cost of the same which cost shall be borne by the state.

Fourth, that the members of the committee on Submission and Address to the People shall receive the usual mileage for meetings which they deem it advisable, to call, and that requisitions shall be made in the usual manner by the president and secretary for necessary postage and materials required for the work of the committee.

Mr. CASSIDY: This resolution is to bring before the Convention a form so that it can be referred to a committee. This follows, word for word, the submission and address. If it is desired, I can give a statement of our financial condition up to tomorrow:

Out of the appropriation of $200,000 made by the legislature for the expenses, up to tomorrow there will be expended $178,398.70, as near as we can estimate it. This does not include the allowances made to the reporter for night sessions nor does it include the bill for printing and publishing the debates, the contract for which was $5,000, nor does it include any item for printing the journal, which it is customary to do. Outside of those last-named items, we have $21,000 in the treasury out of the appropriation made by the general assembly.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. MAUCK: You propose to print pamphlets at the expense of the state and distribute them. Have you determined any way by which you can buy postage stamps on tick?

Mr. CASSIDY: Personally, I have never been able to do it.

Mr. MAUCK: Is it not the business of the committee to provide for that, for some method of publicity?

Mr. CASSIDY: The secretary informs me that the secretary of state has authority to make that distribution.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment of the gentleman from Montgomery to publish in one German paper in any county that has a German paper is the matter before the Convention.

Mr. CASSIDY: That matter was considered in the committee, and we decided that the selection of the newspapers had better be left to a committee. I would oppose that amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT: It seems to me that any matter that is sent out to the people of the state of Ohio officially in the name of this Convention ought to be something that is read to this Convention and adopted by the Convention. I am absolutely opposed, and I know there are a great many others with me, to any blanket resolution conferring upon any number of members of this Convention, after this body has adjourned, the right to describe in their own terms and in such fashion as they please the contents of the various amendments submitted to the people. If they are to go out to the people, they should go out over the official name and with the official authority of the Convention.

I do not believe it is the business of this Convention to do any advertising of its work except in a legal form, by paying for the necessary advertising required by law. I am quite opposed to the body of the resolution in that regard, and I hope it will be defeated or so amended as to remove this feature.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: What authority has this Convention to provide that the secretary of state shall do this or that, involving an expenditure of money?

The delegate from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] here took the chair as president pro tem.

Mr. BIGELOW: Gentlemen of the Convention: The attitude of some of the members of the Convention seems to be that we should maintain a dignified indifference as to what the public does with our amendments, now that we have adopted them. That is not my attitude. To me it seems that our work is not yet finished, and that we have a duty to perform to the people of this state after we adjourn tomorrow, if we do adjourn tomorrow, and that duty is to go out as missionaries, if you please, to talk to the people about the work we have done, to explain these amendments, and to use our best endeavors to secure the ratification of our work at the polls. Now, if that is to be done, of course all of that campaigning must be done at individual expense, and as our voluntary contribution to the good of the commonwealth. But there is much that can be done by the Convention and by the state in disseminating information concerning what has been done. It is hardly conceivable to me that this Convention would hesitate to do any reasonable thing to carry the intelligence to all of the voters of the state of what has been done here, because it is just as important that the people next September should vote with full information as to what has been done as that we should have done our work well. In fact, it is more important, because if they are not informed about it, no matter how good our work has been, it fails.

Now, it is a very proper function of the state to convey intelligence as to state matters. The usual way is to advertise amendments in such form that nobody reads them, and in a very expensive way. In 1908 we submitted the taxation amendment to the vote of the people, and the advertising bill for the submission of that one little amendment was $41,000. I have had a computation made that if we pay at the same rates for the amount of matter we have to advertise, we will have to pay $1,800,000. Of course, that is preposterous, and yet, because that would be out of the question, are we going to not advertise it at all? Surely, it is our duty, it is the duty of the state, to see that the people who are to pass upon the work of this Fourth Constitutional Convention shall have available the information to permit them to pass intelligently upon that work.

Now, what is the plan outlined? Instead of spending $41,000 to print at the official rate in the newspapers of the state in a form that nobody reads one amendment, we have planned here that at an expense of not exceeding $50,000 all of this work can be much better presented to the people of the state. The first plan is that a pamphlet be prepared. You have provided in the initiative and referendum proposal, which you have adopted, that whenever questions in the future are to be submitted under that proposal such a pamphlet shall be distributed that this information may be conveyed to the voters. How is this pamphlet to be prepared? The amendments are to be printed on a facsimile ballot with an explanation. The resolution says that this explanation shall be prepared jointly by the author of the proposal and the chairman of the committee that had the proposal under consideration, and when those two men have submitted the draft of the explanation it is to go to the committee on Submission and Address to the People in order that it may be properly arranged to go with similar statements from the authors and chairmen of the other committees that are to be incorporated in this pamphlet.

I can quite understand the reasonableness of the suggestion of the member from Franklin [Mr. KNIGHT] that it would be desirable, if it were possible, to have such pamphlet ready and acted upon by the Convention. There is a way by which it can be done. This Convention can adjourn and come back in two or three weeks, or any time you fix, when the work of the sub-committee can be reported, and the pamphlet can be ready and passed upon. But, if that is not desired, are we to forego the opportunity we have of conveying this intelligence to the voters without unreasonable cost? Not only is this statement to be prepared this way by the author of the proposal and the chairman of the committee, but the whole matter shall be acted upon by the committee on Submission and Address to the People.

I should think we have been here long enough to trust one another, and not imagine that an advantage would be taken. Here is a committee of eighteen people. The president and the vice president are on the committee, as are Mr. Brown, of Highland, Mr. Brown, of Lucas, Mr. Fackler, Judge Dwyer, Mr. Weybrecht, Mr. Beatty, of Wood, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Hahn, Mr. Evans, Mr. Woods, Mr. Crosser, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Johnson, of Madison, Mr. Bowdle, Mr. Doty and Mr. Lampson, while Mr. Cassidy was put on today. It might be desirable to make additions to this committee, so that it would be fully representative of every class of people here and of this that or the other interest. The other method suggested is that these statements or similar statements prepared in the same way be sent out with reference to each proposal in plate matter free to the country press that will use the same. This could be done at a cost of $1,600 and the funds will be available from the Convention funds for doing this. Of course, it is out of the question that the newspapers of the state expect us to advertise our work, bulky as it is, at official rates. Yet it is reasonable that we should do some advertising, and the committee's plan is that there be inserted once or twice or three times preceding the election a display advertisement, or facsimile of the ballot, and the attention of the public called to the importance of the approaching election when the work of the Convention is to be finally passed upon. I should be glad to have this amended if this does not seem reasonable. I will leave it to the Convention to examine it and do with it as they desire. But if you do not do this, you should do something else equally as good or better. We certainly should not maintain an attitude of indifference as to what the public does with our work. Then indeed we should feel a very keen responsibility, at least to the extent of doing everything reasonable to convey to the public full intelligence as to what we have done, in order that their verdict at the polls may be intelligent.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. WOODS: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out all advertising except the pamphlet, which pamphlet shall only contain copies of all amendments certified to by the secretary of this Convention.

Mr. WOODS: I do not agree with the president on a good many things pertaining to our work. I think when our work is done the people should be informed as to what we have done. I do not think it is up to us to analyze our work for them. We came here as their servants, not as their masters. We have done certain work and we should inform the people just what we have done. If we print a pamphlet with a certified copy of every amendment and mail it to every voter, they can find out what we have done and they can make up their minds whether to adopt the work or vote against it.

Mr. BIGELOW: Is it the purpose of your amendment to print a pamphlet with the text of the amendments?

Mr. WOODS: Yes.

Mr. BIGELOW: Do you think it would be possible for an average voter—indeed, do you think it would be possible for the average member of this Convention had he not been paid to spend five months here—to take such a pamphlet as you propose and get any ray of intelligence out of it as to what this Convention has done?

Mr. WOODS: I think if the people of Ohio are capable of making their own laws and voting for and against every law, that they are capable of voting for or against these amendments.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODS: Not now. Not only that, gentlemen of the Convention, but I say to you that it is not fair that the author of each proposal and the chairman of the committee which had that proposal under consideration only should make an argument for the respective amendments and print these in the pamphlet and send it to the voters. If you are going to have an argument for it, then in all fairness you should have an argument against it to go along with it to the voters.

Mr. WATSON: Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODS: Not now. Not only that, I am a member of this committee on Submission and Address to the People, and I have been notified of just two meetings of that committee. That is all. However, I have attended the meetings of the committee that I have had notice of with one exception when I could not be there. I don't want to reflect on that committee. There are some good men on it, but I say to you in my judgment you might just as well leave this matter of exploiting alone to the president of the Convention as to leave it to that committee. The members of that committee cannot spend their summer down here advertising. If this Convention see fit to prepare some advertising matter for the newspapers that is fair and proper advertising matter, I shall be for it, but I am absolutely opposed to doing something here that is going to allow somebody to advertise in all of the newspapers of this state something that this committee on Submission and Address to the People or this Convention may have to stand for. I am opposed to it. It looks to me as though this state house for the next three or four months and the state treasury and all that is in it and a good big bunch that is not in it are to be used for the purpose of getting the people of this state to adopt our work. For the life of me, I cannot understand how it becomes a part of our duty to get the people to vote for something they may not want. I am willing to go out in my county and explain what we have done down here, but I am not going to stump for votes. I shall try to explain these amendments, but I shall get them to vote against some things done here if I can. I am going to be fair about these matters. I don't think the people of the state expect us to go out and tell them what a great work we have done. I don't think that we are expected to do that or that we can afford to do it, and if this Convention passes this resolution and then passes the next resolution the people of Ohio are going to get the real cold truth from me, and that is the reason I object to it.

Mr. WATSON: Take the question of taxation. The chairman of that committee is not in sympathy with the work of this Convention and neither is the man whose name the said proposal bears. The report was made from the other side of the question. Would it be fair to let two hostile people make the explanation on that proposal?

Mr. WOODS: That is one of the reasons I do not think the proposals adopted by this Convention will come anywhere near getting the square deal in the advertising matter. I think the advertising matter will be used against some proposals that this Convention has adopted, and this Convention will have no way of stopping or preventing that advertising being done.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. ANDERSON: Take Proposal No. 151. I was not on the committee at all, although the proposal bears my name. Do you think Mr. Bowdle, the chairman of that committee and I could agree on anything in that regard?

Mr. DOTY: I am willing to resign all my right and title as a member of the committee on Taxation to the member from Guernsey. He seems to know very much more about taxation than I ever did, and I now request him to prepare something that we cannot shoot holes through to put in that address.

Mr. JONES: It is just as important to have the people understand what work has been done here as the work itself is, and the only practical way of getting the people to understand this work is to put it before them. Now, it is absolute folly to talk about the average citizen taking these amendments and reading them over and getting any intelligent idea of the purpose and object of them. How can he tell whether that proposed amendment is better than what is already in the constitution unless the defect in the present constitution is pointed out to him and the thing sought to be accomplished by the amendment is also shown him? Take that proposal about bill boards. What conclusion will the average voter come to on that? How can he tell whether there was any necessity for it? Take that one about registering land titles. How will the average voter determine whether there is any necessity or need at all for that sort of an amendment? You could go through the list, twelve or fifteen or twenty that have been passed for the purpose of remedying some existing defect in the present constitution, and the average man, unless he should be a lawyer who has given attention especially and knows something about them, would absolutely be unable to make up any judgment as to whether these amendments should receive his vote or not.

The only practical way to bring it to the attention of the voters is to submit right in connection with the proposed amendment some statement as to the object and reason and purpose of it. I realize the force of the objection made by some that that statement should not be prejudiced or unfair. It should be a fairly reasonable statement of the real object and purpose sought to be accomplished by the amendment. It may be that there might be some advantage taken of this, but the great probabilities are that no member of this Convention or of the committee to whom this matter will be assigned will to any great extent abuse the privilege and confidence reposed in him in submitting this. But if it is thought there is any danger of that, then certainly the next thing that should be done is to have this Convention come back, in a short time after this report for publication is prepared with the statements, and then examine and pass upon each one of them, because, as I say again, it is absolutely useless to submit these proposals to the average voter without conveying to him some information in reference to their purpose. How is the average voter going to get that intelligence? Is he going to go to a lawyer and ask him what the old constitution is or what the old one was and what the purpose is of the new one? The average voter cannot do that. Will he talk to the neighbors? Will he get the information from them? They will know as little as he does and there is no way for the voter to inform himself. Now if this statement is fair and reliable and correct and is prepared and submitted right along with the amendment, the average voter can tell as well as he can by any means, probably, what the purpose and object sought to be accomplished by the proposed amendment are and whether such amendment meets with his approval. I do think you would do more than in any other way to nullify the work of this Convention by a failure to submit with it a correct, definite and clear explanatory statement.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I trust that at this late hour, the closing hour of our work, we shall not be influenced by prejudice or overrefinement of technicality. I say to you frankly from my point of view what has been proposed by the committee never occurred to me. But it is so sound and business-like that it is only fair that the Convention should acknowledge that it is under an obligation to that committee, and I believe that sense of obligation if expressed by this Convention will be expressed by the people of the state of Ohio who will find that there is placed in their hands a pamphlet giving them a resume of all we have done in the five months, so clear and so concise that they will be able to understand it without regard to what the position of the daily paper of their community may be relative to our work.

Now let us see what the province of the state of Ohio on this proposition is; and before I proceed further I call your attention to the fact, which every member of the Convention did not know and does not know now, that the initiative and referendum proposal which we have adopted provides that a pamphlet shall be sent to every voter in the state on every statute and that in that pamphlet there is provision made that a brief shall be filed of not more than three hundred words by the proponents and opponents of the measure. Now, we have voted that great expense upon the state of Ohio for the consideration of a simple statute that by the succeeding legislature may be rescinded. You may argue since we have made provision in the initiative and referendum for the proponents and opponents of the measure to be heard, why not in the proposed pamphlet? Let us consider why not. Because fundamentally there is no reason to do so, because it would be abhorrent to every reason that we could use and under which we have been acting for five months to give a negative point of view on any proposed amendment. We were called together to do an affirmative thing, amend the constitution. Therefore, every amendment which we make should bear the reason for that amendment before the people. That is all that is asked of this Convention; not why those who failed to defeat the measure should be heard. The public is not interested, in so far as this Convention is concerned, with the reasons that govern those who were unable to impress their reasons and the soundness of their argument upon this Convention. Our action is all affirmative.

Now, as has been well said by the gentleman from Fayette [Mr. JONES], it is beneath our dignity for one moment to consider that the chairman of the committee and the author of the proposal or the committee on Submission and Address to the People would take any unfair advantage. They are interested only in giving the reasons for the proposal in question, and if a member of that committee, the chairman or the author, were opposed to the proposal as adopted by this Convention, in making up this pamphlet he acts as trustee for the Convention with a positive mandate and with a great moral obligation to give the reasons for the adoption of that proposal.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. WOODS: Will you kindly inform the members of the Convention who under that resolution, would prepare the statement for the uniform rule for taxation?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: If it were I, I would give the best argument I knew.

Mr. WOODS: But under that rule who would be the one to do it?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: The author of the proposal and the chairman of the committee. The author of the proposal is Judge Worthington, and do you dare to stand here and challenge his sense of duty?

Mr. WOODS: Is he not absolutely against it?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Yes, but nevertheless, as trustee for the Convention, he would do justice as he has always done on the floor, and he would state the correct point of view although he did not agree with it.

Mr. JONES: The gentleman from Medina [Mr. Woods] assumes that there will be an argument in favor of each proposal. Is it the purpose to make any argument or is it not rather the purpose to make a fair statement of the purposes and object sought to be accomplished, without any argument either for or against the propriety of the accomplishment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: You have stated the question with absolute accuracy. I do not want to cut off debate, and therefore I will refrain from moving the previous question.

Mr. TANNEHILL: Before any previous question is moved I want to make a suggestion which I believe is sensible. I would suggest limiting the statement on each proposal. Let the author write that and sign his name to it. I do not want any committee monkeying with what I write. Then in addition let this committee write what it wants and send its report and let them sign their report.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I do not quite understand the resolution. Does it provide for an argument or just for a statement?

Mr. CASSIDY: The long resolution provides for a brief statement explaining each amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I have no objection to that, but I was afraid that we were trying to submit a discussion and argument. Will this statement set forth clearly just what we are attempting to do?

The PRESIDENT: The purpose of the suggestion was that along with the tax amendment there should go such an explanation as to the occasion for making it and the reason of the Convention in making it that when the voter read the amendment he would understand it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Am I to understand that this suggestion has been accepted by the committee, that there shall be a brief statement of explanation limited to three hundred words to be signed by the chairman of the committee and the reputed author of the proposal?

Mr. CASSIDY: I will accept that. It is as fair here as it would be in the initiative and referendum.

Mr. DOTY: I suggest that these amendments be put in writing.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I said that as we have a few proposals, like the one on taxation, where the author is not in favor of what we have done the president prepare a list and submit it to us as to who shall write each one and let us adopt it.

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: As to the amendment of the member from Medina [Mr. Woods] striking out the advertisements, I have had a little experience in publicity in connection with elections extending over a period of years. I have tried pamphlets, circulars, postcards, billboards and newspapers, and in my judgment the most effective publicity for election purposes is newspaper publicity. I believe we shall be very unwise if we make it impossible by this resolution to use the newspapers for publication and make it impossible for us to have their good will.

Mr. HOSKINS: Did I understand the amendment is accepted?

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman from Logan accepted it.

Mr. CASSIDY: Yes, but I want it in writing.

Mr. THOMAS: I move that that amendment be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT: The chair will recognize the gentleman from Defiance [Mr. WINN] first, and then the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. WINN: With this amendment it would be absolutely meaningless. At any rate, it would be so nearly meaningless that I do not think we should encumber our records with it, and I move to lay it on the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. ANDERSON: I am very much in favor of Mr. Tannehill's suggestion. There are two proposals that bear my name. I can prepare the statement or explanation as to the liquor proposal in half an hour, and I can prepare the other in fifteen minutes. There is no trouble about it. We can prepare all we have to prepare by tomorrow and be ready for the pamphlet, and that will remove all difficulties.

Mr. NYE: It seems to me this is a very unusual thing for the Convention to continue its work after we adjourn tomorrow. I do not know of any constitutional convention that has undertaken to continue its work after it has completed the main body of its work. I had supposed if there was any adjournment to be had, it would be for some formal matter. I think we have completed our work and that it can be understood by the people. We would be blamed if we kept up a bureau of instruction after this Convention adjourns, and I think it would tend to make the people dissatisfied with our work. I think they would object to it. If we publish the work it will speak for itself. There is a member of this Convention in every county in the state, and in some counties there are more than one, and if the people of the state desire to learn something about these amendments they can easily find it out by consulting the members and have it explained. I do not think this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the first paragraph insert:

"The explanation of every amendment shall be limited to three hundred (300) words and shall be signed by the chairman of the committee and the author of the proposal unless the Convention shall name some other member or members to so act."

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. DOTY: I will tell you right now you can name somebody else for me.

Mr. BOWDLE: I approve very heartily of the position taken by the distinguished delegate from Lorain [Mr. NYE], and I find myself in opposition to the president of the Convention for the first time in the history of the Convention. It is assumed here in all that has been said that the electors of the state need to be put through a kind of primer class at the expense of the state. The assumption is not correct. We were summoned here in response to a spirit of American restlessness and progressiveness that is now rampant from Maine to California. Men and women have assumed that they do know and did know a great deal about what was wanted in the way of a reform in the constitution. That progressive spirit does not need the pamphleteering that is now attempted to be expensively provided for. An other thing: We today in this world do not get our intelligence, especially in political matters, from pamphlets. We get what we get from the stump, and the men of this Convention have to go on the stump at every crossroad in this state and give such explanation of our work as the electors may care to ask for or to listen to. I do not believe you will accomplish anything by a large number of pamphlets sent out as proposed, and I do not believe that that progressive spirit requires the kind of instruction you are now providing to give. I do not agree with my distinguished colleague, Mr. Harris, in assuming that somehow or other a man can regard himself as a trustee in writing three or four or five hundred words. It is not conceivable that Mr. Kilpatrick, as fine a man as I know him to be, can sit down and write a fair statement of the suffrage question without making what some of us might regard as an argument in favor of his side of the question, and all at the expense of the people of the state. I am quite sure I could not write out the wet side of the Anderson proposal, for it is just as wet as anything that was introduced here. I could not write out anything that Brother Watson, of Guernsey, could agree to, and it is not fair that that should be sent out at the expense of the electors of the state.

I am, therefore, opposed to doing more than letting the people of this state know what the constitution is, and trusting to their intelligence, to comprehend it.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen: I have not been able to quite understand the attitude of a good number of the members of the Convention in regard to favoring the work we have done here. I have heard upon every side that our duty is to submit our work so as to give it absolutely no favor, but to make it just as easy to reject as to adopt it. I now hear it said that we ought not to undertake to impress the public with the importance of our work and that we ought not to use any effort to induce the voters to favor what we have done, but we ought to submit it and allow them to use their own judgment and that we would be going afield of our duty if we tried to persuade anybody to vote for it. I cannot quite understand why we would be regarded as going beyond our authority if we tried to convince the people that the work that has been done here ought to be adopted. I do not see any lack of ethics in that. I do not understand why one hundred and nineteen men—and they represent a majority of the voters of the state, or they would not be here—would not be doing right if they should try to persuade the voters of the state that what we have done ought to be made a part of the organic law, and that we are justified in so doing. Just a mere writing or printing of the amendments will not do that, for all sorts of speculations are rife as to what we have done in this Convention. What will the average voter know about judicial reform by merely looking at the amendment? I say it would be a great help if a brief, concise and clear statement of what the amendment is were furnished to the voters. It will enable the voters to comprehend much more easily. Of course, you are going to have all of the amendments published, but there ought to be some explanation. Frequently what would not be intelligible at all can be made thoroughly so by a few lines of explanation. I think we are justified in using every influence we can to have our work ratified, and I am going to say a thing that is personal to me, and it is a repetition of what I said in the beginning, the greatest honor that has been conferred upon me has been the privilege of sitting, with these one hundred and eighteen men. It has been the pride of my life. I want this work accepted. I do not want it rejected. I want my children to have a pride that their father had something to do with an instrument adopted, and not one rejected.

Mr. KNIGHT*: Section 4 of the act calling this Convention describes what we have authority to do, and it does not seem to authorize us to spend the state's money for the purpose in this resolution.

Most of us are not gifted with oratory, but I think most of us will do what we can in explaining our work to the people. Now, because we wish to do this, does that make it right for us to do something we have no authority to do?

Mr. DWYER: Section 4 says that we may have the debates published in durable form and secure a copyright on same for the state and fix and describe the time and form and manner of submitting any proposed revision, alterations, or amendments of the constitution to the electors of the state; also the notice to be given of such submission.

Mr. NYE: May I ask a question?

Mr. FESS: I want to answer the suggestion of Professor Knight. I do not understand that the Convention is undertaking to do anything except what we started out to do, namely, to put the work before the people.

Mr. NYE: Do you know of any constitutional convention that ever met in the state of Ohio that did not adjourn sine die when it got through with its main work?

Mr. FESS: If any other convention adjourned as quickly as their work was done, it has done a very foolish thing, because we do not want to kill this Convention; we want to keep it alive in order that if anything needs to be done we are in shape to do it.

Mr. NYE: I am not asking about that, but do you know of any constitutional convention in any state that has continued after its work was done?

Mr. FESS: I am not advised as to that.

Mr. NYE: Would we not be criticised if we maintained an organization for the purpose of publicity?

Mr. FESS: That is not the purpose. There may be other things that we want to do.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. NYE: I am not objecting to the other part at all.

Mr. WOODS: It has been said that there is nothing in the law that created this body that prevents us from spending money to advertise our work, but have we authority to do anything that that statute does not expressly give us authority to do? It is not a question of whether the statute says we cannot do it, but whether this law says we may do it.

Mr. FESS: Where the end is specified, the means of doing it need not be specified, but may be implied.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not believe we have any authority but if we stretch the authority and assume we have, then what is the situation? Every lawyer knows when he starts to writing a brief that it is almost impossible to make a statement of the facts without getting in some argument. It is one of the hardest things in the world, to state your facts without any argument. Now what situation am I in on this taxation question? Do you think I will vote for the taxation amendment? I certainly shall not. I propose to denounce it on every occasion and in every place that I can. I think it is both wrong and unwise, and when I find myself in that situation I propose to fight it and I don't want any argument sent out by the Convention, and I will not be bound by any. But, gentlemen, I have as much pride as anybody in hoping to see the main work of the Convention prevail, because I believe it is good for the commonwealth, and I have a reasonable amount of pride in hoping that our work will be adopted. But that does not change me in the relation I shall occupy to some of the work done here.

It was well stated by the gentleman from Hamilton [Mr. HARRIS] that forty per cent of the members of the Convention were opposed to all of the work of the members of the Convention. That takes us all in.

Now, it is the newspapers of the state and the state journals of the state that are really going to carry the information by which the people will become informed, coupled with the work on the stump. Why, if you had permitted me to press the amendment today which you turned down, I have a sheaf of newspaper editorials here from the leading journals of the state—I cannot name them all, but there were the Cleveland Leader and the News and the Toledo Blade and the Dayton Journal and the Columbus Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal and others, all of them denouncing the work of this Convention as being unfair in failing to submit the alternative proposal for which I contended. Now what is the situation when you put out your pamphlets?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM: About those editorials, every-one of them is simply boiler plate.

Mr. HALFHILL: I submit they are not, they are able editorials. They may be boiler plate or gun metal, but they are giving facts and argument, and we are going to put ourselves in a very peculiar situation.

Now these proposals are not, in a good many instances, the work of the man whose name they bear. They went to a committee and they were amended there and they were discussed on the floor of this Convention and they were amended here. I don't see how it is possible for the putative authors of some of these proposals to even write a fair statement about them. I believe in a certain amount of publicity, but I do not want it sent out by this Convention, and I do not want it to bear the stamp of this Convention, to meet me on the stump and confuse me in the campaign, though I do not think I shall be in any campaign on any thing that I may be personally confused over. I mean any defect in the work of the Convention.

Mr. DWYER: Well, give us the way you think we ought to do it.

Mr. HALFHILL: I think it is our duty to submit this work and await the verdict. If the people of the state of Ohio knew enough to call this Convention into existence they ought to know enough to take the work and pass upon it and render a verdict with the aid of the newspaper agencies and the views that come from the stump. I do not believe it is right for the Convention to pose as the advocate of all its work, because it is not, and that is what I object to.

Mr. JONES: You made a statement that it would put you in a bad position to go out on the stump with your ideas with reference to the question of taxation. If a fair and correct statement is made of that proposition, what would it contain more than you would state if you went on the stump to discuss it?

Mr. HALFHILL: I would denounce it.

Mr. JONES: But would you not first make a fair clear statement of what the proposition was?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes, and I would show it up just as much as I could and impress my particular view on the people all I could.

Mr. JONES: You would not attempt to do anything unfair?

Mr. HALFHILL: No; I would attempt to convince the people and I would attempt to make them see the light, and unless they have a case of arrested mental development they will see the light.

Mr. MARSHALL: I move the previous question.

The motion was lost.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move that the Convention adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. ANDERSON: I move to amend by making it nine o'clock.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I will make it nine o'clock.

The PRESIDENT: I think it is quite proper for any member to convey information if it is true, and I want to say that the action tonight is going to prevent our getting away tomorrow.

Mr. WOODS: I make a point of order that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT: It is open to a limited amount of debate.

The motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. NYE: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the first paragraph of the resolution and substitute the following:

First, That a pamphlet be prepared by the committee on Submission and Address to the People containing a facsimile of the form of ballot to be used, and a copy of each amendment, and that when thus prepared it shall be printed by the secretary of state and mailed as far as practicable to all the electors of the state, cost of same to be paid by the state.

Form of Ballot Submitting Amendments to the People.

Mr. THOMAS: I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion to table was carried.

Mr. DOTY: If we can get this out of the way it won't take ten minutes after that to finish what we have to do tonight. I therefore move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the Tannehill amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the resolution as amended and the yeas and nays have been demanded. The secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 51, nays 54, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harris, Hamilton,	Read,
Beyer,	Harter, Stark,	Roehm,
Brown, Lucas,	Hoffman,	Shaffer,
Cassidy,	Hoskins,	Shaw,
Crosser,	Hursh,	Smith, Hamilton,

Harbarger,	Norris,	Woods.

So the resolution was lost.

Mr. DOTY: I now call up Resolution No. 133, which was a special order for eight o'clock. We tried to have this correctly printed, but there are several errors. There is one on page 5 and a word has been dropped out in the second line. I have an amendment I desire to offer at this time and I will state that this amendment does two things. First, it adds to this section headed "schedule" what we adopted tonight in the amendment to the Taggart proposal. I have had that carefully drawn in the secretary's office. The second is the resolution that we adopted on the method of submission, and that has a copy of the ballot just as we adopted it tonight, taken from the records of the journal. This copy was made at the time that the original was made.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend Resolution No. 133 by adding at the end of resolution and without a paragraph, the following:

"Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors, inconsistent with, or in conflict with, any provision of the present constitution, shall be held to prevail."

METHOD OF SUBMISSION.

The several proposals duly passed by this Convention shall be submitted to the electors as separate amendments to the constitution at a special election to be held on the third day of September, 1912. The several amendments shall be designated on the ballot by their proper article and section numbers and also by their approved descriptive titles and shall be printed on said ballot and consecutively numbered in the manner and form hereinafter set forth. The adoption of any amendment by its title shall have the effect of adopting the amendment in full as finally passed by the Convention. Said special election shall be held pursuant to all provisions of law applicable thereto including special registration. Ballots shall be marked in accordance with instructions printed thereon. Challengers and witnesses shall be admitted to all polling places under such regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of state. Within ten days after said election the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections of the several counties shall forward by mail in duplicate sealed certified abstracts of the votes cast on the several amendments, one to the secretary of state and one to the auditor of state at Columbus. Within five days thereafter such abstracts shall be opened and canvassed by the said secretary of state and auditor of state in the presence of the governor who shall forthwith, by proclamation, declare the results of said election. Each amendment on which the number of affirmative votes shall exceed the number of negative votes shall become a part of the constitution.

Mr. NYE: Is it intended to have Resolution No. 133 printed in the order in which it is here?

Mr. DOTY: In the order in which it is here, and this is the numerical order of the proposals.

Mr. NYE: Would it not be more intelligent to have all the amendments on article I printed first?

Mr. DOTY: The only object in printing the thing at all is to print the thing we sign and because we are printing that we print a lot of others. We simply printed the proposals in numerical order so that the members could follow them through their books and compare them if they wanted to.

Mr. NYE: Does it not seem to you that this ought to be filed in the secretary of state's office in some systematic way so that all the amendments to article I should appear first?

Mr. DOTY: That can be done without preventing our doing this. It makes no difference what the order is. If it can be done I will have it done that way if it does not delay us.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: I call up the further consideration of Resolution No. 134 and I move to postpone further consideration until 9:30 a. m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT: The question is first on the adoption of this resolution and the secretary will call the roll.

Mr. President.

Mr. Riley voted in the negative.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Doty moved that three thousand five hundred copies of Resolution No. 133 be printed and that twenty-five copies be sent to each delegate.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the motion of Mr. Doty to postpone the consideration of Resolution No. 134 until 9:30 tomorrow.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: It will take about a half an hour tomorrow morning to read the journal and it is not necessary to have everybody here by nine o'clock tomorrow and I move to adjourn until nine o'clock. We will have the journal out of the way by 9:30.

The motion was carried.

EIGHTIETH DAY

MORNING SESSION.

SATURDAY, June 1, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. McClelland, delegate from Knox county.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. DOTY: I have just communicated with the printer, and the resolution for our signatures will be here at eleven o'clock. When I gave him the copy last night at midnight he promised then that it would be here at eleven o'clock, and he has been there himself doing nothing else! That is the reason the printed journal has not been sent up yet. The rearrangement suggested by the delegate from Lorain can be done, and the printer will have it rearranged this morning.

Mr. STOKES: I have a report to make.

The report was read as follows:

The members of the banquet committee, in pursuance of a motion adopted at the Constitutional Convention banquet, beg leave to report that they have selected Frank Taggart, of Wayne county; Simeon D. Fess, of Greene county, E. W. Doty, of Cuyahoga county; E. L. Lampson, of Ashtabula county, and John W. Winn, of Defiance county, as the reunion committee for the ensuing year.

The report was ordered spread on the journal.

Mr. Cassidy offered the following resolution:

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CASSIDY: I submit the following report:

The standing committee of Claims against the Convention, to which was referred Resolution No. 136—Mr. Peters, having had the same under consideration, reports it back without recommendation.

Resolution for Payment of Claims—Submission of Amendments to the People.

The SECRETARY: It is a resolution providing for payment for the group picture, $292.

Mr. PETERS: This is for the getting up of that picture. I am informed that the picture cost about $750 to get up, and it is a question of whether we want to purchase it and leave it in the hall or not.

Mr. PECK: If we want to perpetuate ourselves we should pay for it ourselves and not ask the state to do it.

Mr. DOTY: Of course, we could pay for it ourselves. We are getting such large salaries that we could do that and pay all of our board bills and then we would have enough to get home on. If the state of Ohio in the generations to come want to look at my picture as a member of the Constitutional Convention, they will have to pay for it. If they want me to pay for it, I say right now it won't go. They have got me on those group pictures about three times already, and I don't care to pay for another time.

Mr. COLTON: How is that done in the legislature?

Mr. ANTRIM: I understand that the legislature pays about $300 for the group pictures. We are getting an $8.00 discount.

Mr. LAMPSON: The gentleman does not take into account the superior character of the subjects?

Mr. DOTY: I did.

Mr. WINN: How were those pictures that you know about paid for by the state, Mr. Doty?

Mr. DOTY: Every one of them was paid for by the state. My picture has been paid for three or four times.

Mr. WINN: What has been the practice of the legislature?

Mr. DOTY: For the state to pay.

The question being "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I move that the vote tabling Resolution No. 133 be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT: The member is in error as to the number. It is Resolution No. 141.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: I voted against it thinking I was wrong at the time, and I move to reconsider the vote by which it was defeated.

The PRESIDENT: This is the resolution concerning the work of publication which was defeated last night, and the gentleman from Williams moves that this action be reconsidered.

Mr. FESS: Last night in our hurry to get through with our work we took a vote that I believe we would be glad to reconsider, and I only want to make a statement similar to the one I made last evening. If we adjourn without anything at all being set out by this Convention as evidence of our work here I think it would be closing our work with a mark of disrespect to ourselves as well as with little regard for the voters of the state. I do not believe any other convention ever closed in any such way. The federal convention, the greatest in the history of this country, that was composed of fifty-five members, many of whom were in the second continental congress, about which William Pitt made the most eloquent reference that has been made regarding anything of its kind in the world, closed its work on the 17th of September, 1787, after having been in continuous session from the 25th of May, but it closed its work by sending a letter from the convention, written by the president of that convention, General Washington, and also having a letter written by the secretary, Mr. Jackson, calling upon the states to give it the closest and most careful consideration, in the hope that the work would not be repudiated. You remember that Benjamin Franklin made the statement that "In all probability the work we have done is not satisfactory to the people at large," and he said, "Indeed, it is not satisfactory to me. I should like very much to have had some changes, but it has been the best we could get." And he asked that it be regarded carefully. Benjamin Franklin was the oldest man in the convention, and he was the philosopher of his time, and I do not believe made any blunder. But I believe you will recall one of the most spectacular moments in that convention, when a member in his anxiety to quit arose and made a motion to adjourn. General Washington, the president of the convention, had not spoken upon the occasion of the meeting of the convention up to this time, and when this member in his desire to adjourn made the statement, "We have been here behind closed doors until the people at large are wondering what we have been doing," and he moved that the convention adjourn. It was on that occasion that General Washington spoke, and these were his words: "Gentlemen of the convention, if we do that now, which we cannot endorse, what will be our attitude when we return to our homes and are called upon to give an account of our work? Let us lift the standard so high that all the good can repair to it. This is not the work of man, the hand of God is in this thing." That was the only time that General Washington spoke during that convention, and the motion to adjourn was withdrawn. I mention these things, men, to indicate to you the temper of that convention, the greatest in the history of the world. They were ready to adjourn without giving complete consideration to their work. I do not believe the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio desires to close its work without putting its work before the people that they may study it, and to submit nothing more than the amendments—just print nothing more than the amendments, and you have not even provided for that, you have voted down everything,—but to do nothing more than to print the amendments you might as well burn them up or throw them into the river, for the people will care very little about reading them. I hope you will reconsider this motion, and if you do I want to offer an amendment whereby we can print a naked statement of the work and have it signed by as many members of this Convention as will sign it, with the understanding that if we do not get the signatures of a majority nothing is to be sent out. It seems to me that will be absolutely fair, and I hope you will reconsider this matter.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

Mr. KNIGHT: I know nothing that has been said by anyone in the Convention that would create the impression that this Convention does not want to send out some form of address to the people. The bone of contention was as to the method or manner of doing that. I fully agree with the main points made by the gentleman from Greene, that this Convention owes it to the people of the state of Ohio to give to them in some form some information about this constitution, and I believe that what was done last evening was done because it was felt undoubtedly by a majority of this Convention that the resolution offered did not do or propose to do that which was wise for the Convention to do as to that form. I am very certain that there can be few, if any, in this Convention who feel that we ought just to quit without some form of address to the people. I therefore hope that the motion to reconsider will prevail and that the members of this Convention may be able, as they ought to be, to get together on some form of address and some form of instruction that will satisfy everyone.

Mr. RILEY: Are you aware that the convention of 1851 adjourned without doing anything except ordering a few thousand copies of the constitution to be printed?

Mr. KNIGHT: Yes.

Mr. RILEY: Yes, and the constitutional convention of 1874 directed an address to be prepared that was ineffective and the constitution was defeated.

Mr. KNIGHT: I am aware of that fact, but that does not answer the point here. I think the matter should be reconsidered and the address, in which we should all have a hand, gone into.

Mr. HARTER, of Huron: I have been requested from the neighboring city of Huron by the superintendent of schools to explain this constitution. They are in touch with all of these things, but they don't understand them. Take that Knight proposal. That was misrepresented, and yet when it was properly explained it went in. It seems to me that the statements made should be just plain, simple statements as to the aim to be accomplished by these amendments, without any argument for or against.

Mr. HALFHILL: I have great respect for the views of the learned member from Greene county [Mr. FESS], but it seems to me that the parallel he makes between our work and that of the national constitutional convention is pretty far-fetched. Of course I would be glad to be in that same class. However that may be, at that particular time about all of the constitutions that we knew anything about were the things that had come to us from the English kings in the form of charters, and it is true that one or two or three of the states had in some instances modified those rules. Pennsylvania had a sort of a constitution with a single house. But the question of written constitutions was an entirely new one, and it originated altogether because of the ineffective condition of the old articles of confederation, so that I say the parallel is pretty far-fetched.

We did not have at that time newspapers or telegraphs, and with apologies to the learned gentleman from Hamilton county [Mr. BOWDLE], did not have aeroplanes or aerograms as a means of disseminating intelligence.

Now the situation is we have voted down this report, and have done so properly, because this committee upon Submission, if it had desired to have the indorsement of the Convention, should have had its plan here for approval. It had as much time as the other committees of the Convention, and its work was not to be acted upon until the last day, and it should have been brought here and had the approval of the Convention before it goes out. Now we are asked to inaugurate a bureau and keep this Convention in force through its bureau, and send out something that the Convention is responsible for, and yet that it does not in fact authorize. This report being voted down, it is now in order for somebody to present a resolution authorizing the secretary of state to publish the work of this Convention in pamphlet form, and to attach thereto some reasonable statement, if necessary, explaining that work. The question is, Why has not that statement been prepared, and is there not such a statement in existence? A couple of weeks ago I got as a supplement to a newspaper a very fair and judicial statement of the work of this Convention, which I understood was the voluntary contribution of the secretary to the publicity of the Convention. Every one of the proposals had been gone over in review and a careful explanatory statement was set forth.

The time of the gentleman here expired.

Mr. COLTON: I hope this motion will not prevail. It seems to me that the resolution voted down last night was a very inappropriate one. I do not believe that we can send out attached to the various proposals or amendments which have been passed by this Convention any statement prepared as suggested in the resolution that will be fair. For my own part, I will not have any part in preparing such a statement. I doubt whether any of you, when the question is put to you, would be willing to prepare a statement over your own signature and send it out with the statement that it is fair.

We are so widely divided in opinion with respect to many of the amendments that it is impossible for anyone to prepare a statement which all would regard as fair. We would be charged with having said too much about certain parts and too little about others, and with having failed to emphasize certain points that we ought to emphasize. Again, take Proposal No. 329. What explanation does that need? It is comprised in two lines and no one reading it finds any explanation necessary. The same is true of many amendments. I shall submit the following in place of the resolution:

Submission of Amendments to the People.

Resolved, That the secretary of this Convention be authorized and directed to prepare a pamphlet in which shall be printed the present constitution of the state and the amendments proposed thereto by this Convention, and that the secretary of state is hereby authorized to print the same and send a copy of it so far as practicable to every elector in the state; said work to be done at the earliest possible time.

I have included in this a copy of the present constitution. If you go among the people and try to find copies of the state constitution, you will find that it is exceedingly rare. You will find ten copies of the constitution of the United States among the masses of the people where you will find one copy of the constitution of Ohio. The constitution of the United States is printed in the histories of the United States, and the histories of the United States are in every home, while the histories of Ohio are very rare, and I think the constitution of the state should be printed in connection with these amendments in order that the people may compare each amendment with the section that is amended.

Mr. FESS: You ask what explanation will be needed of Proposal No. 329: That is one of the proposals I had in mind. It is as clear to us as any proposal I know of, and yet no proposal has met such a variety of opinion.

Mr. COLTON: It has been misrepresented in the press, but when the pamphlets containing the amendments are distributed over the state I think such misrepresentation will cease. We can depend upon the advocates of each measure to put their side before the people, and we may depend upon those who oppose the different amendments to put their side before the people, and thus through the newspapers, it seems to me, it should be fairly represented on both sides, but I do not believe that we as members of this Convention can do anything in connection with these individual amendments. I am sorry that the committee on Submission did not prepare an address which we could adopt as a Convention, thus eliminating all individual statements.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I hope that this motion to reconsider will prevail. I do not think there should be any argument made in the address, but there certainly should be a statement of facts as to the changes proposed. There have been proposals presented in this Convention and arguments given in support of them and sometimes half of the members of the Convention did not know the meaning of the proposal until after the explanation of the gentleman offering it. Take the amendment which I was particularly interested in for example—Judge Taggart's proposal as to method of amending the constitution. That was a proposal of forty lines. I venture to say the average citizen of the state could read that proposal two or three times and not understand exactly the effect of it. The vital change in that proposal consists of the change of one word, and many people would be apt to miss it. Just two lines of explanation would make that proposal absolutely clear to the people. It would do to simply say that the change that the Convention made was to provide that the majority of those voting on any question should decide it instead of a majority of those voting at the election. There is surely no harm in making a statement of that kind in our address to the people. Last night I was greatly disappointed to hear gentlemen say that money used to educate the people on our work was money wasted. I think money spent for education of any kind is money saved. One dollar spent in educating the people and telling the people about the work of this Convention and the great task we have tried to do will come back to the state an hundredfold.

Mr. ANDERSON: I hope that the motion to reconsider will prevail. The suggestion of those who seek the reconsideration is to print all of this I have in my hand and considerably more, and send that to each voter in the state of Ohio. Now you must remember that we have obtained considerable education in the months we have been here before this Convention. Just imagine yourself, with the information you had before you came here getting this sent to you as a voter and then trying to dig out what it all means. Stop and think a minute. See if you can do it. You cannot do it. For instance, take the initiative and referendum proposal, Proposal No. 2, which covers five pages. A gentleman sitting in some farm house after a day's work has been done, is trying to work out what that means by reading the five pages; who can, under such circumstances, understand what it means?

Take Mr. Mauck's blue-sky law. How will they understand that? Three hundred words of explanation will let everybody understand it thoroughly. And so on as to every proposal.

Mr. MARSHALL: Suppose you were going to write three hundred words in explanation on the proposal to license the traffic in intoxicating liquors and Judge King would go into another room and do the same. How close do you think those things would come together?

Mr. ANDERSON: If we both did it fairly, which I think we would, there wouldn't be enough difference between the two to notice it.

Mr. DOTY: He couldn't find it out anyhow, could he?

Mr. ANDERSON: If there were differences, you couldn't discover them.

Mr. EVANS: I think we owe it to the people of the state of Ohio to inform them of our work. I am sorry I was put on the committee on Submission and Address to the People. I would rather not have been on it, but I am on it and I signed that report. I am willing to stand by it, but I am not willing to attempt to bunco the people of the state of Ohio. I happened to be talking to two gentlemen Friday morning and they said to me, "Are you not going to let us know why you did these things; are you not going to have some kind of an address?" I replied, "I don't know." One of the gentlemen said, "You owe it to us to do it." That is the tendency now in all initiative and referendum measures. You very well know that there are three or four proposals that I would not vote for, but I approve of most of them. I think they ought to pass, but I think we owe it to the people of the state of Ohio to explain the reasons for them, and I think all the members of this Convention are gentlemen, and I am willing to treat them as gentlemen any time, and I think we can trust eighteen of them and the chairman of these several committees and the authors of these several proposals to state the matter fairly to the people. I think we owe it to the people. We are about to adopt the system of initiative and referendum by which we bind ourselves whenever we submit a measure to explain it, to give a candid, impartial statement of it. Now, why don't we do it? It would be an insult to the people of the state of Ohio to submit this constitution to them without any information or any explanation. This is a day of discussion of public matters, and we ought to give them full explanation.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

Mr. OKEY: I voted against this proposition last night because I didn't approve of the manner proposed, and I will vote now for a reconsideration of it in order that we may have the proposition before the Convention. I think the Convention has the power to designate how this shall be brought before the people. I am in favor of a committee being appointed by this Convention. Let the powers of that committee be limited, and let this Convention instruct that committee as to the extent of the explanation that each proposal shall have. Let us have an analysis of each proposal and not an argument.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: When my friend from Hamilton county [Mr. BOWDLE] said that we have a court room environment and a street environment and a constitutional convention environment, I thought I might get used to the constitutional environment by the time we hold the next convention. I am not used to being on my feet. I have not talked half an hour at a time for a quarter of a century. I guess it is good for the Convention that I have not been accustomed to that. I moved to reconsider this resolution because I was in favor of it in the first place, but I didn't like it because it proposed that I should take care of my own proposal, which passed this Convention and for which I thank the gentlemen, not because you did me a favor, but because I think you did the people of the state a favor in passing it.

I have been surprised at the charges and counter-charges that have been made in this Convention in more than four months. I still believe that a majority of the Convention want to be honest. I believe I can write all of these papers, though I do not wish to. I was even going to ask that someone else be designated to write concerning my proposal, but I believe, without conceit, that I can say I have made that a study for some years and can write that as well as any gentleman on the floor of the Convention. I believe I can explain it so that you would not know which side of the proposition I was on, and still have the information for the voters. I do not like the limitation of three hundred words.

Now, take the word "white" in the constitution. The gentleman from Mahoning has told us that there is not a state in the Union that has it there. If that is correct, what harm does it do simply to say the word "white" is to be stricken out because of the national constitution? That is all of the statement necessary as to that. And so as to a good many other of these.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. LEETE: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I wish to say but a few words relative to personal experience in the last few weeks. Each Friday and Saturday while this Convention has been going on I have been out among the miners and among the coal diggers of the southern part of the state. When I would go out to the mines the men would gather around me and ask questions regarding certain proposals. They didn't understand them. One would say, "What is this about the initiative and referendum? We never heard of the indirect initiative and referendum. What is it?" I would take time and explain it to them and many times I would take nearly an hour explaining things to these men. They seemed very anxious to find out every thing they could about the constitution. I was in a bank one day about four weeks ago and the banker said, "You folks have passed the initiative and referendum. I am against it." I said, "Have you read it?" He said, "No, but I am against it; the name itself is enough to condemn it." I then asked him if he had heard of the indirect initiative and he said that he did not know. I kept on talking to him for ten minutes and explained it to him and he said it was all right. It is just so with a great many other proposals here. The people do not know what they are. I do hope that this Convention will send out some explanation of what each proposal is and what it will do, and I hope you will reconsider this.

Mr. PARTINGTON: Each week when I return to my people in Shelby county I do not see how members of this Convention can give the people of this state of ours so little credit as to think they don't know anything. Down in my section of the state the high school pupils have been debating these questions. The teachers in their organization have taken these questions and the people of my county know more about this constitution than some of the members of the Convention give them credit for. I for one do not fear that this constitution of ours will fail before the people. Half the members of this Convention assume that if we do not send out some few trivial statements in regard to these propositions that the people will not know about them or talk about them and will be ignorant of them. How many such voters do you think you can find in the state of Ohio? What is the percentage of illiteracy?

Now, here is a supplement prepared by the American Press Association of Columbus. These statements have been spread broadcast and I feel honestly that seventy-five per cent of the homes of Shelby county will have this sheet in it. I believe the same ratio, or almost that same ratio, will obtain throughout the rest of the state, and that shows that the people of Ohio are not so ignorant as some of the people think they are.

Mr. PECK: I think we ought to send some sort of a statement to the people. I think the people expect it and the act under which we met provides for an address to the people. Our address should contain in brief terms, an explanation of what we have done and why we have done it. Everyone of you knows that when a proposal was put before this Convention the first thing that was done was to have the author of the proposal take the stand and explain the whys and wherefores of it, and everyone of you knows, when he was through with the explanation, we understood it a great deal better than we did by just referring to the printed proposal. That custom was a good custom, having it explained at the outset. That is what the people of Ohio want. They want to know why this proposal was put forward and why it was necessary. I say the custom of this Convention was to have the proposals explained by the author, and the reason for that was the very reason why the people should have the proposals explained to them. They want to know the whys and the wherefores. Why did you pass this? What was the occasion for it? What were the underlying circumstances surrounding it? Those are the things they want to know, and those should be indicated in the circular which we send to the people.

Mr. PIERCE: I think we are probably as well able to vote intelligently upon this question now as we will be at any time and I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. FESS: I make the point or order that the previous question having been ordered this motion is out of order.

The PRESIDENT: The point is well taken. The question is "Shall the motion be reconsidered?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 80, nays 30, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Harter, Huron,	Pettit,
Beyer,	Harter, Stark,	Pierce,

So the motion to reconsider was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. FESS: I move an amendment that I suggested a moment ago.

The amendment was read as follows:

Add to the end of the resolution:

"Provided further, that the member from Guernsey and the member from Portage be appointed to draft the explanation of the taxation proposal, and provided that no pamphlet be sent out by the secretary of state which does not contain the autograph signatures of at least a majority of the delegates of the Convention and that no other matter be sent out which has not first been mailed to all the delegates and has received the written approval of at least a majority of the delegates."

Mr. FESS: This is offered in the hope that every member of the Convention will believe that it is absolutely fair and that there is no desire whatever to take any advantage of the people or to give any undue advantage to any proposal or any part of the people in the Convention. It is drafted in the hope that it will be looked upon as an absolutely fair and square proposition. The few members that are named it might be thought would suggest some partiality, but that is not meant at all. It is simply to answer the criticism that was offered as to who would write the explanation of the taxation proposal. This is not done for any other purpose than to put the persons making the explanation in harmony with the tax proposition. I hope this will not be resented by the minority.

Mr. DOTY: It will not be resented by the chairman of the committee. I have given all that up, you may be sure.

Mr. FESS: The other point is that no document should be sent out until after it is signed by a majority of this body.

Mr. DOTY: Do I understand your amendment to propose to have the autograph signatures printed in the pamphlet?

Mr. FESS: I presume they will be printed in the pamphlet.

Mr. DOTY: On that I want to call attention to the fact that you are going to print a million and a half.

Mr. FESS: I don't think we want the names printed. I don't understand that. I don't care about paying for a lot of space like that. The matter that is to be sent out is a matter that has been indorsed by a majority of the Convention.

Mr. MILLER, of Ottawa: Are these proposals to be offered with the signature of every delegate?

Mr. FESS: Opportunity will be given to every delegate to sign, and if it does not get a majority it is not to be sent out.

Mr. HALFHILL: Does your proposed action there contemplate that the individual members at their homes or other places shall sign something and send it in here and then that will be sent broadcast as the action of the Convention?

Mr. FESS: That is to be determined afterwards. If we want to come back in two weeks from now all right; otherwise it will have to be signed at their homes and sent out.

Mr. HALFHILL: Why would it not be the proper thing and the judicious thing to adjourn the Convention, until a week from Monday say, and then come back and finish the work?

Mr. FESS: That is a pretty serious matter and one that should be considered. Then if anything should develop that needed attention we could attend to that.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not think it is wise to leave any bureau of the Convention here during the summer.

Mr. FESS: I am getting tired of the fact that nothing can be done without suspicion being centered on somebody. There is nothing of that sort here. We do not want to make it impossible for us to correct an error that may have crept in here when we can easily correct it if we know its existence.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

Mr. HALFHILL: My question is not a question of suspicion, but a question of political sagacity. Do you want to keep the Convention here in order to draw the fire of the people to the Convention, or do you want to submit its work and let its work be discussed?

Mr. FESS: You are a lawyer making everything possible out of the practice of the law. We can adjourn today, but not adjourn sine die. We can come together at any time hereafter; any number less than a quorum can adjourn the Convention from day to day, and I insist that we should not adjourn sine die because something might come up.

Mr. HALFHILL: I grant that. Have you read Resolution No. 134?

Mr. FESS: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: In your judgment was not Resolution No. 134 on this submission question framed so that they coordinate together—

Mr. FESS: Resolution No. 134 is not being discussed and when it comes up I shall probably vote against it.

Mr. HALFHILL: I just asked you if they do not coordinate?

Mr. FESS: That is not now being discussed. Now just one other question. My friend from Shelby intimates that we are insinuating that the people do not understand the thing and he says that he goes home weekly. Let me tell you, if this will not be regarded too personal, since the twenty-first of May I have been in Junction City, Kings Mill, Eaton and dozens of other places throughout Ohio, and the question that was being discussed everywhere was the work of this Convention. We have heard it discussed much, but I find that a good deal of explanation is required to clear up errors.

Mr. WOODS: I want to make a point or order. I object to some members of the Convention being given all the time they want to take and others being held down to five minutes.

Mr. COLTON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the resolution and the pending amendment and insert the following:

Resolved, That the secretary of this Convention be authorized and instructed to prepare a pamphlet in which shall be printed the present constitution of the state and the amendments proposed thereto by this Convention, and that the secretary of state be and is hereby requested to print the same and to send a copy of it, so far as practicable, to every elector in the state, said work to be done at the earliest possible time.

Mr. NYE: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: It has been repeatedly said here by those who oppose this original resolution that we are opposed to the work of this Convention. For myself and in behalf of many others I want to say that that is not an accurate statement. I am for the work—most of the work—of this Convention, as I suppose every other member is, and I want that work to be adopted. The gentleman from Greene [Mr. FESS] has said that the great Convention which prepared the constitution of the United States prepared an address to the people. That is what I want this body to do. Four and a half months ago a committee was appointed consisting of the president, the vice president and fifteen other men as a committee on Submission and Address to the People, and we ought to have that address to send out to the people. The thing that I am objecting to is to forming a board of publicity that this Convention knows nothing about and having that board send out what is provided by the resolution which is prepared here and which we are asked to adopt.

Mr. PECK: Will you allow me a question? How could the committee on Submission prepare an address describing the work of this Convention until the work was done?

Mr. NYE: It is done now, and if it is necessary for the Convention to adjourn one week or two weeks to have it prepared and then come back here and adopt it, I am in favor of doing that, although I would like to be at home as well as any member here. But whatever is done ought to be the act of the Convention.

Mr. FESS: Do you think the resolution I have just introduced presupposes a better distribution to be in existence?

Mr. NYE: I would not object to the part you tack on to the resolution, but it is tacked on to a resolution which has been reconsidered and that is now before the Convention. That is the reason I object to it. I think anything that goes out should be drafted and adopted by the Convention and should go out as the act of the Convention, and it should not be left to a board consisting of somebody and the rest of the Convention not know anything about what goes out.

Mr. DWYER: If we here outline our idea of what this address ought to contain and let it be prepared and come back two weeks from now and adopt it, would not that be the proper thing?

Mr. NYE: That is the very thing that I am suggesting. I would be willing to come here at my own expense. I do not think that we ought to hurry the end of this work of the Convention. I know it is nearly eleven o'clock Saturday, but that is no reason why we should hurry this. We have spent five months here, lacking a single week, but I believe that we had better adjourn over to have what we do approved by the people. That is what I am in favor of. If the address is not ready, let us get it ready. We have a committee—and I am not finding fault with any person on the committee or with any person in this Convention. I believe that everyone is trying to do the best thing for the people and to have this adopted. I am in favor of this work and I am in favor of having it submitted to the people fairly and openly and with publicity. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Portage, that we send out copies of the constitution as it now exists and copies of our amendments, and, if you please, you can add the address adopted by this Convention. That is what I am in favor of. Let us not hurry on the last day of the Convention. Let us not leave something undone that we ought to have done. We have spent nearly five months in good honest work. Let us present it to the people in an intelligent way so that the people may understand what we have done and adopt it.

Submission of Amendments to the People.

Mr. DOTY: Do you think it is better for one of us to trust one of our employes after we are gone than to trust a committee of this Convention?

Mr. NYE: I am not afraid to trust—

Mr. DOTY: Take out the "trust". Do you think it better for us to allow an employe of the Convention to do a certain piece of work that we refuse to allow a committee to superintend?

Mr. NYE: I do not, but we have had a committee on Submission and Address to the People and that committee ought to have given us a report containing the necessary explanation of the constitution that we are sending out.

Mr. DOTY: Do you not see that that is exactly what the original resolution does?

Mr. NYE: It does more than that.

Mr. DOTY: What more?

Mr. NYE: It establishes a board of the president and somebody else to send out literature.

Mr. DOTY: Is that any worse than to allow an employe to do the same thing?

Mr. NYE: I am not talking about what one man will do. I am asking that whatever is sent out shall be adopted by the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: You are advocating one man being a committee. You say that Colton amendment should prevail.

Mr. NYE: The amendment does not provide an address to the people. It simply provides for printing a constitution and the amendments to the constitution and that it be sent out in pamphlet form, which I think ought to be done, and that address made by the committee on Submission can be adopted hereafter by the Convention.

Mr. STILWELL: As one of the delegates to this Convention I want to enter my protest against any effort to adjourn this Convention today. I think very favorably of the suggestion made by the member from Greene [Mr. FESS], that in view of the fact that the committee on Submission and Address to the People do not seem to have prepared a report that is entirely satisfactory to this Convention, when we leave today it shall be to reconvene a week hence or two weeks hence. I do not care just exactly when it is, but I do not think in the last hours of this Convention we should do anything hastily. Personally I am willing to trust any committee of this Convention. There is no blight of distrust in my soul that seems to prevail in many delegates here. But there is some feeling in my mind that even at this moment there are delegates in this Convention who would be willing to adjourn now sine die in order to defeat the work of this Convention. The amendment of the delegate from Portage would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the secretary of the Convention simply to send out the cold work of this Convention without a word of explanation. I therefore move that the amendment offered by the member from Portage be laid on the table.

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 66, nays 38, as follows:

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the resolution and pending amendments and insert the following:

Resolved, 1. That the committee on Submission and Address to the People be instructed to prepare a brief address to the people including as a part thereof the full text of the amendments passed by this Convention, together with a brief explanation of the contents of each.

2. That said committee report such address to this body on June 6, 1912, for its consideration and adoption.

3. That when adopted by this Convention it be embodied in a pamphlet to be printed and distributed so far as possible to each voter of the state.

4. That when this Convention adjourns today it be to meet on June 6, 1912, at 2 p. m.

Mr. KNIGHT: A few words on this resolution. It has been submitted to a good many members of the Convention of all shades of opinion. This is designed to only dispose of the question of the formal address that shall go out officially from this Convention. I find in other constitutional conventions addresses to the people, short or long, embodying the whole constitution and the amendments thereto that have been formally reported to the convention and adopted as an official part of the action of the convention and made a part of the record and journal. Everything that we have in mind can be done on this matter of address in one day after the committee has prepared its report. The Convention could then pass upon it and that would make it the official action of the Convention.

Mr. ANDERSON: And during that intermission

Submission of Amendments to the People—Resolution Extending Thanks of Convention.

there will be an expense of $300 a day, for which we get absolutely nothing.

Mr. KNIGHT: It need not hold the employes over because there is a resolution that takes care of that. That is the next resolution that comes up. Do you not believe in bringing the main body of the Convention together for this one of the most important matters that has been before the Convention?

Mr. BROWN, of Lucas: Does the gentleman recall the fact that one of the great political parties will be holding a convention then?

Mr. KNIGHT: That was put in at the suggestion of others. I am willing to make it one week from the tenth.

Mr. FESS: With the consent of the Convention I would like to have that change made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I think that would strike every college commencement and every high school commencement in Ohio.

Mr. KNIGHT: It strikes my own institution, but I am willing to be here.

Mr. FESS: Do not the commencements usually come on Thursday or Friday?

Mr. KNIGHT: Monday is part of commencement week. I do not think, however, there are any commencement exercises on Monday.

Mr. FESS: I would like to raise one question which might cause us some trouble if this substitute is carried. I indorse the spirit of this substitute, but there is one danger. If it is possible for us to clean up our work today we ought to do it, because this resolution that Dr. Knight introduces necessitates a majority of this Convention coming together or you cannot adjourn. So if you carry this resolution this Convention has to be here in a majority or no business can be done at all at this subsequent meeting. I hope we can clear up our work today, but hold the Convention alive in such way that any number can come together and adjourn officially; otherwise you have to come as a body—it necessitates a quorum. I hope you will notice that.

Mr. HOSKINS: If this resolution prevails the time ought to be fixed to adjourn that session. I am opposed to adjourning until the tenth. If we must adjourn until the tenth, I think we should adjourn to meet at two o'clock in the afternoon so that we can finish our work that day.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I do not understand that Dr. Knight proposes to put any limit on the time of meeting. We might meet at ten o'clock. We ought to give ourselves sufficient time to finish the work. I have gotten through trying to fix any limit on time. All I want to do is to get the work finished properly.

Mr. HOSKINS: Why cannot it follow the Baltimore convention.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: As one of those who last evening mildly advocated the original resolution I wish to say I now heartily indorse the substitute offered by Professor Knight. I think it meets all of the requirements of the situation. I think we have all about made up our minds on the question and it is only fixing the date when we shall come together that is left. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. EVANS: I am in favor of the seventeenth as the day of meeting.

Mr. STILWELL: Why not carry this without the date being fixed and fill that in afterwards?

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: Perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. KNIGHT: Just leave the date blank and we will fix the date afterwards.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HOSKINS: I move that the date be filled by inserting Monday, July 1. A week from next Monday is entirely too soon.

Mr. JONES: Why?

Mr. HOSKINS: Because you are going to run into a lot of work that is going on in other bodies. Next week is objectionable because of the Chicago convention. The next week after that is objectionable because of the Baltimore convention. Personally I do not care for either of those. Another thing, the courts of every county are closing up their sessions and there is not a lawyer here who has not cases to attend to.

Mr. ELSON: I think that time is entirely too long. I cannot be here and a good many others cannot.

Mr. HOSKINS: Well, I move to insert July 1.

Mr. JONES: I move to amend by inserting Monday, June 3.

Mr. ELSON: I move to amend by inserting Monday, June 10.

Various delegates suggested June 17.

Mr. WALKER: Let us take a vote on June 7.

Mr. WINN: I have a very important trial set for the seventeenth, which will take nearly all the week. I can be here on the tenth, but not on the seventeenth. I would suggest June 5.

Mr. STOKES: The democratic convention will be in session then.

Mr. LAMPSON: I think the sixth is the proper day. A lot of members will stay here from the republican convention then and there will be a lot of democrats who will be on their way to the convention that can stop here and attend to this business.

The PRESIDENT: That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. HOSKINS: I will withdraw my amendment to let that come in.

Mr. LAMPSON: Then I move to amend the resolution by inserting Thursday, June 6, two o'clock p. m.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. PECK: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 143.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are due and are hereby tendered to Edward W. Doty, of Cuyahoga county, for his labors and services in preparing the rules under which the Convention has done its work, and his indefatigable industry in forwarding that work.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I have not a word of response. The resolution, under the rules I wrote, ought to have been declared out of order. I seem to have been overruled without having a chance to make the point of order. What I have attempted to do was simply to contribute what experience I have had and what knowledge I thought I had for the benefit of the work of this Convention. I have attempted to be as helpful as I could. I have really tried not to be any more of a nuisance than I could help. Whether I have succeeded or not, of course it is not for me to say. I have enjoyed every minute of the work. I have enjoyed associating with the members of the Convention and I have not anything but love and esteem for every member of the Constitutional Convention of 1912. That this resolution should have been offered and passed certainly is a tribute that I cannot overlook and I do not want to, nor can I sufficiently express my thanks for your action.

Resolutions Extending Thanks of the Convention.

Mr. PECK: I want to say that in the years to come, when we look back and think over this Convention, there will be no figure more prominent on the mental retina of any of us than that of Mr. Doty.

Now I have another resolution which I propose to put and read myself.

Resolution No. 144:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are hereby tendered to President Herbert S. Bigelow for his uniform courtesy and fairness in the discharge of the onerous duties of his office. We part from him with regret, and bid him God speed in the great career which he has before him.

Mr. PECK: All those in favor of this resolution will say aye. The resolution is adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 145:

Resolved, That the thanks of the members of this Convention are hereby given to the Hon. Simeon D. Fess, vice president of the Convention, for his uniform courtesy, his splendid ability while presiding and the fair and impartial manner shown by him to all members and all matters coming before the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: I do not know whether any of you remember it—but I still remember it—that this Convention elected one of two who were candidates for vice president and I offer this resolution sincerely, because I mean what I have offered, and I trust the Convention will agree with me. Mr. Fess has proven a most able and impartial presiding officer, and it is with very great pleasure that I at this time offer this resolution which I trust will be unanimously adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen of the Convention: To have a vote of confidence from brothers with whom you have sat for half a year and from members with whom you have seriously at times differed on matters of policy and also on the question of adoption of various proposals and other things, is the highest compliment that can come to any individual. I admire the man who can stand up and oppose me with vigor and at the same time have nothing personal against me. I admire the fellow who can fight openly and when it is all over realize that there was nothing personal in it, but that it was only a difference of opinion. I remember when I first came into the Convention, I am very frank to say, I did not like Mr. Doty at all. Now I want to say that as I go out of the Convention there is no one for whom I have a deeper regard than my friend and open fighter who is always on the fighting line. It has been a great pleasure not only to meet him in battle array but to meet him and differ with him on many little things, and have him differ with me, and yet give me this splendid vote of confidence. That is the highest tribute that I shall take from this Convention. All is well that ends well. I hope that this Convention will end well and then we will all be all right.

Mr. DAVIO: I wish at this time to address a few remarks to President Bigelow. I think it can be safely said that as a delegate to this Convention I have not burdened its records with any unnecessary speeches on any subject and I blame this largely to the fact that the president has persistently refused to recognize me and thus afford me an opportunity to express myself, as I had prepared to, on all the important proposals before this body. My object in speaking now is that I want this fact to become a matter of record. It is possible the president will try to excuse himself by saying that on account of my size he failed to see me over FitzSimon's and Stilwell's broad shoulders or on account of Kunkel's safeguards, despite the fact that I occasionally stood on a chair and other furniture to attract his attention.

I have seriously thought of asking the Convention to pass a vote of censure on the president for his conduct toward me, but have been advised by the delegates that it is best to forgive and forget. I have decided to do so, and on behalf of your friends in the Fourth Constitutional Convention I now present to your President, Herbert S. Bigelow, this gold watch, and trust it will be accepted by you as a token of the esteem in which you are held by your fellow delegates.

Mr. BIGELOW: If I try to make a speech now I am sure that you would not have any trouble in applying the proper descriptive adjective at this time. As I look back over my life, it is exceedingly difficult for me to take a position anywhere along the past years and look forward to the time when I should be the recipient of such a tribute as this. I know it is a great mistake for men ever to be seekers of preferment or political or social honors. If one can be useful and these things come as a recognition of usefulness he is indeed blessed. If we seek our own elevation we may succeed temporarily, but defeat comes ultimately, for the time comes when personal ambition must fail, but if our aim is to be of service to mankind, then we may also be sure of victory, no matter what our personal fortunes may be. I have this reward today that I do not believe I would have been placed in this position as president of this honored body and that I would have ever received this tribute of your good will and confidence if I had not succeeded in some degree in considering others as well as myself and had not had some motive to control my action other than motives of personal ambition. I find it exceedingly difficult to tell you, my friends, what is in my heart today. It is going to be exceedingly difficult in the years to come to fight the battles that remain in a manner that shall be worthy of your esteem, and yet in those battles in the future there will be a great consideration and support in the knowledge that I have once known and that I have enjoyed your acquaintance, your friendship and the pleasure of your good will and esteem.

Resolutions Extending Thanks of the Convention—Invitation to Put-in-Bay.

Now, I offer a resolution of very profound gratitude for the courtesy and kindness that I have received from your hands and for your patience with my shortcomings, and I trust I may be pardoned for placing you all in a group as the recipients of my boundless good will and of placing in the midst of that group, down in the center of it, so that it may remain a picture in our minds forever, a group of the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio with, in the front of it, those two grand old men, Judge Dwyer and Judge Peck.

The VICE PRESIDENT [who had taken the chair during the president's address]: The member from Hamilton [Mr. PECK] is recognized.

Mr. PECK: You know I cannot talk when people talk that way. My heart gets too full for words to flow. You have all tried it. A bottle with only little in it will flow much more freely than when it is full, and I am absolutely full. That is the way my heart is now, so full of good will and good and kindly feeling that I cannot say anything more.

The delegate from Montgomery [Judge DWYER] was recognized.

Mr. DWYER: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: What you did on the first day of your meeting put me under everlasting gratitude to you. We came here practically strangers on the 9th day of January. We practically adjourn today with each the friend of the other. There is not a man here today for whom I have not the highest regard. I admire you all for your ability and for your untiring industry in the service of the state. My only regret is that we have to part; but the best of friends must sometimes part, and on this occasion I shall carry with me during the few years that are left to me the fondest recollection of these days that we have here together. Always, as the president has said, this grand assembly of the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio will be before me.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will recognize the member from Gallia.

Mr. MAUCK: I do not know of any reason why at this late day the chair should recognize the member from Gallia, for this is the only time that I have not wanted recognition. With others I may pay my respect and esteem to the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. DORV], because none of us know anything about the rules except that member from Cuyahoga, and but for him we should scarcely have been able to get along. But, seriously, I want to say that the members of this Convention owe a great deal to the member from Cuyahoga [Mr. DORV], and I am glad to express that sentiment, in which I am sure you will all join, because of his very careful and painstaking work in keeping us in working order.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will recognize anybody else.

Mr. CROSSER: This is the kind of a speech to which I am not at all adapted. It is not in my line, but after having heard some of these beautiful talks about various members, of course all of them thoroughly deserved, I want to offer a resolution of our confidence and respect to a man who is probably one of the oldest in the Convention, a man with whom I am very little acquainted, but such acquaintance as I have leads me to feel for him the deepest confidence and respect. I have in mind the delegate from Geauga [Mr. SMITH], and I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 146:

Resolved, That our great respect and esteem be and is hereby expressed for one of the oldest members of the Convention, Mr. Smith, of Geauga county, who by his uniform kindness and modest manner has made himself one of the pleasing figures of the Convention.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Geauga: I thank the Convention very much for this tribute of respect. I did not expect to take a very active part in the affairs of this Convention when I came here. I am somewhat deaf and so I have sat by and did my best to help matters along the best way possible. I have been more than blessed with the pleasant acquaintanceship with delegates to this Convention. I had expected that there would be a wild-eyed set of men here ready to do almost anything that came in their way in any matter whatever, but I found quite to the contrary. I found a body of gentlemen who nearly all of them, were as anxious as I to do this work right and to vote right and to do what they regarded as for the best interests of the state of Ohio. I believe they have all done that and I shall regard as the crowning pleasure of my life the acquaintances I have made in the Convention. I would not if I could recall a single acquaintance that I have made here. I thank you very much.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 147:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are tendered to the secretary of this Convention, Mr. C. B. Galbreath, for his uniform courtesy and efficient service.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MILLER, of Ottawa: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 148:

Resolved, That the banquet committee be instructed to arrange for the first annual reunion of the delegates of this Convention at Put-in-Bay, Ohio.

Mr. MILLER, of Ottawa: On this occasion I desire to say that next year will be celebrated at that place the one hundredth anniversary of the battle of Lake Erie. At that time a monument will be dedicated in commemoration of that event, one of the most important in the history of Ohio. The dedication will also be participated in by the adjacent states of Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. At that time the monument will be dedicated and arrangements have been made that will bring together there men of national reputation. By that time we shall have another Ohio president of the United States and we will have Governor Anderson and his military staff there, where the waters which flow around that beautiful archipelago are the purest, and when they have been filtered through the vine for which that region is famous and properly taken, they will make even the most silent delegate loquacious. Those waters flow along the first city in Ohio, the home of Mr. Doty and the headquarters of the Progressive Constitutional League. Not far away is the greatest rifle range in the world, and next year that will be visited by representatives from the whole world, including South America, Australia and all the countries of Europe. Forty miles to the west is the home of the first politician in the land and we can show the delegates a good time.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARTER, of Stark: This Convention owes and should return a vote of thanks to the historian of the Convention, Hon. Nelson W. Evans, and I offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT: Just withhold that for a moment. The motion before the Convention is that of the member from Ottawa.

Mr. STOKES: I move that that invitation be received and referred to the committee on reunion.

The motion was carried.

Mr. WINN: It seems to me that these proceedings in which we are now engaged ought not to be a part of the record.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will rule that they are a part of the record. They are in regular session and are regularly made and are being adopted or rejected.

Now the member from Stark [Mr. HARTER] offers a resolution extending the thanks of the Convention to our historian, Mr. Evans.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 149:

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of the Convention are due to the Hon. Nelson W. Evans, of Scioto county, for the historical service he has rendered this body.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. EVANS: Gentlemen of the Convention: I certainly thank you for this compliment. I want to say that I part with you here with the greatest respect and consideration for every member of the Convention. I regard you all as independent figures. I must confess that I was greatly out of patience in the early sessions of the Convention with my friend Mr. Doty and with President Bigelow, but after their votes on the taxation question I have forgiven them and taken them to my bosom, and while I have been out of patience a good deal with the delegate from Medina and the delegate from Defiance I think it will be all over in a day or two. As I say, I entertain the highest respect for every member of the Convention, and it is very gratifying to me that I have the good will and the confidence of so many of the Convention. I have been disappointed in some things that we have done here, but I do not arrogate to myself all wisdom and I bow to the will of the majority, and I can truthfully say that I go away from this Convention without a single hostile thought against any single member or the body.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to state and have it go down in history that the member from Cuyahoga [HIMSELF] and our honored president have always been and are still progressives, while Mr. Evans has just become a progressive.

Mr. FESS: Gentlemen: I want to offer a resolution and I want to read it myself. Whatever has been done or whatever has been said, good or bad, is permanently recorded here. If ever the time shall come that we pray for the power of forgetfulness, there is one person we shall have either to blame or to thank that we cannot have that prayer answered, for every minute of this Convention's sessions there has been one man who has taken in permanent form and made a permanent record, as accurately as possibly could be, everything that has been said. I deem it an honor to offer a resolution of thanks to the only man in the United States who has acted in the capacity of official reporter on three constitutional conventions.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 150:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are due and are hereby tendered to Mr. Clarence E. Walker, for the service he has rendered in preparing for the future a permanent and accurate record of these proceedings.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON: Since we are saying such gracious things of the older men of the Convention, Judge Dwyer, Judge Smith, Judge Peck and Mr. Doty, I want to call attention to one of the members who has assisted greatly in the work of this Convention. I am reminded of it because I see his picture so often. Wherever you go, in the smoking room or anywhere else, the first picture that you see is the picture of that gentleman. You would hardly recognize it, however. Our president in the early days of the Convention referred to some gentleman being asked to come from behind the bushes. This man I have in mind was formerly behind the bushes, but he has come out from them. Joking aside, no man has helped more and no man has more of the confidence of this Convention for absolute fairness than Mr. Lampson, of Ashtabula county.

I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 151:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Constitutional Convention be extended to Hon. E. L. Lampson for his great assistance in the accomplishment of our work not only on the floor of the Convention, but also in committee.

Mr. DOTY [in the chair]: Before the chair puts that motion I think he may be pardoned for making a short speech on the motion. I think there has been no more welcome resolution to myself than that of the gentleman from Mahoning. I will really tell you a secret, inasmuch as the member from Mahoning has put it so that it is necessary for me to say something about it. They have given me credit for a good deal that Mr. Lampson has done. I do not think there is any member of the Convention, without any exception, that has done more for the orderly work of the Convention and more for its highest efficiency in every department than the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON], and it is with very great pleasure that I put the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will recognize the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON].

Mr. LAMPSON: Fellow Delegates: I certainly thank you for this unexpected tribute which you have given me upon the motion of my friend from Mahoning [Mr. ANDERSON]. In my public life it has always been my motto and my aim to give to the public my best thought and service, and in so doing I have simply done what I thought to be my plain duty. I think it was Drummond who said that love was the greatest thing in the world, and outside of the lofty example of the Christ and the innumerable expressions which we find in the homes in the land, I have never seen any higher expression of human love than I have seen in parliamentary bodies on occasions like this. Why, gentlemen, after that struggle over the rules and the modification of the rules in the lower house of the national congress when upon one side was that great leader Mr. Cannon and upon the other side that splendid man Mr. Clark, and the two contending forces had fought there week in and week out, sometimes saying very bitter things, when the end of congress came Mr. Clark, forgetting all of those differences over the rules and regulations of congress, offered voluntarily a vote of thanks to his opponent, Mr. Cannon, and it was adopted, a simple expression that after all the love of the human heart is the greatest thing in the world. When I came here I thought my friend Mr. FitzSimons over there was particularly extreme in some of his ideas. He came before one of our committees and made what I regarded as a rather extreme speech, but as the days have gone on I have come to know that the heart of Mr. FitzSimons is greater than his strong body. And so, gentlemen, as we go out from this Convention we shall go out from it into the world outside and I hope and trust with only the fondest recollections and the strongest friendship for one another.

Resolutions Extending Thanks of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The chair will recognize Mr. FitzSimons.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: This is so sudden! I want to say, however, that this is an epoch in my life that I shall always look back upon with fond recollection. We came in here on the 9th day of last January with no other bond to hold us together than that we were Buckeyes and had been selected by our grand and glorious old commonwealth to try and do a job to the best of our ability in behalf of the state. We met as strangers and sized each other up on the spur of the moment. We formed some likes and some dislikes, but as we came into touch with one another, as friction rose between us and we came down to measure each other intellectually, there was a new aspect. It was like a new sun rising over the hills of Chillicothe. We got to know one another and the more we became acquainted the greater our respect for each other, and we went on and on cementing friendships and respect for each other until now we are a compact and solid body against everything that stands for wrong. What we are doing here is not for ourselves. It is for the generations that will follow us. And the minute we began to think of that, we saw that we were representatives of our great commonwealth and got together as brothers, and we labored together for five or six months and we have accomplished our work.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 152:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are due and the same are hereby tendered to the clergymen who have responded to the invitation of the president to open the daily sessions of the Convention with prayer.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: I would like to announce, or rather call attention to, the fact that the Anderson resolution of thanks to Mr. Lampson was number 151.

Resolution No. 152, offered by Mr. Tannehill, was adopted.

Mr. HARTER, of Huron: I feel that we owe a vote of thanks to the committee on Phraseology, and, indeed, to all of the committees who have contributed so much to the good work of this Convention.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The member from Huron [Mr. HARTER] moves that we return thanks to all of the committees for their work.

The motion was carried.

Mr. HARRIS, of Hamilton: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 153:

Resolved, That the Convention expresses its esteem for Colonel Blankner, one of the employes of the Convention, and an employe of the convention of '73, with the hope that he may enjoy good health until, and be of service to, the next constitutional convention.

Mr. MAUCK: I desire to offer an amendment to include George Riley, one of the early fathers of the Convention and one of the employes who has served us faithfully and well and also served in the other convention. I ask that he be included.

The amendment was agreed to and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON: There is one gentleman in this Convention who has done a great deal of work which the records do not show. The man to whom I refer is a gentleman of great ability. He is earnest, active, industrious worker. A few of us who have seen his work know what he has done, but the majority do not because he has not taken a very prominent part on the floor. I want to say that no man has done more of good, hard, efficient work for this Convention than my friend Cassidy and I move a vote of thanks to him for that work.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DEFREES: While you are passing bouquets you have missed a little bunch. Their work has not been on the floor, but there is not a member here who doesn't love them for the work that they have done. I speak of the bunch that does its work back in the stenographers' room. You know we all love them.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Did the gentleman make a motion or did he just express a sentiment?

Mr. DEFREES: I move a vote of thanks to them.

The motion was carried.

Mr. FESS: I would like to move that we extend to our candidates for governor, Messrs. Anderson and Halfhill, a vote of thanks for their services and our best wishes for their success.

The motion was carried.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I now move that we recess until 1:15 o'clock p. m.

The motion was carried.

Resolution Extending Thanks of the Convention.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention was called to order by the president.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I want to occupy just a moment expressing my appreciation to the members of the committee on Agriculture for the work they have done and the kindness they have shown me. Also I want to express my appreciation to the chairman of the committee on Public Works and the committee on Banking, the committees on which I served, for the many courtesies that have been extended to me. One of the most pleasant things that I shall have to look back to in the years that come are the pleasant memories of the many kindnesses and courtesies shown to me in this body.

Mr. MARRIOTT: In our hurry we have overlooked a very important part of the Convention. The press of the state, more than any other institution, molds the sentiment of the people. No higher calling can fall to the lot of a young man than to have an opportunity in the education of the people on public questions. No greater influence will be exerted in bringing to the people knowledge of the work of this Convention than that exerted by the public press of the state. I therefore, in recognition of the able services of the correspondents of the state, offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 154:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Convention are extended to James W. Faulkner and his able corps of accredited newspaper correspondents serving in this Convention, for their uniform courtesy, kindness to, and fair treatment of, the members of the Convention and the work sought to be accomplished by this body, and we bespeak for them each and all the greatest measure of success in their noble calling.

The printed form of Resolution No. 133—Mr. Doty, having been sent to the Convention, the president and secretary and nearly all of the members signed the same at the table on which the first constitution of Ohio was signed in Chillicothe, September 29, 1802.

[The portion of the resolution containing the amendments submitted to the people with the names of the members signing the same is found in the APPENDIX.]

On motion of Mr. Doty the Convention then adjourned until two o'clock Thursday, June 6, 1912.

EIGHTY-FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON SESSION.

THURSDAY, June 6, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment and was called to order by the president.

Mr. PECK: I am informed that the committee on Submission and Address is not quite ready to report and that they ask an extra half hour. I move that the Convention recess for one-half hour.

The motion was carried and the Convention recessed accordingly, resuming its session at the time indicated.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 155:

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of Ohio, That an address to the people be and is hereby authorized to read as follows:

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

To the people of the state of Ohio:

The Fourth Constitutional Convention, having been authorized to draft a partial or complete revision of the fundamental law of the state, hereby announces the conclusion and result of its labors.

Forty-one amendments to the constitution have been agreed to. These, with an amendment on schedule, will be submitted to popular vote, September 3, 1912.

The form of the ballot will permit a separate vote on each amendment, and a majority of the votes cast upon any amendment will be sufficient for its adoption.

The members of the Convention appreciate profoundly the honor of the service they were called to render, and await, with hope of approval, the verdict of a sovereign people.

A facsimile of the ballot to be used at the special election and the text of each amendment to be submitted, accompanied by explanatory matter authorized by the Convention, are herewith set forth.

Mr. LAMPSON: Now I suggest that the secretary read the article and section simply and then omit the text and read the explanation.

Mr. THOMAS: And I suggest that we approve or disapprove as we go along.

The PRESIDENT: The members will understand that this report gives the text of each amendment in its order and then follows the address.

Mr. LAMPSON: I suggest that if there is no objection at the conclusion of the reading of each statement that it be considered as adopted.

The PRESIDENT: Is there any objection to that?

Mr. HALFHILL: I want to discuss the preliminary portion of that report.

The PRESIDENT: The matter is open for discussion, and the member from Allen is recognized.

Mr. HALFHILL: I have not seen the report and I do not know whether I can repeat it correctly.

Mr. STILWELL: It occurs to me that in the first line of the resolution the word "Fourth" has been left out.

Mr. DOTY: It was left out purposely. This is a Constitutional Convention, not the Fourth Constitutional Convention.

Mr. STILWELL: Why do you refer to it later on?

Mr. DOTY: We ought not.

Mr. STILWELL: There is a mistake in one place or the other then.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move to strike out of the fourth paragraph of the address the following: "With hope of approval."

There are some parts of our work here which a number of us do not agree to. A majority of the work we hope will meet with approval, but all we have to do is to submit this matter to the people. I do not see any reason why we should put that argument in there, because there are some things that this Convention has done that I will not support, although I will support a majority of the amendments.

Mr. WINN: I hope those words will not be stricken out. It may be true that some of us will not support every change in the constitution or every addition to it, but it required a majority of those who constitute this body to enact any of these proposals, and that majority for that purpose becomes the Convention. We deal in majorities and when a majority of this Convention says it awaits with hope the approval by the people the Convention does it. I ask the yeas and nays on this and if a majority of the members want these words to remain I want them to go on record as saying so.

Mr. PECK: I move the previous question on this matter.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on striking out the words "with hope of approval," and on that the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 32, nays 65, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Halfhill,	Norris,
Brattain,	Harter, Stark,	Nye,
Brown, Lucas,	Johnson, Williams,	Peters,
Brown, Pike,	Kehoe,	Pierce,
Cody,	Kerr,	Read,
Collett,	King,	Riley,
Colton,	Knight,	Stokes,
Crites,	Kramer,	Taggart,
Cunningham,	Malin,	Tallman,
Dunlap,	Miller, Fairfield,	Walker,
Dunn,	Moore,

Those who voted in the negative are:

Baum,	Crosser,	Earnhart,
Beatty, Morrow,	Davio,	Eby,
Beyer,	DeFrees,	Elson,
Brown, Highland,	Donahey,	Fackler,
Cassidy,	Doty,	Farrell,
Cordes,	Dwyer,	FitzSimons,

Address to the People.

Fluke,	Kunkel,	Roehm,
Fox,	Lambert,	Shaffer,
Hahn,	Lampson,	Smith, Geauga,
Halenkamp,	Leete,	Smith, Hamilton,
Harbarger,	Leslie,	Solether,
Harris, Ashtabula,	Longstreth,	Stevens,
Harter, Huron,	Ludey,	Stilwell,
Henderson,	Marshall,	Tannehill,
Hoffman,	McClelland,	Tetlow,
Holtz,	Miller, Crawford,	Thomas,
Hoskins,	Miller, Ottawa,	Watson,
Hursh,	Okey,	Weybrecht,
Johnson, Madison,	Partington,	Winn,
Jones,	Peck,	Wise,
Keller,	Pettit,	Mr. President.
Kilpatrick,	Redington,

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not know but what the word "Fourth" should come out.

Mr. CASSIDY: I think not. In the address to the people it is proper to let it remain.

Mr. LAMPSON: Then I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. COLTON: I move that we insert the word "general" before the word "approval" so as to make it read "with hope of general approval."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STOKES: It seems to me that we should add at the end of the words "Constitutional Convention" the words "of 1912" and then eliminate the "Fourth". I move that as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution has that date.

Mr. STOKES: Then I withdraw the motion.

The following part of the address was then read.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

Under this amendment no change is made in the right or method of trial by jury in criminal cases, but if the law-making body so desires, provision may be made that in civil cases a verdict may be rendered in the event that not less than nine of the jurymen agree thereon.

Mr. DWYER: Should not that word "thereon" be "thereof"?

Mr. PECK: No; the word "thereon" is the best word.

Mr. DWYER: I am willing to let it go as it is then.

The PRESIDENT: The member doesn't insist on the change.

Mr. PIERCE: Take that article I, where it says "except that." Why would it not be well to just simply use the word "but" and strike out the words "except that"?

Mr. LAMPSON: A proposal cannot be amended. It is only the address that we are considering.

The PRESIDENT: That will be the ruling of the chair.

Mr. JONES: It occurs to me that the first word in this explanation is not a very appropriate one. The word is "Under". I think "By" would be better and I move that the change be made.

The motion was carried and the word "By" substituted for the word "Under".

Mr. HARBARGER: I call attention to the phrase "lawmaking body." Does that interfere with the initiative and referendum?

Mr. CASSIDY: No, sir. It could not. It covers both the legislature and the initiative and referendum.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no further objection the secretary will read the next portion of the report.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with murder in the first degree, where proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted; nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime. Until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary during life.

The foregoing amendment, if adopted by the electorate of the state, will substitute life imprisonment for the death penalty. There will be no more legal executions in the state for crime of any kind.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection that will be considered as adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance can not be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

Address to the People.

This amendment proposes:

First. That the number of persons to constitute a grand jury and the number necessary to concur in finding an indictment shall be determined by law. At present a grand jury is composed of fifteen persons, at least twelve of whom are necessary to concur in finding an indictment.

Second. Provision may be made by law for the taking by the accused and also by the state of the deposition of any witness whose attendance cannot be had at the trial. It is also provided in the amendment that if such depositions are taken, the means and the opportunity must always be secured to the accused to be present in person and with counsel at such taking and to examine the witness, whose deposition is so being taken, in the same manner as if present in court.

Third. This amendment further provides that if the accused fails to testify such failure may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel, none of which may be done at present.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection that portion will be considered as adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

Under our present system of procedure persons having debatable claims against the state must either have them allowed by the general assembly or must secure permission by special law to bring suit against the state. To simplify this and to prevent unnecessary legislation this amendment is proposed. If adopted, it will authorize individuals to bring suit, under general laws, against the state the same as against private persons.

Mr. PECK: I don't like that word "debatable", I think that ought to be "disputed."

The amendment was put in writing and read as follows:

Strike out the word "debatable" and insert in lieu thereof "disputed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: Does this convey the idea that legislation is necessary to confer that right, or is the right given by this article itself? I don't think the latter part is clear. The amendment says that the legislature shall provide the method of bringing suit. Will the amendment itself confer the right to bring the suit?

Mr. PECK: The amendment does confer that right.

Mr. STOKES: I offer the following amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Article I, section 16, strike out "under general laws," change period to comma at end of proposal and insert: "in such courts and in such manner as may be provided by law."

Mr. PECK: Those words "under general laws" should come out.

Mr. STOKES: Strike out the words "general laws" and leave it as it is then.

The SECRETARY [reading]: If adopted, it will authorize individuals to bring suit against the state the same as against private persons in such courts and in such manner as may be provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no further objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted. The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

This amendment forbids the placing of any limit on the amount of damages recoverable for death by wrongful act or neglect of another. This same provision appears in the constitution of a number of states, and it has been the constitutional law of New York and Pennsylvania for years.

Mr. ROEHM: I had understood there was to be no argument made. I had prepared a very fine argument for Proposal No. 242, but I bowed to the will of the committee.

Mr. HOSKINS: I desire to have time to write out an amendment to strike out that sentence.

Mr. PECK: Notwithstanding that it is argumentative, I think that it is proper to go in there.

Mr. LAMPSON: It is not necessarily an argument either way. It is simply information.

Mr. PECK: And very proper information.

Mr. KING: Then you should put in the states in which there is a limitation.

The amendment of Mr. Hoskins was read as follows:

Strike out the last sentence beginning with the word "This".

Mr. HOSKINS: The sentence is clearly argumentative, and if we start in on that proposition we shall have no end to it. If we are going to give the states in which there is no limitation then we should give the states in which there is a limitation.

Mr. PECK: I do not think that follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FACKLER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Article I, section 19a, after the word "recoverable" insert "in the courts,".

Mr. WINN: What words are left out by that Hoskins amendment?

The PRESIDENT: It leaves out the whole of the last sentence.

Mr. WINN: In the proposal the word "default" is used. It should be repeated in the explanation.

The amendment offered by Mr. Fackler was agreed to.

Mr. JONES: It occurs to me that the purpose of this proposed amendment should be stated in the explanation. The average voter will not know whether there is a limitation at present or not. It should be stated that this amendment is to remove the present limitation upon the right to recover.

Mr. PECK: I am quite of the opinion that this article explains itself as well as could be.

Address to the People.

Mr. WINN: I agree with the gentleman from Fayette, that that explanation should be rewritten. I move that the explanation to this portion be referred to a select committee of three to be appointed by the president to report as soon as possible.

Mr. CASSIDY: What has been read from the desk has been written by the author of the proposal, Mr. Anderson.

Mr. WINN: But all of the words have been taken out of it.

Mr. CASSIDY: It was his pet proposal and the committee didn't want to change any part of it.

The motion to appoint the committee was carried and the president appointed Mr. Winn, Mr. Hoskins and Mr. King on said committee.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no further objection the matter will be passed informally until the committee is ready to report and the secretary will read the next section.

The next section was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. I. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws.

SEC. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Amendment to the constitution proposed by initiative petition to be submitted directly to the electors."

SEC. 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided, proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly, either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to the referendum. If it shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action shall be taken thereon within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, it shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election, if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which supplementary petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after the proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months, if no action has been taken thereon, or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state. The proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition, which form shall be either as first petitioned for or with any amendment or amendments which may have been incorporated therein by either branch or by both branches, of the general assembly. If a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect as herein provided in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors. All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof, in case of proposed laws: "Law proposed by initiative petition first to be submitted to the general assembly". Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in section 1a and section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the constitution shall be the amendment to the constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

SEC. 1c. The second aforesated power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

SEC. 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a yea and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a yea and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

SEC. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

SEC. 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

SEC. 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality, the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereon shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both,

Address to the People.

for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be it resolved by the people of the state of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved.

SCHEDULE.

The foregoing amendment, if adopted by the electors, shall take effect October 1, 1912.

The purpose of this amendment is to enable the people to propose amendments to the constitution, to propose laws to the general assembly for enactment and also to enable the electors to require any law passed by the general assembly to be submitted to a popular vote.

The amendment provides:

1. That if ten per centum of the electors sign a petition to be filed with the secretary of state proposing an amendment to the constitution, such proposed amendment shall be submitted to the electors at the next election held subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. If the majority of those voting upon the proposed amendment vote in the affirmative, the amendment becomes a part of the constitution.

2. That if at any time not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly three per centum of the electors shall sign a petition proposing a bill and shall file the same with the secretary of state, it shall be transmitted by him to the general assembly. If the general assembly passes the bill as petitioned for, it shall become a law, subject always to the referendum as hereinafter defined. If the general assembly fails to pass the law petitioned for, or passes it in an amended form, a petition containing the signatures of three per centum of the electors in addition to the original three per centum may require the submission to the voters for approval or rejection of the law originally petitioned for, or as modified by any of the amendments proposed by the general assembly. If a majority of those voting on the proposed measure vote in favor of it then it shall become a law and the law passed by the legislature, if any, pursuant to the petition presented to the general assembly shall become void.

3. That at any time within ninety days after a law passed by the general assembly has been filed with the secretary of state, six per centum of the electors may sign and file with the secretary of state a petition demanding the submission of such law to the people at their next election for their approval or rejection. If a majority of those voting upon the measure vote against the same, it shall be void.

4. That laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and institutions and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety shall go into effect immediately if they receive a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to the general assembly.

5. That the initiative and referendum shall not be used to pass laws authorizing the classification of property for taxation or for the levy of any single tax on land or land values. It provides that the initiative and referendum powers are reserved to the people of each municipality to be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

6. That each of one-half of the counties of the state must furnish the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county.

7. That a true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution and an argument for or against the same shall be prepared and mailed as far as possible to all of the electors of the state.

8. That if this amendment is approved by the people it becomes effective as an amendment to the constitution on October 1, 1912.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move that the statement be added that the proposal does not prohibit an initiative petition being filed for an amendment to the constitution so as to establish the single tax.

Mr. DOTY: I make the point of order that the amendment is not in writing.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM [Mr. KILPATRICK]: Put the amendment in writing.

Mr. HALFHILL: I will write it out.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. DOTY: That motion is out of order because the gentleman is just reducing that amendment to writing and it is not an amendment until so written.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I insist that my motion shall prevail. I want to renew it after the amendment is written out.

Mr. DOTY: I make the point of order that the member has not the floor to make the motion. The gentleman from Allen has the floor.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: I thought we were going forward until he reduced it to writing, but if you

Address to the People.

so desire we can wait. The chair will rule, however, that we will wait until the gentleman from Allen has reduced his amendment to writing.

Mr. STOKES: I wish to offer an amendment in line four of section 1, which says "the next election." I want to add "regular or general election."

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: You are out of order at this time.

Mr. CASSIDY: The committee had that matter up and decided to leave the words as they are.

The amendment by Mr. Halfhill was reduced to writing by this time and was read as follows:

Article II, section 1.

Add to the explanation: "The proposal does not inhibit the use of the initiative petition for the purpose of amending the constitution to permit the classification of property for taxation purposes or to establish the single tax or exclusive land tax."

Mr. PECK: I hope that amendment won't prevail. Why don't you say that this hasn't got the ten commandments in it?

Mr. HALFHILL: Parliamentary rules do not permit me to unceremoniously express myself on that.

Now, gentlemen, you ought at least be fair to yourselves, as well as to the electors of the state of Ohio. We introduced an amendment to the proposal whereby we attempted to prevent the use of the initiative petition for the purpose of amending the constitution so that you could either classify property or establish the single or exclusive land tax. Now, in the compromise the gentlemen on the other side of it had all the best of the arrangement. They have the proposal before you in form so it is an absolute failure to do what we attempted to do. It is so much of a failure that if time permitted I would like to read you what the single tax journals say about what we have done here. They make fun of it. They show that we have directed our attention to the single tax or exclusive land tax, that we have laid down in the face of the singletaxers and that we have done nothing except to inhibit the passing of a statute. Were I in favor of the uniform rule of taxation on property the way you gentlemen have voted here, I would be ashamed to go out to the people of Ohio with this sort of a milk-and-water proposition. Strike it out altogether, as the good brother from Summit [Mr. READ] proposes, or do something else. Don't be made the laughingstock of the singletaxers in this Convention and in the country at large. I tried to have the proposal amended. I failed in that, but at least let the people of Ohio know that you have submitted here that which provides only against the passing of statutory classification or statutory single tax. You ought to have put a constitutional inhibition in the proposal itself if you intended to do anything worth while, but inasmuch as you have not put it in there at least make a reasonable explanation of it. That is the situation. I maintain that on a question like taxation the sovereign power of the state ought to be exercised through the legislature, and I think that any constitutional amendment ought to be submitted through the legislature and not by initiative petition. That is where all the trouble has come from in Oregon, and while a good many of us may not realize the distinction, yet it is very apparent that when you submit three or four constitutional amendments relating to taxation and submit them by initiative petition it is very easy to confuse the electors. Therefore, I think we ought to have put in this proposal the prohibition that no amendment to the constitution can be submitted except through the legislature, when such amendment relates to the great power of taxation. But we did not do that. Now at least be consistent enough to take both sides of the question. If you are going to refer to it at all state the whole situation.

Mr. STILWELL: What trouble do you refer to in Oregon?

Mr. HALFHILL: I refer to the forty-odd constitutional amendments to be submitted.

Mr. STILWELL: Do you object to the people doing that out there?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes, I do, because I think these amendments should be submitted by the legislature and not by initiative petition.

Mr. CASSIDY: A point of order. What has all this to do with amending this report?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The point is well taken and the gentleman will confine himself to the matter before the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. PECK: Is the time of the gentleman up?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Yes; and I recognize the gentleman from Cincinnati [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. HALFHILL: On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 67, nays 28, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Beatty, Wood,	Harter, Huron,	Partington,
Beyer,	Henderson,	Peck,

So the motion to table was carried.

Mr. STOKES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows.

After the word "next" in line 4 add "regular or general".

Mr. STOKES: These amendments can only be submitted at a regular or general election under the proposal.

The statement says that they can be submitted at the next election, which may be a special election, and that would be misleading. I put in the words "regular or general" to make the statement comply with the proposal.

Mr. CROSSER: When I drew this statement I had the words suggested by the gentleman from Montgomery, but upon further reflection the committee thought it was unnecessary to use the words "regular or general," because the people generally understand that the next election means the next general or regular election which shall follow, and this is in the proposal itself. Your position would be entirely well taken if it were not for that. I was thoroughly satisfied with the language as it is in this proposal and I do not think it is necessary to encumber the explanation with these words.

Mr. CASSIDY: And if they should go in there they would have to go in every place where the word "election" is used.

Mr. CROSSER: I move to lay this amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. HURSH: I think it should be "each branch of the general assembly".

Mr. DOTY: No, sir; the general assembly is made up of two branches and we mean both branches.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: We will take up No. 5, article I, section 19a, on which a committee was to make a report.

Mr. Hoskins submitted the following report:

The special committee reports the following amendment to the explanation to art. I, section 19a:

Strike out the explanation and insert the following:

Under the present constitution in a civil action for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another, the legislature may limit the amount of the recovery and has exercised that right. If this amendment is adopted, the law-making power can place no limit on the amount of recovery in such cases.

The report of the committee was agreed to and that portion of the resolution was agreed to as amended.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all powers, necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation, or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers.

This amendment confers on each branch of the general assembly a power, not possessed by either under the present constitution, of securing information along all lines of proposed legislative action. In particular it grants authority to investigate alleged misconduct on the part of its members through the compulsory attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, or other evidence bearing on the case.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by the yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the repassage of a bill.

Address to the People.

The amendment provides that a bill may be passed over the governor's veto by a three-fifths vote of all the members elected to each house instead of two-thirds as required at present, except always in the case of measures which by the constitution require a two-thirds vote on their original passage. The provision of the present constitution that a bill vetoed by the governor shall have as many votes in each house as it had on its first passage in order to be passed over the veto and become a law, is entirely omitted in the new amendment. Any item or items appropriating money may be vetoed and the remainder of the bill approved, as at present. Under the proposed amendment, when a bill is vetoed after adjournment of the general assembly it cannot be carried over to the next session as is now done.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 33. Laws may be passed to secure to mechanics, artisans, laborers, sub-contractors and material men, their just dues by direct lien upon the property, upon which they have bestowed labor or for which they have furnished material. No other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

This amendment is necessary to permit laws to be passed securing to laborers, mechanics and sub-contractors their wages for work done and to materialmen the amount justly due them for material furnished. It is the prevailing opinion that under decisions of the supreme court of this state the general assembly has not the power at present to pass a mechanics' lien law which will furnish adequate protection for the persons named above.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 34. Laws may be passed fixing and regulating the hours of labor, establishing a minimum wage, and providing for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of all employes; and no other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

This amendment will permit the passage of humane laws in conformity with modern industrial development to improve the conditions of employment of men, women and children. In the absence of such a provision in our state constitution a number of such laws have heretofore been held void.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

SEC. 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents,* for death, injuries or occupational diseases, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payment shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employes and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employe when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rates of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

This amendment provides that workmen who have been injured or have contracted a disease in the course of their employment, and the dependents of workmen who have been killed in such employment shall be cared for out of a fund maintained by the industries existing in the state and under state control and supervision.

Mr. WINN: I believe that is altogether misleading.

Mr. LAMPSON: I suggest that this be informally passed while the gentleman is examining it.

This was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection this will be passed and we will take up article II, section 36.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and all other minerals.

This amendment confers on the law-making power of the state authority to encourage and promote forestry, to protect streams and lakes and to regulate the use of water power. Provision may also be made by law for the drainage of submerged and swamp lands and the regulation of the methods of mining, weighing and marketing all minerals.

Mr. HOSKINS: There is one important feature of the proposal that is not touched on in the explanation, and that is that lands devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempt from taxation. I feel that a full explanation of that proposed amendment ought to include in it that lands devoted exclusively to forestry purposes may be exempted from taxation because I think that is a very important feature of it. I favor it, but I concede that it might become a serious abuse, and the people ought to be informed about it.

Address to the People.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Have you an amendment prepared to that effect.

Mr. HOSKINS: I have not, but I will prepare one.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: We will wait until you prepare it.

Mr. FITZSIMONS: Why not pass to the next?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The secretary informs me that they cannot keep proper track of things unless they come consecutively.

Mr. HOSKINS: I have the amendment prepared now.

The amendment was read as follows:

Add to the end of the explanation the following:

"If this amendment is approved laws may be passed exempting from taxation in whole or in part lands devoted exclusively to forestry."

Mr. CASSIDY: We have been trying to get this down to the fewest possible words to save expense. That can be reduced considerably.

Mr. PECK: Oh, let it go.

Mr. TETLOW: The adoption of this amendment simply means we are reiterating the provisions that we are submitting to the voters. My idea of the proposition was that we were going to make these explanations of the proposal itself in a few brief words, and that under this explanation and to that end these explanations were drafted, and I am opposed to restating the proposal itself in the explanation. It seems to me that it is foolish to do so. Therefore, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. HOSKINS: That is hardly fair. I would like to say a word. I voted for this proposal, but I do think this explanation should embrace the salient points of the proposal, and it does not do that now. I do not think it is fair to the people of the state not to have the explanation at least state substantially what is in the proposal.

Mr. LEETE: While the facts are that under this proposal certain lands can be exempted from taxation, yet to put that in a fair square way before the people, so that they can fully understand the provisions of it, would take a long explanation. Therefore I feel that it should be left out and for that reason I now move to lay the amendment upon the table.

Mr. HOSKINS: On that I demand the yeas and nays—no, I will take a division.

The amendment was laid on the table.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political sub-division thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

This amendment is made necessary by a decision of the supreme court of Ohio declaring unconstitutional the eight-hour law for public work which was passed by the general assembly in 1904.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the proposal was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

This amendment makes mandatory the passage of laws, for the removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all public officers for any misconduct in office involving moral turpitude or for other cause prescribed by law. It is in addition to impeachment. The foregoing part of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

This amendment will allow the general assembly at any time to enact laws giving to the courts power to name the experts in a criminal case, and to regulate the introduction of expert testimony in criminal cases.

Mr. HOSKINS: I move to strike out the entire explanation because it is simply a reiteration of the language of the proposal. If you want to follow the rule it should be stricken out. The amendment itself is fully as explanatory as the explanation.

Mr. CASSIDY: Some words should be put in there. It is not well to slight an amendment because you are against it.

Mr. JONES: I think the explanation is entirely proper. To the person reading the proposal the first inquiry suggested is, Cannot the legislature regulate expert witnesses now? Every lawyer will say it can, within certain limits. The object of this proposal was to enable the court to select the person who should act as an expert witness. It is contended and believed by many lawyers in Ohio that that cannot now be done, and the purpose of this was to provide for the legislature, if it desires, to have the court appoint or select the expert witnesses, or make a provision to that effect. It would be a great mistake to strike this explanation out, because the average person would not get any idea at all what the purpose of the amendment is.

Mr. HOSKINS: My reason for moving to strike the explanation out was not any objection to the explanation, but was based entirely upon the action of the Convention a moment ago in eliminating from the explanation of a proposal the most important thing in it. Just as some member said, when the voter goes to the polls he is going to look at your explanation more thoroughly than at the proposal itself. I believe that is true, and if you are going to rely upon that, and if you are going to ask the people of the state of Ohio to vote in ignorance upon the most important proposition, all right. All I want to know is the rule. In four words you can put down all that is necessary to put down on this proposal.

Address to the People.

"This amendment is self-explanatory." Then the person will go back and look at the proposal itself. If you are going to rely upon this explanation, then you are asking the people to vote to exempt forest lands from taxation without telling them that you are doing it. That is unfair. If you are trying to explain put in an explanation that does explain.

Mr. STALTER: It appears to me that the explanation is as broad as the proposal itself, because the proposal says the legislature may pass laws and it appears from the explanation that the people could do it by petition. I think the proposal is better than the explanation.

The motion to strike out the explanation was lost.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interests in; lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

The purpose of this amendment is to remove the constitutional objections found by the supreme court to exist against the adoption in Ohio of what is known as the "Torrens Land Title System" which has been in use in many jurisdictions for from fifteen to fifty years. Its principal features are:

1. Registering of the title in the name of the owner, upon his application and the decree of a court, and issuing to him a certificate of title good as against all the world.
2. The creation of a guarantee fund by fees to be paid by the applicants to register, out of which fund are made good the losses, if any, of persons who may be wrongfully cut out of interests in the registered land.
3. The registering in the registrar's office of all things which affect the title as they occur from time to time after registration, and the noting of these, upon request, on the duplicate certificate held by the owner.
4. The issuing of new certificates of title by the registrar upon each sale and transfer of land.
5. Registration is voluntary upon the part of owners of land. When a title is once registered no further abstracts or examinations of the title are necessary.

Mr. WATSON: I offer an amendment.
The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the first paragraph of the explanation the following: "which has been in use in many jurisdictions for the past fifteen to fifty years."

Mr. WATSON: That is in line with what we have been striking out, anything argumentative. I think this should be stricken out.

Mr. JONES: I do not think it is in any way argumentative. It is merely a statement of fact, in reference to the system. When this reaches the eye of the average voter he will not understand what the Torrens system is. He will not understand whether it is entirely new or whether it has been tried in other places, and it is fair to the voter to let him know that it has been tried in other places for fifteen to fifty years. I therefore move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. DOTY: I apprehend that this is what is going to happen on this particular question: To any of you who may find it necessary or proper to address public meetings on the work of this Convention, when you come to this proposal, the very question will be asked you, "Has the Torrens system or this system been used anywhere else?" Why is it improper for the Convention to answer that question and proper for a member to answer the very natural question that will arise in the minds of the voter? I cannot see why we cannot state what is the fact, if it is a fact, and I understand it is.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I want to develop some information on this matter. This so-called Torrens land system was enacted into law by the legislature and held to be unconstitutional. In its history it is supposed to have originated in Australia where the Australian ballot came from. It was introduced in this country by way of the British Possessions of the Northwest. I cannot say anything about its introduction into the United States, but as long as we are in the line of informing members who are to speak in furtherance of the matter, I think we ought to get all the information that we can.

Mr. PECK: What is before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Guernsey.

Mr. PECK: I thought we had voted on that.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: No; a motion to table it was voted on and the motion was lost. The gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty] has one minute more time.

Mr. WATSON: I don't like that word "jurisdiction"; is that a proper word?

Mr. DOTY: "Jurisdiction" is a blanket word. It means the state or county or municipality or most anything. It is any part of the government that does something. I have no objection to changing it if you can suggest a better word.

Mr. CASSIDY: Just a word or two with regard to this explanation. I do not know of any proposal outside of the municipal home rule, or perhaps the liquor proposal, that gave the committee more trouble and more anxiety than the explanation of this particular proposal. Mr. Jones, the author of the proposal, furnished a very clear historical account of the former law, its being held unconstitutional, the volume and page, and some other data. We were afraid that under the terms of the resolution we could not incorporate all that Mr. Jones furnished us in his explanation so we reduced it as much as we could. We did endeavor to make such an explanation as would enable the average voter to understand something about what the Torrens land system means or what it would mean if adopted in Ohio. We did not strike out that part—"from fifteen to fifty years"—because we knew the question would immediately occur to any voter voting on the amendment, "Has this thing ever been tried?"

Address to the People.

and we allowed that to go in to make an answer to that very obvious question.

Mr. NORRIS: Does the fact that it was used in Australia explain the nature of it?

Mr. CASSIDY: We don't know where it was used. We say it has been used.

Mr. NORRIS: Does the fact that it has been used explain the proposal?

Mr. CASSIDY: No, sir.

Mr. NORRIS: Then is it not argumentative to say it has been used some place else for from fifteen to fifty years and therefore it is a good thing to use here because it has been used some place else?

Mr. CASSIDY: Not necessarily.

Mr. NORRIS: Is not that an argument? That is not an explanation of the proposal, and what else can it be but an argument?

Mr. CASSIDY: It was just a bald statement of fact, that it has been tried.

Mr. PETTIT: I demand the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the amendment of the member from Guernsey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNIGHT: It seems to me that the explanation should contain a statement, in view of what is already there, that the adoption of the amendment does not require the abolition of the present system of recording land titles. I therefore offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the explanation add: "The adoption of this amendment will not abolish nor require the abolition of the present system of recording land titles and transfers."

Mr. NYE: It seems to me that explanation expresses a good deal of opinion. It is my understanding that we could just give a short statement of facts. It seems to me that if that explanation goes in there should be a statement that to register titles there will have to be a proceeding in court to quiet the title and a decree quieting the title.

Mr. JONES: Did you observe that the very thing you mention is incorporated in the first paragraph of the statement, "registering of the title in the name of the owner upon his application and the decree of a court?"

Mr. NYE: It seems to me it is indistinct and imperfect and very misleading to the public. It ought to be amended to show that every party who is entitled to register his land has to have a proceeding in court and a trial in court for the purpose of getting his title registered.

Mr. KRAMER: And would it not be altogether fair to put in that statement that it would cost every owner probably from $25 to $150 to get it registered?

Mr. NYE: That is true, but whether it can go in I do not undertake to say. It ought to show that everybody who gets his title registered must go into court and have a proceeding in court.

Mr. HOSKINS: I call attention to section 40 of article II and the explanation. The explanation goes on to say that it is to be the Torrens land system and that it is not mandatory but voluntary, and a lot of other arguments for the proposition, whereas the proposal itself does not contain anything of the sort and there might be forty other systems devised by the legislature.

Mr. DWYER: I want to ask the gentleman from Fayette one question: In the transfer of real estate under your system does the certificate show the consideration—the purchase price?

Mr. JONES: It may or may not.

Mr. DWYER: The taxing officer should know that.

Mr. JONES: That is a matter of detail that the legislature will provide for.

The foregoing portion of the resolution as amended was adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without the state of Ohio, and such goods made within the state of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state or any political sub-division thereof or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made". Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political sub-division thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political sub-division thereof.

This amendment will eliminate the element of private profit from the labor of inmates of the prisons and reformatories of Ohio. It will permit the employment of prisoners, in the production of things needed by any state, county or municipal institution. It will also compel the conspicuous marking as "Prison Made", of all goods offered for sale in this state which have been made in prisons outside of Ohio.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Without objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE III.

SEC. 8. The governor on extraordinary occasions may convene the general assembly by proclamation and shall state in the proclamation the purpose for which such special session is called, and no other business shall be transacted at such special session except that named in the proclamation, or in a subsequent public proclamation or message to the general assembly issued by the governor during said special session, but the general assembly may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

Address to the People.

The object of this amendment is to restrict the general assembly in special session to the consideration of such business only as may be stated in the proclamation under which it was convened, or as may be submitted to it by any further proclamation which the governor may issue during such session.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Without objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 1. "The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

SEC. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, in cases of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmation of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmation of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court.

SEC. 6. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold sessions, shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The courts of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit court shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and, to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction, and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its records to that court. No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgement upon which they have agreed is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decisions in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court.

Address to the People.

Under the existing judicial system which this amendment proposes to change, an action first tried in the court of common pleas, is carried thence to the circuit court for review, and thence to the supreme court for the same purpose, and either of the two courts may reverse the judgment and send it all back to the beginning in the court of common pleas. The proposal is to shorten that process by converting the circuit court into a court of appeals of three judges, and providing that its judgment in ordinary cases shall be final. This reduces proceedings to "one trial and one review," and eliminates the expensive proceeding in the supreme court with its long delay due to the overcrowded condition of the docket of that court, and will leave that high tribunal with work enough to occupy its time fairly, and permit it to dispose of its cases with greater promptness. A chief justice is added to the supreme court with power to direct the movements of the judges of the inferior courts so as to place them where they are most needed. No other new judge of any sort is created by this amendment and no one is legislated out of office. Cases involving constitutional questions may be carried directly from the court of appeals to the supreme court, but the latter can not reverse the former and hold a statute unconstitutional if more than one of its judges object, but a judgment of the court below holding a statute unconstitutional, may be affirmed by a majority of the supreme court. The latter may also cause any case of public or great general interest to be certified up to it from the court of appeals, for final decision. This is a practice akin to that which prevails in the supreme court of the United States and in fact the system proposed is modeled upon the federal system which has been operating with much success for the past twenty years.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. Any judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas, and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

SEC. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per centum of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county officers, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

SEC. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

SEC. 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided.

SCHEDULE.

"If the foregoing amendment shall be adopted by the electors, the judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914; each county shall continue as a part of its existing common pleas district and sub-division thereof, until one resident judge of the court of common pleas is elected and qualified therein.

The changes in sections 3, 7, 12 and 15 of article IV, are intended to abolish the nine common pleas districts designated in the constitution and all existing sub-divisions thereof; to make an election district of each county which shall have at least one common pleas judge who shall be elected and reside therein during his term. The common pleas judges are to be state officials and where their services are needed outside of their own county, they may be assigned for duty by the chief justice of the supreme court. If a judge is disabled by illness or disqualified to try a case by reason of interest or prejudice or otherwise, some other judge may be assigned to his place. The proposed change will add only twenty-two common pleas judges to the present number in the state; but as counties of less than sixty thousand population are authorized to combine the probate court with the court of common pleas, it is thought the increase will not be quite that many. The constitution forbids the general assembly to subdivide a common pleas judicial district into less than three divisions, and the unequal growth of counties in population and business makes these restrictions work great hindrances and delays in the trial of causes in many counties of the state. Other proposed changes in sections 1, 2 and 6 of article IV, will add materially to the volume of work to be done by the common pleas judges, and there will be greater need than at present for at least one resident judge in each county, and such additional number for the larger counties as may be authorized by the general assembly. No change is made in the probate court except in counties having a population of less than 60,000 in which the voters so desire.

Address to the People.

Mr. KING: I move to strike out the word "nine" in the first line. While that is the number of common pleas districts now by the constitution, the constitution has given the legislature the right to provide others, and this provision should be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE: I think a word should be put in here to show that it is the old constitution and not the one that is being adopted here.

Mr. DOTY: Is not the constitution now the present constitution and is it not going to be enforced all of the time up to six o'clock on election night?

Mr. NYE: I suppose so.

Mr. DOTY: Then is it not the present constitution? The constitution of 1802 was the old constitution.

Mr. NYE: Somebody might be misled by referring to this part of the constitution that we are now adopting.

Mr. DOTY: I don't see how they could.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no other objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be for four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law: provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

SCHEDULE.

If the amendment to article IV, section 1, 2 and 6, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then section 9 of article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

This amendment prohibits the election of justices of the peace in municipalities where municipal courts, other than mayor's courts, have been or may be established. It applies only to certain large cities.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. MOORE: I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the explanation of section 41 of article II was accepted. I would like to have in that explanation that convict labor can be used in the building of public roads. I think that is important and I have an amendment to that effect.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

Mr. MOORE: I now offer an amendment to section 41 of article II.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert after the word "institution" the words "or in the building of public roads."

Mr. DOTY: I would like to ask a question. I am in favor of the amendment, but do you think this amendment is necessary?

Mr. MOORE: It explains the matter thoroughly and shows that prison labor can be put on the public roads.

Mr. DOTY: Therefore it is a good argument in favor of it?

Mr. MOORE: If you want to take it that way.

Mr. DOTY: I am not trying to criticise the member, but I want to bring out the fact. We voted down a statement of fact on another proposal. I am in favor of this, but it seems that we are reversing ourselves.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it not a fact that the statement of the member is an argument against the proposition?

Mr. DOTY: It would not be to me.

Mr. HOSKINS: Would it not be to a great many of the people?

Mr. DOTY: I don't know.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is it not a statement of fact that can be used, and will not a lot of people vote against it on that account?

Mr. DOTY: It might be in your county. Are you in favor of the democratic platform adopted yesterday?

Mr. HOSKINS: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: Did you notice it was in favor of the short ballot?

Mr. HOSKINS: Yes, and that short ballot referred to the tail-end of the ballot—not to Cleveland or Cincinnati.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: Does the member from Muskingum [Mr. MOORE] yield to this discussion?

Mr. MOORE: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: I rise to a question of personal privilege. It was specifically limited to the tail of the ticket and didn't refer to the offices in Cleveland or Cincinnati.

Mr. LAMPSON: May I inquire what all this has to do with the unit rule?

Mr. HOSKINS: Just as much as the fight between Taft and Teddy.

Mr. NORRIS: Might not that platform be construed as wanting to make short work instead of short ballot?

Mr. MOORE: The interest in the country over the employment of prison labor is not so intense as in the city. Country people don't care so much about it and I want to attract their attention to this use of prison labor. I think the putting of this amendment in there will be a good thing.

Address to the People.

The amendment was agreed to and the explanation as amended was adopted.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no further objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the report was read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 21. Laws may be passed, prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the state, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to punish for contempt. No order of injunction shall issue in any controversy involving the employment of labor, except to preserve physical property from injury or destruction; and all persons charged in contempt proceedings with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall, upon demand, be granted a trial by jury as in criminal cases.

This amendment provides that laws may be passed prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business of the courts, and further provides that no injunction shall be issued in labor disputes except to protect physical property, and that persons charged with contempt shall be entitled to a trial by jury.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he or she resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

This amendment takes out of article V, section 1, of the present constitution two words, which are, "white male," the purpose being to give the women of the state the right to vote on the same conditions under which the suffrage is exercised by men.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

SCHEDULE.

If the amendment to article V, section 1, to the constitution—woman suffrage, be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

This amendment takes out of article V, section 1, the one word "white". Its adoption is desirable, in case the woman's suffrage amendment should be defeated, to make the state constitution conform to that of the United States.

The object in adding the schedule is to make the foregoing amendment unnecessary in case the woman's suffrage should be ratified by the electors.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 2. All elections shall be either by ballot or by mechanical device, or by both, preserving the secrecy of the vote. Laws may be enacted to regulate the preparation of the ballot and to determine the application of such mechanical device.

This amendment permits laws to be passed authorizing the use of ballots or voting machines at elections. Under a recent decision of the supreme court of this state voting machines can not be used for the reason that the constitution now requires all elections to be by ballot.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. COLTON: I move that the vote whereby the explanation of section 1, article V, was adopted be reconsidered.

The motion was carried.

Mr. COLTON: I now move to amend the explanation to the proposal by striking out the word "white". I have no objection to the word, but it is an argument. Strike out the last sentence of the first paragraph.

Mr. DOTY: A good argument.

Mr. PECK: There is another reason for striking out that word. It does not confer any rights on any body.

The amendment was agreed to and the portion of the resolution was again adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal officers shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers or municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

Address to the People.

Under this amendment all nominations for offices of the state or any subdivision thereof having a population of over two thousand, must be made by primary election. But nominations for offices in districts with a population less than the number named are not so made unless the qualified electors thereof so desire. It is further provided that all delegates to national conventions of the different political parties are to be chosen by primary and provision is made for a preferential vote for United States senator and also to require that candidates for the office of delegate to national conventions shall state their preferences as between different candidates for the presidency.

Mr. TANNEHILL: According to the plan we are pursuing I would like to add as exhibits A and B the records of the two recent state conventions, in one of which they jammed down the obnoxious unit rule and in the other of which they perpetrated highway robbery.

Mr. DOTY: Is there anything in this proposal to show that we are not going to have the unit rule or to jam something else down somebody's throat?

Mr. TANNEHILL: How can you jam anything down anybody's throat in a state convention if there is no state convention?

Mr. KING: I rise to a point of order. The gentlemen are not discussing anything before the Convention.

Mr. STOKES: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the first sentence strike out the period, insert a comma and add "or by petition."

The amendment was agreed to and the foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds: provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

This amendment, if adopted, will give the law making body of the state complete control over the organization and administration of the state's public school system, and is designed to make clear that local communities cannot destroy the unity of the state system.

The second part of the amendment applies to city school districts only, and allows the electors of each city district to determine, as shall be provided by law, the size and organization of its board of education. The powers of such city boards of education are not enlarged by this amendment.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor, for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

If the foregoing amendment be adopted by the electors it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

This amendment provides for a more effective supervision of the public school system of the state, by creating the office of superintendent of public instruction as one of the state executive departments. At present there is no provision in the constitution on the subject, the state commissionership of public schools being a statutory office subject to abolition at any time by the general assembly. The new office provided in this amendment will be appointive by the governor and the term will be four years. The amendment, if adopted will take effect July 1st, 1913, at which time the first superintendent of public instruction will take the place of the commissioner of common schools, whose term expires on that date, and the latter office will then cease to exist.

Mr. KNIGHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out "July 1st, 1913." and insert "on the second Monday of July, 1913."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever: provided, however, that laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds to an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed fifty million dollars for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of inter-county wagon roads throughout the state. Not to exceed ten million dollars of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, re-

Address to the People.

pairing and maintaining the same shall be paid by the state. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by section 6, of article XII.

Section 1, article VIII, of the constitution limits state indebtedness to seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

This amendment raises the limit of indebtedness for the specific purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of inter-county wagon roads, to fifty million dollars, and, if adopted, will authorize legislation providing for an issue of state bonds, not to exceed, in the aggregate of all issues, fifty million dollars. Not more than ten million dollars in bonds can be issued in any one year. The cost of constructing and maintaining this system of inter-county wagon roads shall be paid by the state and provision shall be made for the redemption of said bonds. The object is to authorize and empower the state to construct and maintain an inter-county system of permanent wagon roads, the cost of which shall be levied upon the entire tax duplicate.

Based upon statistics given by the Ohio tax commission and computing interest and sinking fund charges on fifty million dollars at three and one-half per cent., on thirty-five year bonds, issued in amounts of five million dollars each year, the proportion of the tax, on account of such bonds, borne by the different classes of property within the state will be as follows:

	Duplicate.	Proportion.
		per cent.
Real estate in cities and villages.....	$2,544,547,115	41.0
Farm lands	1,676,590,965	27.1
Public utilities	912,862,833	14.7
Banks	174,693,439	2.8
Personal property	891,437,728	14.4
State tax duplicate.....	$6,202,132,080	100.0
Average per capita cost per year, 53 cents.
Average annual tax on each $1,000:
For first 10 years, 26½ cents.
For next 10 years, 43 cents.
For the last 10 years, 20 cents.

Mr. DOTY: I move that where it says $50,000,000 it be printed in great big black type.

Mr. LAMPSON: No objection at all. All I want is for the people to be fully informed.

Mr. DOTY: What is that mass of figures at the end?

Mr. LAMPSON: They are interesting and you can use them on the one side or the other. They are matters about which the voters will ask. They are material whether regarded as an argument or not; they are for or against; they have bearing on the subject. I understand discussion as to that matter is going on over the state now.

Mr. HOSKINS: A few minutes ago the member from Logan [Mr. CASSIDY] said they were trying to save money and he raised an objection to about four words that someone wanted to put in to tell the truth about a proposal so that the people might know the truth. Now we have a whole column of figures that the state is going to have to pay for and it seems to me they ought to be omitted.

Mr. LAMPSON: Doesn't the gentleman think after all that a matter involving $50,000,000 might well deserve a column of figures?

Mr. HOSKINS: Comparatively speaking this is not as important a matter as exempting a whole lot of property from taxation and not telling the people that you are going to do it.

Mr. LAMPSON: If the gentleman will examine the table he will find that he can use it on one side just as well as on the other.

Mr. DOTY: That may be a good thing and it may be that it ought to stand, but is there any place where we are paying taxes per capita?

Mr. LAMPSON: You can strike that out if you want to.

Mr. PIERCE: I move to strike out all after the first paragraph beginning with the words "Based upon".

Mr. LAMPSON: I don't think that amendment ought to prevail. This gives the voter a lot of information in a compact form upon a proposition involving $50,000,000.

Mr. PIERCE: Perhaps it does give a great deal of information. I could have given a great deal of information on my proposal too, but I was limited to three hundred words and I was told that there could be no argument for or against.

Mr. LAMPSON: This is limited to three hundred words.

Mr. PIERCE: The gentleman does not confine himself to the rule though. He makes an argument, which he says can be construed for or against. I think this should be stricken out.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I hope this amendment will be voted down. These figures are important. This is a popular movement. It is in the interest of all the people and full explanation ought to be given. I don't see why anybody can object to this explanation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I hope this amendment will not prevail. There is a good deal of force in the suggestion urged that this is something entirely new in the history of Ohio. The very points that are brought out there will be brought out in the discussion of this question in public meetings and the orators will bring them out. Everybody will want this explanation, and if it is not given here it will have to be given by the orators and speakers all over the state.

Mr. DOTY: I think these figures should stay in as a matter of education on taxation. It looks to me as if it were worth while to publish these figures so that the people may know where they are coming out on this thing. For instance, those who own bank stock and personal property ought to know that they are going to be taxed as much as these figures show the proportion to be for the purpose of increasing the property of somebody else, because the full effect of the value of these roads will be reflected not upon personal property, not upon banks or upon public utilities, but entirely upon land values. The owners of the present land values are going to get all the benefit of this $50,000,000, and therefore the amendment should not prevail, so that we may all know just how much the owners of land values are going to get.

Mr. HALFHILL: Will you yield to a question?

Mr. DOTY: Yes; I won't dodge it as you have been in the habit of doing.

Address to the People.

Mr. HALFHILL: Suppose the merchant and the banker make profits in their business—

Mr. DOTY: All of the profit will go to the land owner.

Mr. HALFHILL: You are a singletaxer?

Mr. DOTY: You bet I am and these figures ought to be published so that there would be more singletaxers, as you will be if you will take three evenings to study the subject.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: If it costs ten cents to move a ton on good roads and costs on a bad road twenty-five cents to move that ton, who suffers? Does the man who produces or the man who buys pay it?

Mr. DOTY: I don't think anybody suffers so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: But who has to pay it?

Mr. DOTY: Of course, the consumer.

Mr. FACKLER: I rise to a point of order. The discussion is not on the matter that is before us.

Mr. DOTY: I think the gentleman was out of order, but I was not.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. DOTY: I was calling attention to the fact that this gives us some very good information. As the member from Ashtabula says, it may be used both for and against good roads. I shall use it in favor of good roads, but I want these figures so that I can have them at hand. Then if somebody gets up and tries to put me in a hole by asking me, "Are you in favor of the landowner getting all of the benefit?" I will know what I am doing. These figures don't show exactly, but they show approximately, who is getting the benefit of this. That is not the reason why we should not have good roads—because under fool laws somebody gets the whole benefit—but I do not want somebody to get up and say that the landowner is not getting all of the benefit. He is going to get it and he always does. He has never failed yet, and I am not talking about the farmers being the only landowners. They always bring that up, that the farmer is the landowner. The farmer owns very little land value. He owns mostly labor value.

Mr. WINN: Do you say that if a man does not own any land that he does not receive any benefit from good roads?

Mr. DOTY: I didn't say that. I said the value of that benefit would be reflected back on the land value.

Mr. WINN: You said the landowner would receive all the benefit.

Mr. DOTY: I meant the value. I meant that the usefulness of good roads is reflected back in the value and that value goes into land value.

Mr. LAMPSON: And that may be land value all over the state.

Mr. DOTY: Land value is going to get the value of all of that.

Mr. LAMPSON: It will get on the tax duplicate.

Mr. DOTY: I have my doubts. I hope so, but it will not increase the value of bank stocks or utilities or personal property, and yet they have to pay on the basis of that ownership.

Mr. LAMPSON: Don't you think the value of bank stocks has been going up reasonably well?

Mr. DOTY: Not on account of good roads, but rather on account of some other fool laws that I can name.

Mr. MARRIOTT: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Butler.

Mr. PIERCE: On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The previous question has been ordered and the motion is out of order. The secretary will call the roll on the motion to strike out.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 25, nays 61, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

Address to the People.

This proposed amendment will permit public property to be insured in mutual insurance associations, a right which has been questioned under the present constitution. Mutual insurance will thus be placed on an equality with all other kinds and the state will also be authorized to regulate insurance rates.

Mr. DOTY: I think that says if this is adopted it will place insurance upon an equality. Now that is not true. I think that is too strong an expression to be used.

Mr. KNIGHT: The "same basis" might be better. By unanimous consent this change was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: I want to criticise the member from Cuyahoga. His statement seems to be unfavorable to mutual insurance companies. I think he must be an agent for an old-line fire insurance company.

Mr. DOTY: I would like to correct the member from Auglaize while we are in the correcting business. I would like to read this which is a part of the democratic platform—

Mr. FACKLER: I rise to a point of order. Democratic platforms are out of order here.

Mr. DOTY: If I have the floor I have a right to read anything I want to for the purpose of correction.

Mr. WINN: Mr. Doty has had the floor all day. Will he not kindly let someone else have a chance?

Mr. PECK: What are you trying to correct?

Mr. DOTY: Correct the member from Auglaize, who made a misstatement.

Mr. PECK: Well what difference does it make whether he is correct or not?

Mr. DOTY: This is important. This is a plank of the democratic platform which the gentleman from Auglaize favors.

Mr. PECK: This ribald discussion of the democratic platform is rasping on one of proper sensibilities.

Mr. HOSKINS: If you read part of the platform will you allow me to read it all?

Mr. DOTY: I will allow you to do anything you want when you get the floor. Here is one thing that the democratic platform stands for: "A short ballot in the selection of administrative officers as a means for insuring greater scrutiny in the selection of public officials and for fixing and centralizing responsibility."

I contend that does not agree with the statement that the gentleman made less than an hour ago, and I stand here and correct him.

Mr. DWYER: As equally pertinent I move an amendment to this resolution as follows:

Resolved by the republican party, That we are so badly off that we do not want to make any nominations until after the Chicago convention.

DELEGATES: Agreed.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I object to having these explanations of the political platforms in our proceedings.

Mr. WINN: "This proposed amendment will permit public property to be insured by mutual insurance associations and companies, a right which has been questioned under the present constitution." That is about as false a statement as could be made. This only purports to authorize insurance of public property by mutual insurance associations. Besides, that statement is misleading in other respects. From the reading of it you would think that is the only thing dealt with. It is a reenactment of the present part of the constitution with some additions. It seems to me as though particularly that part is a misstatement which says, "In this respect mutual insurance will thus be placed on the same basis with all other kinds."

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: That is with reference to insuring public property.

Mr. WINN: It should be so stated.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: It is so stated.

Mr. WINN: Then it wasn't read.

Mr. PECK: I move to strike out all of that last sentence.

Mr. WINN: It should also include the word "companies" as well as "associations." It authorizes those having the matter in charge to insure public property in mutual companies or mutual insurance associations both, but it certainly does not put mutual associations on an equality with other companies.

By unanimous consent "and companies" was inserted after "associations."

Mr. WATSON: I move that that be sent to a committee of three to straighten the tangles out.

Mr. CASSIDY: I hope the amendment will not prevail because the last sentence calls attention to the fact that this amendment gives the state authority to regulate insurance rates.

Mr. PECK: Read the whole of it.

Mr. CASSIDY: "Mutual insurance will thus be placed on the same basis—"

Mr. PECK: But the first part is not true, that mutual insurance companies will be thus placed on the same basis as other companies.

Mr. WINN: If you put in "in this respect", it will be all right.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. CASSIDY: We will put in that amendment.

The SECRETARY: If that is agreed to it will read "In this respect mutual insurance will be placed on the same basis with all other kinds and the state will also be authorized to regulate insurance rates."

This was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: The word "associations" will not do. There is a difference between an association and a company. It would be very unfair. I would suggest that it would be a good idea to adopt the suggestion of the member from Guernsey. This matter will attract a great deal of attention and we do not want anything except something that can be thoroughly understood.

Mr. HALFHILL: In the interest of accuracy that last statement ought to be stricken out because the state is now authorized to regulate insurance rates, and always has been authorized, and the statement in that respect is not true. There has never been anything else existing in our memory.

Address to the People.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It has been a purely statutory provision and not a constitutional one. If it is a constitutional provision it would be well enough to refer to it.

Mr. HALFHILL: The legislature has always had and exercised that right in the state of Ohio. This is nothing but a duplication.

Mr. SHAFFER: You know that the last part of the proposal adds "laws shall be passed providing for the regulation of all rates."

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes.

Mr. PECK: Your criticism goes to the proposal itself.

Mr. HALFHILL: That is a mere statement of the power which the state of Ohio has always been able to exercise.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: The question is on the adoption of this part of the resolution.

The foregoing part of the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: For the purpose of making the motion to refer Resolution No. 134 to the committee on Employes I move that the further consideration of this resolution be postponed until 5:40.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: I now move that Resolution No. 134 be taken from the calendar and referred to the committee on Employes.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: Now I call up Resolution No. 155.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, with the powers and duties now exercised by the board of public works until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

Section 13 of article VIII is hereby repealed.

This amendment abolishes the state board of public works and provides that the powers and duties now exercised by that board, together with such other duties as may be prescribed by law, shall be exercised by a superintendent of public works, to be appointed by the governor for a period of one year.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was agreed to. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

SEC. 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but, all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

SEC. 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritances, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 8. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such incomes as may be designated by law; but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 9. Not less than fifty per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originate.

SEC. 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals.

SEC. 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political sub-divisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for the levying and collecting annually by taxation of an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

Section 1 of this amendment seeks to abolish the poll tax including the tax which one may "work out" on the road and in lieu of which he may pay a sum of money.

Section 2 differs from the corresponding sections of the present constitution in but two particulars. It makes taxable all state, municipal and school bonds hereafter issued, while the present constitution exempts them. It also makes it possible for the general assembly to exempt $500.00 from the personal property of each individual while the present constitution permits only $200.00 to be thus exempted.

Both the present constitution and this amendment require that all property shall be taxed by a uniform rule.

The remaining sections of this amendment authorize the general assembly to pass laws levying income and inheritance taxes, graduated or otherwise, on condition that at least fifty per centum of the revenue thus obtained shall be returned to the city, village or township from which it came. Excise and franchise taxes and a tax on the gas, oil, coal and other minerals produced in the state are also authorized.

Address to the People.

The last section requires any subdivision of the state which issues bonds to make immediate preparation for their payment by levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest as it accrues and to provide a sinking, or reserve fund which, at the time when the bonds become due, shall be sufficient to pay them.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEM: If there is no objection the foregoing portion of the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. DOTY: It is apparent that it will be impossible for us to finish in good order by this evening and I therefore move that we adjourn until tomorrow morning at nine o'clock.

Mr. LAMPSON: I think we had better go ahead and finish this work and meet early in the morning so as to get away on the early trains.

Mr. DOTY: Then I move that we recess until 7:30 o'clock p. m.

The motion was carried.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president.

Mr. ROEHM: I would like to ask permission for the Employes committee to be excused to consider the resolution that has been referred to it. I do not know how long it will take.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection permission will be granted. The members of the Employes committee will retire. The secretary will read the next statement.

Mr. JONES: I was wondering if this Convention after its action on several of these other proposals, to wit, the prison contract proposal, the educational proposal and the good roads proposal, in which statements of fact which might be used as argument one way or the other were incorporated, thus abandoning the rule we had originally started out with against any argument, would be in a position to entertain a motion to reconsider the vote by which they struck out certain language in the statement as to the proposal relating to the registration of land titles. That is a very material matter, and as has been said here, one upon which every voter will want information from some source. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was carried.

Mr. PETTIT: I do not know why my friend Jones is so persistent about this pet measure of his. We might just as well go on and say how many states have the initiative and referendum and in how many of them it is operating successfully. There was no such proposition with reference to that, and I do not know why the gentleman from Fayette is so persistent in wanting the statement that the Torrens system has been used fifty years somewhere else, and I insist that the motion for reconsideration be voted down. The people can read the proposal and the instructions given and form their own opinion without wanting any argument such as the gentleman from Fayette wants to insert.

Mr. LEETE: If we are to reconsider this, I want to serve notice that I want to call attention to the reconsideration of another one of these proposals, and that I have a substitute for the one that has already been put in.

Mr. PIERCE: I think we ought to reconsider this matter. Since the gentleman from Ashtabula has got in his stump speech as to his proposal, everybody else should be given the same privilege.

The motion to reconsider was lost.

The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the control and regulation by law of the sale of stocks, bonds and securities of corporations.

The amendment further recognizes the right of the law making power to regulate the sale of other forms of personal property.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

SEC. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank", "banker" or "banking", or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

This amendment provides, first, that single liability shall apply to the stocks of all Ohio corporations, except those authorized to receive money on deposit, to which class double liability shall apply; and second, that all private persons or associations using a business name including the word "bank", "banker" or "banking", must submit to inspection, examination and regulation.

Address to the People.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

The constitution at present requires that the printing for the executive and other departments of the state shall be let on contract to the lowest responsible bidder. This power is still retained in the foregoing section, but the state is given the added authority to do its own printing.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector: provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public, or as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political sub-division thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.

This amendment will permit the appointment of women as superintendents and members of boards of those institutions of the state, or any of its subdivisions, where the interests and care of women and children are involved. It will also allow the appointment of women as notaries public.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law, and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local sub-division while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word "saloon" as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

At said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

	For License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.
	Against License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License," if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the word "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

If the votes for license shall exceed the votes against license, then the article above mentioned shall become section 9 of article XV, of the constitution, and the present section 9 of said article, also known as section 18 of the schedule shall be repealed.

LICENSE PROPOSAL 151 AND ITS PROVISIONS.

1. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall hereafter be granted and license laws shall be passed operative throughout the state with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law.

Address to the People.

2. No alien or person not of good moral character can secure a license.

3. License cannot be granted to any person pecuniarily interested in the liquor business conducted at any other place.

4. Any licensee more than once convicted, shall have his license revoked and not thereafter granted.

5. There shall not be more than one saloon to each 500 population in a municipality or township.

6. A municipality may further decrease the number of saloons in the municipality.

7. The licensing authority shall be located in the county, or in a county adjoining thereto.

8. Where the traffic is prohibited under local option laws, or other districts now prescribed by law, license shall not be granted while the prohibitory law is operative therein.

9. Nothing contained in the proposal repeals, or modifies existing prohibitory or regulatory laws, or [prevents] their future repeal or enactment.

10. There is added to the above provisions, that nothing contained in the proposal prevents—"The future enactment of any prohibitory or regulatory laws."

Mr. ROEHM: I would like to have the secretary read that section 8 again.

The section referred to was read again.

Mr. KING: There is no sense in that, it doesn't mean anything.

Mr. ROEHM: I wish to offer an amendment to that paragraph 8.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out paragraph 8, and substitute the following therefor:

"Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts or other districts now prescribed by law license shall not be granted therein while such prohibitory law is operative therein."

Mr. ROEHM: That amendment explains itself. It follows to a certain extent the wording of the proposal.

Mr. WINN: Where does that come in the proposal?

Mr. ROEHM: Lines 16, 17 and 18.

Mr. WINN: Does that cover the paragraph at the bottom of 18 and the forepart of 19?

Mr. ROEHM: That is the paragraph.

Mr. WINN: Something has been read out. The explanation which was drafted by Mr. Anderson was not taken, and this one was taken on motion of Mr. Hahn. I have not examined it.

Mr. ROEHM: Just a word of explanation. That merely follows the real reading of the proposal, and is to a certain extent the wording of the proposal.

The amendment offered by Mr. Roehm was agreed to.

Mr. ROEHM: I offer another amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend the explanation to article XV, section 9, as follows:

In paragraph 10 strike out the quotation marks before the word "The" and after the word "laws" at the end of the explanation and after the word "enactment" insert the words "modification or repeal."

Change the word "The" to "the".

Strike out the dash after the word "prevents".

Mr. ROEHM: I would prefer that to be out entirely, but if it is going to be in the way that clause reads, "The future enactment of any prohibitory or regulatory laws," it seems to me, it would be apparently a pull for the votes of those who are opposed to the liquor traffic entirely. It does not prevent the further enactment of any prohibitory or regulatory laws, and at the same time it would look as though it were intended to arouse the antagonism of the liberal element. Now, as one of the liberals, I want to say I am in favor of the proposal as we passed it, but I want the liberal people to know how it was passed—"The future enactment, modification or repeal". The words "modification or repeal" have been added and the quotation marks stricken out. It follows the proposal, as you see on page 19 of the grand resolution.

Mr. WINN: I do not think there is any objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROEHM: Now, I have another small amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend explanation to article XV, section 9 as follows:

Strike out all after the word "further" in paragraph 6 and substitute the following:
"limit the number of saloons therein."

Mr. WINN: That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: There is one word that ought to be changed there, and I offer an amendment. This is a perfectly neutral amendment. It is neither wet nor dry.

The amendment was read as follows:

In the tenth paragraph change the word "proposal" to the word "amendment".

The amendment was agreed to and the foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 10. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision.

This amendment makes mandatory the passage of laws placing, as far as practicable, all appointive officers in the service of the state and the several counties and cities, under civil service regulation and subject to competitive examination.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 11. Laws may be passed regulating and limiting the use of property on or near public ways and grounds for erecting bill-boards thereon and for the public display of posters, pictures and other forms of advertising.

Address to the People.

This amendment authorizes the passage of laws, regulating and limiting the use of property on or near public ways and grounds for display posters and advertising. It enlarges existing power.

Mr. PECK: I move to insert the word "legislative" before the word "power".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

SEC. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter or amend the constitution", shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

At present when the general assembly submits to the electors for their approval or rejection any proposed amendment to the constitution the same has to be published in newspapers for a period of six months prior to a general election and then becomes a part of the constitution if a majority of the electors voting at such general election vote in favor of the same. Under the above amendment, if it is adopted, the time of publication is reduced from six months to five weeks and in lieu of requiring a majority of all the electors who vote at such general election, any submitted amendment will become a part of the constitution if a majority of the electors voting thereon shall vote in its favor. In addition all proposed amendments must be submitted on a separate ballot without party designation thereon and at either a special or general election.

This amendment also makes mandatory what formerly was optional with the general assembly as to the method of selecting members of future constitutional conventions. It requires that they shall be nominated by petition only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever.

This amendment further provides, as does the present constitution, for the submission to the people every twenty years of the question as to whether or not a convention shall be held to revise the constitution. Under the existing provision it requires a majority of the electors voting at such election to decide such questions but under this proposed amendment a majority of the electors who vote on this particular issue will be sufficient for such purpose.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I want to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In the third paragraph, strike out last sentence and add:

"Under the present constitution a majority of the electors voting at the election is required to decide the question but under this proposed amendment only a majority of those voting on the question is required to decide it."

The amendment was agreed to and the explanation as thus amended was adopted.

The next portion of the resolution was read as follows:

ARTICLE XVIII.

Municipal Corporations.

SEC. 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities; all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

Address to the People.

SEC. 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

SEC. 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

SEC. 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

SEC. 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

SEC. 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter". The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter; provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from the date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held therein. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

SEC. 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof, and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission; and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

SEC. 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality nor be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. Any municipality appropriating private property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited, shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

SEC. 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

Address to the People.

SEC. 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

SEC. 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

SCHEDULE.

If the foregoing amendment to the constitution be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, it shall take effect on November 15th, 1912.

Cities and villages under the proposed amendment are given the right to frame their own charters, own and regulate their own public utilities, and to adopt by ordinances such regulations, not in conflict with general laws, as they may deem necessary. To the general assembly is specifically reserved the authority to limit the power of cities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, to control elections, to examine into the financial condition and transactions of all municipalities, and, by general laws, to make such provisions for education, police and sanitary regulations and other similar matters as may be for the general welfare of the state.

FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

Municipalities may determine their form of government by either of three methods:

a.—They may, upon vote of the people, elect fifteen citizens to frame a charter, which must be submitted to the voters for approval.

b.—They may adopt, by a majority vote, a form of government provided by the general assembly. This may be the commission form of government, the federal plan, the so-called Newport plan, or as many other plans as the general assembly may provide.

c.—They may decide to be governed as at present, by a municipal code, framed and adopted by the general assembly. Such a code automatically takes effect in all municipalities which do not frame their own charters or take the trouble to submit to the people one or the other of the forms provided by the general assembly.

CONTROL OF PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Municipalities are given the power to acquire, construct, own, lease and operate any or all of their public utilities. This authority is subject to the limitations fixed by the general assembly on the power of the city to levy taxes and incur indebtedness. A city may raise money for such purpose by issuing mortgage bonds beyond the limit of bonded indebtedness fixed by law, provided that such mortgage bonds are made a lien only on the property and service of the utility itself.

IMPROVEMENTS AND EXCESS CONDEMNATION.

Cities are given the right to appropriate private property for a public use and at the same time to appropriate an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement in order to protect the improvement made. Bonds, however, for such excess must be a lien only on the property acquired for the improvement and the excess.

This will enable a city to take property for a civic center, a park or street opening and a sufficient amount of the adjacent property to protect the improvement. This excess can then be sold under proper restrictions by the city.

Mr. King moved to amend Resolution No. 155 as follows:

After the word "indebtedness" in line four of paragraph immediately following the caption "Control of Public Utilities" insert the following:

"Municipalities may enter into competition without condemning, or they may enter into competition and subsequently acquire by condemnation."

Mr. KING: The object of this is to give a true statement of exactly what may be done by the municipality under section 4 of this act. It is entirely fair to let the voters know exactly what can be done.

Mr. DOTY: Does your amendment strike out anything in the statement?

Mr. KING: Not a word, it just adds to it.

Mr. DOTY: The first phrase in that amendment is certainly obscure: "Municipalities may enter into competition." Competition with whom? It should be in competition with private corporations operating public utilities, or it does not mean anything.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I hope the amendment will not prevail. It goes without saying that municipalities may enter into competition in running a public utility. They have that right now. What is the use of serving notice on the public that that is so? There is no need of telling the people something that they already know. All we want to do in this explanation is to make clear what this proposal intends to do, and, as it appears to me, this explanation does excellently well. Why go out of the way and emphasize a fact that they may go into competition with private utilities? We know they are doing that today. What is the use of stating that? That is not a right given by this proposal.

Mr. HOSKINS: In adopting that explanation we ought to bear in mind the fact that we are enlarging the powers of municipalities to acquire public utilities. They can now acquire, if this is adopted, public utilities without obligating themselves beyond a mortgage securing their indebtedness upon the utility acquired. It is true that at present we have a right to acquire public utilities, but that right is now limited in the very nature of affairs by the taxation limit. You have removed the taxation limit so far as public utilities are concerned, and there is no limit.

Address to the People.

Mr. FACKLER: You say that we could remove the bond limitation so far as acquiring public utilities is concerned altogether?

Mr. HOSKINS: We have removed the limitation so far as acquiring public utilities in this, that you can go on and acquire all of the public utilities you can so far as you can procure them on the utilities alone.

Mr. FACKLER: As long as you can mortgage them for 100 per cent of the cost?

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: Did the gentleman hear the explanation read where it specifically mentions that the city may do the very thing he speaks of. That is mentioned in the explanation.

Mr. HOSKINS: There is one part that I want to hear before it is adopted, and that is what was read just prior to the last sentence.

The secretary read as follows:

A city may raise money for such purpose by issuing mortgage bonds beyond the limit of bonded indebtedness fixed by law, provided that such mortgage bonds are made a lien only on the property and service of the utility itself.

Mr. CASSIDY: There were furnished to the committee two explanations of this particular proposed amendment. There was no other explanation or set of explanations on which the committee spent as much time as on this. The proposal is very important and the committee tried to devote as much time as possible to the consideration and explanation of the same. One of these explanations was furnished by Mr. Harris, of the committee, and another by one of the gentlemen from Cleveland. The explanation furnished by Mr. Harris was gone over very carefully, corrected and changed and finally dropped aside. The explanation of the gentleman from Cleveland was gone over carefully and cut in two and half of it preserved. It is a mistake to add on the amendment offered by Judge King. The exact amendment, although in quite different words, was discussed in the committee. The wording of the amendment was offered in the committee was this: "Municipalities may condemn private utilities without first entering into competition, or they may enter into competition and subsequently condemn." The committee decided it was unnecessary to add this explanation as suggested in this amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: If this is true, why is any statement necessary?

Mr. CASSIDY: The proposal is there and everybody understands it.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: All of the persons who vote are not lawyers, and it seems to me that all of the explanations should explain, whether they do explain or not.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I do not think you would want this explanation now when it does not change the proposal.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: The proposal can be changed.

Mr. THOMAS: I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: Now, I have heard it stated that the first part of the address to the people does not state the facts, and I would like to have that cleared up before we go any further. I would like to know whether the first paragraph, sentence by sentence, states facts:

Cities and villages under the proposed amendment are given the right to frame their own charters, own and regulate their own public utilities, and to adopt by ordinances such regulations, not in conflict with general laws, as they may deem necessary.

Now, that is all in one sentence.

To the generally assembly is specifically reserved the authority to limit the power of cities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, to control elections, to examine into the financial condition and transactions of all municipalities, and, by general laws, to make such provisions for education, police and sanitary regulations and other similar matters as may be for the general welfare of the state.

Mr. COLTON: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend the first paragraph under the caption "form of government" as follows:

Strike out the words "either of three methods" and insert "any one of three ways."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: Now, I come back again, and I would like to know from some member of the committee if this states the truth: "Municipalities are given the power to acquire, construct, own, lease and operate any or all of their public utilities." Is that true?

Mr. PECK: It is true indirectly.

Mr. DOTY: Then we give them the power to do it. Now the next sentence is this: "This authority is subject to the limitations fixed by the general assembly on the power of the city to levy taxes and incur indebtedness." Is that true?

Mr. KNIGHT: No more subject to that than any other power. Section 13 of the amendment itself specifically says that laws may be passed to limit the powers of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts. It limits that as much as any other.

Mr. DOTY: Is that true in connection with what follows: "A city may raise money for such purpose by issuing mortgage bonds beyond the limit of bonded indebtedness fixed by law, provided that such mortgage bonds are made a lien only on the property and service of the utility itself."

Mr. WINN: Is that all in one paragraph?

Mr. DOTY: Yes, sir; three sentences in one paragraph.

Mr. KNIGHT: Provided they remain a lien on such utilities.

Mr. DOTY: "Provided that such mortgage bonds are made a lien only on the property and service of the utility itself."

Mr. THOMAS: Turn to section 12. What does the word "service" mean?

Mr. KNIGHT: That word "service" is self-explanatory.

Address to the People.

Mr. DWYER: Suppose you had this. I do not believe a city should be allowed to do things just as it wishes at any time and on any occasion. I will read this amendment:

Before any municipality shall construct a public utility plant, where there is one operating under a franchise from such municipality, an effort shall be first made by said municipality to acquire said plant by purchase, and on failure shall make an effort to acquire same by arbitration before constructing said competing plant.

Mr. DOTY: But it is too late for that.

Mr. JONES: As you read that, any city might acquire

Mr. DOTY: Municipalities are given the power to acquire, construct, own, lease and operate any or all of their public utilities. That is just what this explanation says of this proposal.

Mr. DWYER: Is that true?

Mr. CASSIDY: Yes.

Mr. JONES: That word "a city" should be changed to "a municipality."

Mr. DOTY: All I wanted was to be sure that what this states is true. By the way, Mr. Jones said the word "city" should be changed to municipality.

Mr. KNIGHT: I have not seen a copy of this statement, but it seems to me as I have read that statement, that it should be secured on the property and service of the utility, is meaningless. What is the lien on the service of the utility? The proposal says "revenues, including franchise."

Mr. DOTY: Is not that the service?

Mr. KNIGHT: I don't know whether it is or not.

Mr. DOTY: That is what it was meant for.

Mr. KNIGHT: I do not think it is very lucid as a statement for the average voter to try to find out what is in the proposal. I think it should be revenues in place of service.

The amendment offered by Mr. Doty was read as follows:

Strike out the word "city" and insert the word "municipality."

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection, this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. KNIGHT: Where they speak of a mortgage being a lien only upon the property and service of such public utility, I move to amend by striking out the word "service" and inserting in lieu thereof "revenues."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNIGHT: We would like to ask to see that entire statement.

Mr. CASSIDY: I suggest instead of taking up the Convention's time, that we let Professor Knight take the paper and read it and let the Convention go on with other business.

This was agreed to.

The foregoing portion of the resolution was adopted. The next part of the resolution was read as follows:

SCHEDULE.

The several amendments passed and submitted by this Convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law. Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this Convention and adopted by the electors, inconsistent with, or in conflict with, any provision of the present constitution, shall be held to prevail.

No issue is or can be raised on the adoption of this amendment. Its object is to fix the interval which must elapse between date of submission of these amendments and the time at which, if adopted, they shall go into effect, in order that different departments of the state government may have an opportunity to adjust themselves to any change that may be made. All electors are respectfully requested to vote "Yes" on this particular matter.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection to that, that part of the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. STILWELL: The address upon article II, section 35, at the top of page 8, relative to workmen's compensation was informally passed for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Defiance an opportunity to offer an amendment, and he agrees to one that I now offer.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out the explanation and insert the following:

This amendment will permit legislation providing that workmen, who have been injured or who have contracted disease in the course of their employment, and the dependents of workmen, who have been killed or who may have died from injuries received or diseases contracted in the course of such employment, shall be compensated out of a fund maintained by the industries in the state, which fund shall be under the control and supervision of the state.

Mr. WINN: That is a little misleading—the way of stating the diseases in order to entitle the workmen to the benefit of the law.

Mr. STILWELL: Diseases contracted during employment?

Mr. WINN: This signifies any disease contracted during employment.

Mr. STILWELL: That is not the intention of the amendment.

Mr. WINN: It has reference to occupational diseases, and it is not plain here. It might mean if a workman while working had contracted any disease.

Mr. STILWELL: The insertion of the word "occupational" will correct the error complained of.

The PRESIDENT: The insertion of the words "an occupational" before the word "disease" will put the matter in proper form. The secretary will write that change in.

Mr. DOTY: Before we go further, I have an amendment to the whole resolution.

Address to the People.

'The PRESIDENT: Let the secretary read the clause as now amended.

The SECRETARY [reading]: "This amendment will permit legislation providing that workmen, who have been injured, or who have contracted an occupational disease in the course of their employment," etc.

Mr. JONES: I think that explanation omits the most material thing in this proposed amendment. The main thing to be accomplished by it is to clear the way for the enactment of laws providing for compulsory compensation, compulsory contribution by employers to a fund for compensation to injured employees. Now this explanation does not convey to the voter any such idea at all, but that is the foundation of the proposal. It ought to be so stated that under our present constitution compulsory compensation cannot be provided for and this is simply to enable the legislature to compel contributions to a fund for the compensation of injured persons. It should be remedied by the insertion of the word "compulsory."

Mr. STILWELL: I do not think the point raised by the member from Fayette is pertinent to the question.

The PRESIDENT: The statement will be informally passed to give the member from Fayette an opportunity to put his amendment in writing.

Mr. DOTY: Here is another perfectly innocent amendment, neither wet nor dry.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert over each proposal in the address to the people the index number opposite the title thereof on the official ballot except that over the proposal concerning the liquor traffic, there shall be no index number.

Mr. DOTY: This simply provides that whatever printed explanation there is will carry the same number as on the ballot.

Mr. CASSIDY: How is that indicated?

Mr. DOTY: There will be a number each place. I could go on and say at such and such a line and such and such a line, but when I would get through with that I would have done only what I would have accomplished here in these lines.

Mr. CASSIDY: Your amendment is all right, but it is not an amendment to this resolution, and it will have to be done separately.

Mr. DOTY: It has been done for fifty years. If you prefer to have me write out line so and so and so and so, I can do it.

Mr. CASSIDY: This cannot come in as an amendment to this resolution. The amendment should be a separate resolution.

Mr. DOTY: A separate resolution would not do at all. We have a resolution here trying to get things here out in shape. If we want these numbers at those places the only way to get them in is to amend them in.

Mr. KNIGHT: Will you withdraw your amendment until we get through?

Mr. DOTY: I will withhold it. I thought we were through.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to offer an amendment to the explanation affecting the municipal corporation proposal whenever it is in order.

The PRESIDENT: If this amendment by Mr. Doty is withdrawn your amendment is in order.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 3 of the first paragraph, after the "such" insert "local, police, sanitary and other similar".

In line 9 strike out the word "education".

Mr. KNIGHT: Just a moment: The first paragraph of the explanation is a little broader than the proposal itself. It reads as follows: "Cities and villages under the proposed amendment are given the right to frame their own charters, own and regulate their own public utilities adopt by ordinance such regulations not in conflict with general law when they may deem it necessary." The proposal says "such local, police, sanitary and other similar regulations," and the statement is so broad as to be misleading. I have consulted with some members of the committee on Municipal Government, and they think that this amendment should be introduced. A little further down it says, by way of illustration, that the general assembly has specifically reserved power to limit, etc., to make certain provisions for education, police, sanitary and other matters as may be for the general welfare of the state. There is nothing in the proposal touching education. There seems to be no necessity for the insertion of that word, and the amendment is to strike out that word.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STILWELL: On the subject of article II, section 35, to meet the objection that was raised to the address upon the matter of workmen's compensation it has been agreed to insert the words "by compulsory contributions" after the word "maintained."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: Before this part of the matter is concluded I want to call the attention of the Convention to article XIII, section 2. We passed that. I don't know whether it was voted on or not, but the explanation of that was rather colorless. I know that nothing was given to the committee for explanatory purposes. That proposal was passed by almost the unanimous vote of the Convention. Now there were just two sentences given in explanation of that. I regard that as one of the very important proposals and one on which we ought to have some light and if it is not out of order I would like to offer a substitute for the first sentence. There are only two sentences. The last sentence says it can regulate the sale of personal property. The other is that it can regulate the issue and sale of stocks and bonds. I want to insert here in lieu of the first sentence of that explanation:

This amendment is offered for the purpose of authorizing legislation that will permit the classification of corporations and the regulation by law of the issue and sale of stocks and bonds as well as supervision over their organization and business. The further purpose is to authorize such legislation as will prevent the sale of fraudulent stocks and bonds by either domestic or foreign corporations.

That is specifically provided for in the amendment and nothing said about classification. That will permit the classification of corporations and the regulation by law of the issue and sale of stocks and bonds as well as the supervision over their organization and business. The further purpose is to authorize such legislation as will prevent the sale of fraudulent stocks and bonds. So I move that the vote by which the explanation to article XIII, section 2, was adopted be reconsidered.

Address to the People.

The motion was carried.

Mr. HOSKINS: Now I offer this amendment in lieu of the first sentence of that amendment.

Mr. JONES: I notice in the first few lines a reversal of the order of statement which should be corrected.

Mr. HOSKINS: I do not understand that.

Mr. JONES: The point is this. The supervision is over the stocks and bonds. That should come first, as well as the control over the issue and sale of the stock.

Mr. HOSKINS: The issue and sale of stocks should come first.

Mr. JONES: It should not. You should first classify the corporations.

Mr. HOSKINS: I beg your pardon. The regulation of the issue and sale of stocks and bonds is first in the proposal.

Mr. JONES: No, sir. The proposal has corporations classified, and then there may be conferred such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization and business, etc.

Mr. HOSKINS: I think that is very important.

Mr. CASSIDY: I do not think, following the rule that we have adopted, that this amendment is a fair one. There is not a word in the proposal about the sale of fraudulent stocks and bonds. That is an argument pure and simple. The attempt of this committee and of this report was to state fairly and squarely what the proposal does. It gives the legislature or lawmaking body power to regulate the business and the sale of stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies. Take the following proposal. You might as well say that the object of the proposal was to prevent fraudulent banking. If we would attempt to do anything like that, certain members would be objecting. I don't see why "fraudulent" should be allowed in one place and not in the other.

Mr. HOSKINS: The whole discussion of that proposal was to reach that point, and while I did not have much time to consider the language, I submit you have not adhered to any rule and that the committee did not adhere to the rule. You started out to make no argument, and you have argued every proposal, some of them by stump speeches. The whole argument in favor of this proposal was that we could prevent the fraudulent issue and sale of stocks and bonds. The people will understand that language and would not understand the language used by the committee. I think it is a fair statement. If the word "fraudulent" is cut out and a milder word used, all right. That is the purpose, and why not state it to the people?

Mr. DOTY: It will not hurt it.

Mr. HOSKINS: No, sir; if you say it is to prevent fraudulent stocks and bonds they will understand you. The point is in regard to the sale, and that is what should be submitted.

Mr. CASSIDY: Probably you had better say the blue-sky laws of Kansas; then they will understand it, I suppose.

Mr. WINN: The proposal is that the board created shall have such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization and business and the issue and sale of stocks and securities as may be prescribed by law. You are limiting it, are you not, to the fraudulent sale of stocks?

Mr. HOSKINS: No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: Now, I want to move to amend this resolution now pending so that the index numbers on the bills will be placed over the proposal in the address to the people.

The PRESIDENT: Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert over each proposal in the address to the people the index number opposite the title thereof on the official ballot except that over the proposal concerning the liquor traffic, there shall be no index number.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The secretary will proceed with the reading of the resolution.

The secretary continued reading as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on Submission and Address to the People be, and is hereby, authorized to have the foregoing address printed in the form of a newspaper supplement and sent free to publishers agreeing to circulate the same; that an advertisement be placed in at least two newspapers of opposite politics in each county of the state, once a week for five weeks preceding the special election, to occupy three columns and to contain a facsimile of the ballot, the date of the election and such explanatory matter only as has been authorized by the Convention the rate for the same to be the commercial rate or not to exceed fifty per centum of the legal rate for official advertising.

Resolver further, That contracts for printing and advertising be entered into by the committee on submission and Address to the People and that vouchers for the payment of the same be signed by the president and secretary who are hereby authorized by the Convention to sign such contracts and vouchers subject only to the following conditions: first, that said advertising bills shall not be paid out of the funds of the Convention until all other obligations of the Convention have been paid; second, that when all other obligations of the Convention have been met said advertising bills shall be paid out of the balance of money on hand and if said balance is not sufficient that each advertiser shall receive his ratable share of the available funds; third, that the committee on Submission and Address to the people is hereby authorized to certify to the auditor of state, to be by him filed with the house of representatives of the next general assembly, the exact amount, if any, due to each newspaper publisher after the appropriation for the expense of this Convention is exhausted; fourth, that all advertising contracts made shall stipulate that in the event the funds are insufficient creditors agree to rely on the legislature to make an appropriation to satisfy their claims; and, fifth, that no advertising or printing contracts be authorized by the committee on Submission and Address to the People save and except on the foregoing conditions.

Address to the People.

Resolved further, That the same matter to be included in the supplement, be published in pamphlet form and that one thousand copies of said pamphlet be furnished each member of the Convention.

Resolver further, That all that part of Resolution No. 141 adopted June 1, 1912, after the word "resolved" up to and including the figure "4" in the last paragraph is hereby rescinded.

Mr. LAMPSON: This resolution is the result of a good deal of consideration upon the part of the committee on Submission, and is partially the result of the action of the associated daily newspapers of Ohio. Their representatives appeared before the committee and made certain propositions. They feel that the newspapers of the state will play an important part in the advertising of the work of the Convention and that they ought to be recognized. Now, in the resolution which we adopted the other day we proceeded upon the theory that we would advertise our work by the distribution through the mails, and otherwise, of a very large number of pamphlets. If we were to reach every voter in the state by mailing each voter a pamphlet it would take twelve hundred thousand or thirteen hundred thousand pamphlets. If it took twelve hundred thousand, and we mailed them to the voters the cost would be $12,000 for the postage. It would require a large number of clerks and a great deal of work to obtain the addresses of a million or twelve hundred thousand voters, and it would take an army of clerks from thirty to sixty days to address the pamphlets. If you will make a few figures on that subject you will see where we would be. An expert clerk indorsing pamphlets will not address more than a thousand in a day, and probably will not average that. He would have to work very hard to do that, and the result would be it would take forty or fifty clerks to address a million or twelve hundred thousand pamphlets to the voters of Ohio within the next thirty to sixty days. The printing of such a large number of pamphlets would cost a good many thousand dollars, and in the end, in my judgment, will not be as satisfactory as the method outlined in this resolution. The newspaper representatives, representing more than one hundred daily papers, have offered to circulate the statements provided for in the resolution free if we print it, placing the name of each paper over the head of it, so that they can fold it into their papers. They will fold it into their papers and distribute it to their readers free. Beyond that they want some recognition, and therefore we want to carry a three-column advertisement in certain newspapers designated by the committee on Submission for five weeks prior to the election, giving the date of the election and a facsimile ballot, and such other matters as the Convention may authorize. In one of the proposals which we have passed we provide for advertising for a period of five weeks of constitutional amendments. I see no reason why we should not at least advertise our work for the same length of time. It would not cost as much as provided in that proposal either, for that proposal provides for the printing of the amendments in full for five weeks before the election. In addition to that we provide for a thousand copies of the matter in pamphlet form to each delegate for distribution in his own county.

Mr. ELSON: How will these newspapers be chosen, and will there be any trouble with those who are not chosen, but which distribute the supplement?

Mr. LAMPSON: Those who take the supplement will receive the advertisement. We will first correspond and ascertain those willing to take it, and those that are will to receive it. The usual method is to have a paper of each political faith in the county, and in addition to that I have no doubt arrangements have been made for papers in the German language and perhaps other languages. The resolution leaves some discretion to the committee on Submission as far as that is concerned, but the aim would be to deal fairly with the newspapers, and when we get through with it, in my judgment, it would not cost as much as the pamphlet method would cost.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Give me some idea as to the cost.

Mr. LAMPSON: I have been trying to figure it, and I have been in the newspaper business a good many years myself. I am not in it much recently. I think perhaps $30,000 or $40,000 would be the cost; perhaps something like $400 to the county. I have some figures that I have been making here. A column is something like twenty-five squares. Is that about right?

Mr. TANNEHILL: It strikes me as correct.

Mr. LAMPSON: The proposition by the newspapers is to publish the advertising matter at one-half of the legal rate and charge nothing for the circulation of the supplement.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: How many inches.

Mr. LAMPSON: Seventy-five squares at $37.50 a column. We have to print the supplement at the job office and the supplement will contain the entire matter—all of these proposals, with the explanatory matter and a facsimile of the ballot.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: The papers in our county will publish all of the amendments, one hundred and thirty inches for $50 per paper.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is about what it will figure. Do you mean publish the amendments and the advertising matter too, or just the amendments?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: To publish the amendments would take one hundred and thirty inches.

Mr. LAMPSON: That would be more costly than the manner I suggest.

Mr. ELSON: Would it not be better for the committee to have the option of getting an independent paper here and there?

Mr. LAMPSON: They have that option.

Mr. ELSON: And must it be a daily paper?

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir; any paper.

Mr. TALLMAN: Could not that be charged to the member, the duty of selecting the papers in his county?

Mr. LAMPSON: The delegate could suggest to the committee on Submission, and the committee would pay attention to what the delegate says.

Mr. DOTY: That is really the way it would work out.

Address to the People.

Mr. NYE: What was to be included in the supplement?

Mr. LAMPSON: All of the amendments and the explanations and the address to the people.

Mr. KNIGHT: Simply what we have been working on today.

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. READ: Giving to each delegate one thousand copies to distribute is not fair as far as the delegates are concerned. The number of constituents of each delegate is different. Summit county has only one delegate here, and there are counties that have three delegates that haven't as many voters as Summit county. Your county. Mr. Lampson, has two delegates, and yet I represent a great many more votes than both of you delegates. I know I could distribute more than one thousand.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not think there will be any trouble in any delegate getting what he is entitled to. My disposition is to give the fullest publicity to these matters, and I know that will be the aim of the committee.

Mr. KING: Do you not provide for publishing the advertisement in only two newspapers?

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir; there is no limit, but the committee on Submission will have to make some reasonable limit on it in practice.

Mr. KING: Would they allow advertising in one German paper?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes; that is within the discretion of the committee on Submission.

Mr. TANNEHILL: This plan does not contemplate the mailing of individual copies?

Mr. LAMPSON: It does not. The one thousand copies will be sent in bulk to each delegate.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I think the people do not understand what that would cost. I do not believe it can be done short of $100,000.

Mr. LAMPSON: It will cost double what this plan will cost if carried out, and it would take a great deal more time to carry it out.

Mr. BROWN, of Pike: What method have you for choosing the papers?

Mr. LAMPSON: The delegates can make suggestions as to the papers from their county and the committee on Submission will endeavor to be fair in the distribution.

Mr. BROWN, of Pike: I suggest that that be included in the resolution.

Mr. LAMPSON: You could fix it any way you please, but the trouble about fixing it that way is that the conditions in different counties vary. The conditions in Pike county would be very different from the conditions in Cuyahoga and many other counties. It would be much better to trust it to the fairness of the committee on Submission in my judgment.

Mr. HOSKINS: Each member would be allowed one thousand copies?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: The resolution does not provide for the publication of anything but the address?

Mr. LAMPSON: It does not. It is proposed to include the address and the amendments and explanations and a facsimile ballot.

Mr. HOSKINS: A thousand copies of that would be sent by express or otherwise to each member?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: And they would use their own discretion as to how to distribute them?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: The probabilities are, are they not, that there would be more or less wasting of these unless some arrangement is made to mail to the constituents? Would it not be advisable to let the members furnish a thousand names of persons whom they could be mailed to, and in that way the expense of distribution could be taken care of, and a much better distribution had than if a thousand copies were shipped to each man's office and thrown as junk in the back room?

Mr. LAMPSON: I hardly think that would happen. If members do not want them they could give them to other members.

Mr. HOSKINS: But can the members distribute as well as they could be distributed from here?

Mr. LAMPSON: As soon as we enter upon the mailing business, we shall have an army of clerks and it will take a good deal of time and expense, much more than what we contemplate here.

Mr. RORICK: Each member can arrange with the newspapers in his county to leave a certain number there and the newspapers can distribute them.

Mr. LAMPSON: Certainly.

Mr. PETTIT: What will these pamphlets cost apiece?

Mr. LAMPSON: That depends on the number that we print. It will not be very expensive, one or two cents.

Mr. PETTIT: Have there been estimates on that?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes; on a million copies.

Mr. PETTIT: You couldn't get them at two cents apiece?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes—two, three, four or five cents, somewhere in there.

Mr. PECK: State again just exactly what you propose to have in these pamphlets.

Mr. LAMPSON: The address, which has been under consideration tonight, all the amendments and explanations, and the facsimile ballot.

Mr. PECK: A copy of the constitution?

Mr. LAMPSON: It does not provide for a copy of the old constitution.

Mr. MOORE: The rural mail carrier would be a splendid avenue to distribute this matter.

Mr. LAMPSON: If one hundred and nineteen thousand copies are not sufficient the resolution is open to amendment in that respect.

Mr. HOSKINS: Do you propose by the resolution to print in the newspapers the full text of the amendments?

Mr. LAMPSON: Oh, not at all. We propose to furnish to the newspapers a supplement containing the full text, together with the explanations, but the advertisement that goes into the newspaper is to be a display advertisement covering three columns of space, and followed up with the ballot and some explanation as to the marking of the ballot.

Address to the People.

Mr. HOSKINS: And that explanation would have to come from the committee on Submission?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: The presumption being that they would furnish all of the papers exact duplicates?

Mr. LAMPSON: The same thing to all of the papers, to take three columns of space, to run for five weeks and to be paid for at the commercial rate, or not more than fifty per cent of the legal rate.

Mr. HOSKINS: Is this the proposition that comes from the organization of newspapers?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, the organization of the Ohio dailies embracing all of the dailies outside of the big cities and some in the big cities. They were represented here yesterday.

Mr. ELSON: Would it not be well for the committee to have power to divide it up?

Mr. LAMPSON: That is the way we want it.

Mr. ELSON: Why should two alone be chosen?

Mr. LAMPSON: It says at least two.

Mr. HALFHILL: Has any estimate been made as to the advertising and distribution as proposed by the committee?

Mr. LAMPSON: There has not been any official estimate, but it will run $30,000 or $40,000, and the representatives of the papers agreed to wait for any expense of advertising until the legislature convened, and they will take their chances with the legislature of getting an appropriation to pay it.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not think they would be taking much chance.

Mr. LAMPSON: Oh, no; none whatever.

Mr. HALFHILL: Do I understand that the committee selects the papers?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, the committee selects the papers; somebody will have to select them. The committee, I have no doubt, will be ready to listen to suggestions from delegates representing the counties where the papers are located.

Mr. HALFHILL: What does this advertising mean?

Mr. LAMPSON: The proposition is to advertise the ballot until the date of the election in a display ad. for five weeks preceding the election, giving the date of the election and the body of the ballot right in the newspapers.

Mr. HALFHILL: Now, I am well content with that resolution; it looks as though it had been framed with some care, but I want to make one exception. I would like to know what is going into that advertisement, and I do not believe the Convention ought to leave that an open matter.

Mr. LAMPSON: My understanding from the talks we have had—I don't know whether the resolution fixes this sufficiently or not.

Mr. HALFHILL: That is still an open matter. You say "such explanatory matter authorized by the Convention." Therefore the committee draws its own conclusions as to what has been authorized.

Mr. PECK: The result will show.

Mr. HALFHILL: We have agreed to what has been done, except that you prepare your own advertisement and put your own construction on it.

Mr. LAMPSON: My understanding is that nothing will go into the advertisement except what has been agreed to by the Convention, and that it is to include a facsimile of the ballot, the date of the election and the explanation as to the marking of the ballot, which is at the head of it, and I do not see why there should be anything more put on.

Mr. HALFHILL: We all agree to that part, but we ought to adopt here the explanatory things that are to go out. You don't mean all that we have adopted?

Mr. LAMPSON: No; there would not be any room for it. It has been estimated it would take about three columns to put in this facsimile ballot, together with the display advertisement, the date of the election and the explanation.

Mr. HALFHILL: Therefore, this committee draws its own conclusions as to what this Convention has agreed upon, and you add that?

Mr. LAMPSON: We had to draw that conclusion from the records of the Convention.

Mr. HALFHILL: I understand that very well, but there are conclusions and conclusions, and why cannot something be submitted for the Convention to act upon?

Mr. LAMPSON: Is not this what you are figuring on, that in making this up, if there is any spare room, the committee may put something on there—is that what you fear?

Mr. HALFHILL: I fear that the committee in that advertisement will put in its own conclusion as to what this Convention wants, and I want the Convention to act on that itself.

Mr. WINN: Is it not a fact that you are afraid they will put in something favorable to the initiative and referendum?

Mr. PECK: No; he is afraid they will put in the single tax.

Mr. HALFHILL: As long as you have inquired on that, I will answer you definitely. The matter is for the Convention to decide, and is the most important matter that can come before us, and it seems to me that the Convention should decide it and that no committee should be entrusted with that power.

Mr. ELSON: Is it understood that no explanation specifically shall go in the advertisement?

Mr. LAMPSON: There is no room for it.

Mr. HALFHILL: The trouble is that the committee draws its own conclusions on what we have done. Now, another matter. This amendment is for the purpose of presenting the matter to the voter?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: Calling his attention to each one of these propositions? Now will there be an argument made by the committee on this advertisement?

Mr. LAMPSON: None whatever.

Mr. TALLMAN: I move that the member from Allen be added to that committee so that he will know what action is taken.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection, that motion will be considered agreed to.

Mr. HALFHILL: I thank you.

Mr. WALKER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the resolution add:

"And resolved further that a copy of the present constitution be included as a part of said pamphlet.

Address to the People.

Mr. WALKER: That is sufficiently clear to everyone not to require any explanation. You will not find one constitution of the state of Ohio in five hundred homes throughout the state, and each voter, I think, should have the old constitution when he tries to pass on the amendments made to it. We should be able to see the old as well as the new.

Mr. TALLMAN: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion to table was lost.

Mr. KRAMER: I would like to say a word or two about spending money right here. This will cost twice as much or more than twice as much as the way it is now figured out. I don't think the money ought to be expended. I don't think simply because we have a little money left that we should go mad in spending it for everything.

Mr. JONES: We passed a resolution here the other day with reference to this matter, a resolution which provided for the printing of the present constitution in an extra edition and sending a copy to each voter of the state as far as possible.

DELEGATES: No.

Mr. JONES: I may be in error, but I got that understanding, that it was embodied in that report of the committee. I have had a great many inquiries since our previous session with reference to this matter of the committee, and I have made answers to all of the inquiries. I have gotten word that if the matter is submitted in the newspapers a large number of the voters will never see a word that this Convention has done. It seems to me that the expense of making this pamphlet has been very much overestimated. I undertook in my canvass for election to this Convention to mail a personal letter to each voter in the county, and I employed a couple of young women to address the envelopes, and the whole expense was very moderate.

Mr. DOTY: How much was it?

Mr. JONES: Ten or fifteen dollars.

Mr. DOTY: How many voters have you?

Mr. JONES: Five thousand.

Mr. DOTY: Where did you get the names?

Mr. JONES: From the tax returns and from the poll books.

Mr. LAMPSON: Did you pay for getting the names, or did they just do it for nothing?

Mr. JONES: I employed the young women to get the names from the auditor's office and the letters were addressed and directed from the books. They didn't take any copy of any list of names.

Mr. LAMPSON: Do you think that could be done in this case?

Mr. JONES: No, sir.

Mr. DOTY: Do you or not know that twenty per cent of the names now on the tax returns are wrong?

Mr. JONES: You will reach three times as many people that way as you will by your method.

Mr. ELSON: Do you realize that we must depend in a large measure upon free notices from the newspapers, and is it not right and proper that we should do something for them?

Mr. JONES: I am not talking about that. I am simply saying that the method I suggest is very little more costly, while it is much more efficacious, than the manner suggested here?

Mr. ELSON: Do you not realize it would be a great deal easier to give the same information to each voter through the supplement in the newspapers?

Mr. JONES: The trouble is your newspapers won't go to half of the voters. Considerable number of people in the state don't take any newspapers.

Mr. ELSON: Do you not realize that to get that list of names you want to get you have to have an organization with men of ability and that it will take a whole lot of work and a great deal of time?

Mr. JONES: I venture to say that in the average rural county substantially a proper list of names of the voters could be gotten for from $25 to $50 at the outside.

Mr. LAMPSON: I venture to say it cannot be done for $100.

Mr. DOTY: Now, who is going to do this? We haven't any bureau organized for work?

Mr. JONES: This committee on Submission.

Mr. DOTY: We are not rich as you are, Mr. Jones.

Mr. JONES: You are proposing to do a whole lot of work, but what I am objecting to is that your work won't have results. "You won't get to the people with it."

Mr. ELSON: I demand the previous question.

Mr. LAMPSON: I have an amendment which ought to be adopted, and I ask the secretary to read it. I want to offer it and have the secretary read it before the motion for the previous question is made.

The amendment was read as follows:

After the word "politics" in the first paragraph of the last page insert:
"and of general circulation".

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment of the delegate from Holmes is now in order. It is at the end of the proposal and proposes to add "And resolved further, That a copy of the present constitution be included as a part of said pamphlet."

Mr. DOTY: That ought not to be adopted. It would produce a very confusing pamphlet. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. READ: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

At the end of the third paragraph of the final page strike out the period and add the following: "and fifty thousand additional copies be printed for general distribution."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: I have been thinking for some half an hour—

Mr. DOTY: What is that?

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: —and without getting anything from Mr. Doty, and that is an extraordinary thing, that anybody should think differently from Mr. Doty. And I think this display advertisement to teach the people how to vote and not to teach them how to understand the proposals is unnecessary. I don't think it is necessary to have that published any five weeks. I think two weeks will do just as much good as five weeks and it will cost a good deal less.

Address to the People—Resolution Expressing gratitude of Convention to Employes.

Mr. LAMPSON: The proposition was first eight weeks, and then this proposition came from the representatives of the newspapers, and it was cut down to five weeks. I do not want to change that time.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It does not seem to me that length of time is necessary, and I therefore move that the word "five" be stricken out and the word "three" substituted.

Mr. KING: I am opposed to sitting here all night quarreling with the committee that we ourselves have appointed and that has manifestly done the best it could. I therefore move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

The amendment of the delegate from Highland was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall Resolution No. 155 be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 80, nays 3, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Halenkamp,	Moore,
Beatty, Morrow,	Halfhill,	Nye, have faithfully discharged their respective duties, therefore,

Resolved, That each and every one of the above named persons are entitled to the gratitude of the Convention and are commended for meritorious service.

Mr. HALFHILL: I think the committee which elected the employes is to be commended for the work they did.

The success of any man or any body of men depends a great deal upon the ability to secure proper helpers. We have been certainly fortunate in this respect, and I therefore move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution be adopted.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ANTRIM: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 157:

WHEREAS, There was purchased for the use of the Convention and its members a quantity of office furniture and fixtures together with a number of books and other supplies which will not be needed for use after the adjournment of this body; therefore

Be it resolved by this Convention, That the secretary be, and he hereby is, instructed immediately after adjournment to cause an inventory of all of such articles to be made and to sell the same as soon as there is no longer any use for them and account for the proceeds to the treasurer of state for the benefit of the proper fund.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. FACKLER: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 158:

Resolved, That the committee on Submission and Address to the People be authorized to correct errors of punctuation and grammatical construction in the Address to the People.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution considered at once.

Mr. FACKLER: That is necessary by reason of a couple of errors in the ballot, where section numbers have been given incorrectly.

The SECRETARY: No; that is not so.

Mr. FACKLER: Yes; there are some errors.

Mr. COLTON: The word "in" is left out at one place.

Mr. DOTY: I move that we recess until 9:30.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Allen has the floor.

Mr. HALFHILL: I desire to call attention to something which is an error which is a surprise probably to all of us. It will relate to an amendment to section 15 of article IV, and it is very easy to understand how the error got in. If you will look at your copy of the grand resolution, on page five as this proposal was originally submitted, it used the words: "The general assembly may increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court," etc. Then you notice a little further on that it refers to the house, providing that laws may be passed. There you have an awkward situation and it ought to be amended by inserting after the word "house" the words "of the general assembly".

The PRESIDENT: Is the member from Allen speaking upon any pending question?

Mr. HALFHILL: I am suggesting an error, and I am a little at a loss to know how to remedy the situation.

The PRESIDENT: The question pending is that the committee on Address to the People be given authority to change the punctuation and other errors contained in the address to the people. The member from Allen is discussing something else.

Mr. HALFHILL: I beg the pardon of the Convention. I thought that matter was passed, and I was bringing this matter up for consideration.

The resolution offered by Mr. Fackler was adopted.

Mr. LAMPSON: Now, I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 159:

Resolved, That the F. J. Heer Printing Company is hereby authorized to publish and bind in buckram one thousand copies of the journal of the Convention, including an index estimated at two hundred pages, for fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars. If the index should exceed two hundred pages two ($2.00) dollars in addition to the above estimate is to be allowed for each additional page. If the index should be less than two hundred pages a deduction of two ($2.00) dollars per page is to be made from the above amount.

The rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The question being "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 67, nays 11, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Mr. Tetlow submitted the following report:

The standing committee on Employes, to which was referred Resolution No. 134 — Mr. Doty, having had the same under consideration, reports back the following substitute and recommends its adoption:

Resolved, Section 1. That when this Convention adjourns on June 6, 1912, it be to meet at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, August 26, 1912, unless a meeting of the Convention shall be called in the meantime; the written demand of any ten members of the Convention filed with the secretary of the Convention shall constitute a call for any such meeting, and the secretary shall notify each member of the Convention by mail of such call, provided that the time for convening the Convention for such called meeting, shall be not less than five days from the time when the notice therefor shall have been filed; and that such meeting shall be held in the city of Columbus, Ohio.

SECTION 2. The president and secretary shall continue to keep their present office rooms and shall have general charge of the issuing of such pamphlets and documents and the preparation and placing of such advertising matter, as the Convention shall authorize; the indexing, proof reading and publication of the journal of the Convention; the editing, proof reading, indexing and publication of the debates of the Convention. For this work the secretary of the Convention is hereby authorized to retain three employes of the present force to be continued at their present compensation for such length of time, not longer than August 26, 1912, as the president and secretary may find their services necessary; and in addition and at the same compensation and for the same time, H. L. Rebrassier, is hereby employed, to assist in the editorial and proof reading work upon the debates of this Convention; the services of J. B. Lewis and H. S. Brown, bill clerks, are hereby authorized during the month of June, for the purpose of sorting, filing and forwarding the documents of this Convention to the delegates and to the public and such other documents as may be authorized by the Convention; and their services may be continued by the president and secretary after the month of June for any distribution of documents that may be authorized by the Convention; the services of Carl A. Mutschler, clerk of the historian and reference librarian, are continued for thirty days from June 7th at his present compensation; the services of the postmaster are hereby continued up to June 16, 1912, at his present compensation.

SECTION 3. The services of the sergeant-at-arms, J. C. Sherlock, and of the custodian, Fred Blankner, are hereby continued for the period of seven days after June 7th, and they are hereby instructed to procure boxes and all necessary material for packing and shipping documents of the delegates; they are hereby authorized to retain Wm. C. Reis, John Littlejohn and Allen G. Atwill and they shall receive for such service the same per diem as is now being paid them by this Convention; the president of the Convention is hereby authorized and instructed to sign vouchers therefor and for necessary material and express charges.

SECTION 4. Seven days after June 7, 1912, the sergeant-at-arms of this Convention shall turn over the hall and committee rooms to the proper custodian thereof; except such rooms as may be required by the president and secretary for the work authorized by this Convention, which rooms are hereby retained until August 26, 1912.

SECTION 5. The bill clerk is hereby directed to cause to be filed one complete set of documents, proposals, reports and printed matter, except the daily journal, with the state librarian for preservation in the state library. The secretary of this Convention is hereby directed to deposit with the state librarian one complete printed journal and printed debates, after publication.

SECTION 6. The secretary of this Convention shall attest one printed copy of the journal of this Convention and file the same with the secretary of state as the official record of this Convention. He shall file with any certificate of proposed amendments, engrossed copies of the proposals as finally passed by the Convention and each engrossed copy shall be certified to by the secretary of the Convention, showing the date of final action.

SECTION 7. The service and compensation of all employes of the Convention, not provided for in this resolution, shall cease June 7, 1912.

Mr. DOTY: This resolution is substantially like the one I introduced, the chief difference being in the selection of the names of the clerks who are to assist the secretary in indexing and in the correction of the expert proofreader. I have no personal interest in the names contained in my first resolution. I anticipated that this Convention would follow the precedent that the Convention set itself in the beginning of our work in that it named the employes to assist all of our officers. The selection of the proofreader, an expert to prepare copy and read proof, ought not to be done hastily or at the dictation of some outsider. I made an investigation as to Mr. Nichols, and I found that, with the exception of the secretary himself, there was no one on our force who could do this work. Mr. Nichols is experienced in this line and has done this kind of work for Anderson & Company, the publishers of the Annotated General Code, and has done a great deal of other work of this kind for a great many years. There are comparatively, few men who can do this work. I presume in this Convention there are not over three or four of us who can do it. I do not know that I could do it now myself. There was a time when I had experience and would have been competent. Perhaps Mr. Tannehill and Mr. Lampson, and possibly one or two others, would be competent to do the work, but it is not a work that ordinary clerks can do. Now the committee has stricken out the name of Mr. Nichols and put in the name of Mr. Rebrassier. I think that Mr. Rebrassier is one of the clerks, and I do not want to make any invidious comparisons, but it is not saying anything against the gentleman to state he is not equal to this kind of a job. There are very few men who could do it. I am not at all concerned about the clerkships to assist the secretary. The names that I put in were the two women now in the office of the secretary. They know the work and certainly could do it, and then I put in Mr. Cartwright, who has been secretary to several of the committees. It is a question of how much help you want to give to the secretary. We are giving him a tremendous amount of work, and I doubt if there will be enough. Those of us who are here and have been here during sessions of the general assembly know the tremendous amount of work required to fix up this journal and properly index it. And to start to find anything without an index is just like looking for a needle in a haystack. This job that we are giving to the secretary is certainly not an easy job, and he should have enough help. Then the debates have to be indexed so that you can find your matter in there when it is wanted. At first blush no one can grasp the amount of work that we have left here, and I think we should certainly leave enough help.

Retention of Employees through Recess of Convention.

The clerks that have been picked out are certainly competent. Mr. Morrison has had nine years and Mrs. Scriven has had three years of experience, and both are very competent and very obliging clerks. The two young women, Mrs. Scriven and Miss Kersting, have worked in the office this year and last year. Then I think the secretary ought to have at least one stenographer who is competent to do not only stenographic work but help in the next three months. I put in Miss Keller as a competent stenographer.

Mr. WINN: Are you amending this?

Mr. DOTY: No; the question is on agreeing with the report of the committee. I was setting forth for the benefit of the members of the Convention the difference between the original resolution and the report of the committee.

Mr. KRAMER: What are we going to do with a thousand volumes of this journal bound in buckram?

Mr. DOTY: Each member will get a copy.

Mr. KRAMER: That will be one hundred and nineteen. Suppose there are 800 left; what is going to be done with them?

Mr. DOTY: I don't know. Mr. Lampson introduced the resolution.

Mr. LAMPSON: They go to the different libraries. They are the official records of our proceedings. I think that number will be needed.

Mr. HALFHILL: What is the objection of having the resolution printed and having the regular copy here tomorrow morning so that we can look at it?

Mr. DOTY: None at all. I prefer to have the committee report not agreed upon until we have carefully considered it.

Mr. HALFHILL: Then make that motion.

Mr. DOTY: I move the resolution be printed as it would read if the report were adopted.

The motion was carried.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 160:

Resolved, That the president is empowered and directed, after the adjournment of the Convention, to sign all vouchers for all authorized expenditures, services of officers and employes and necessary incidental expenses incurred after the adjournment of this Convention; and the auditor of state is requested to honor such vouchers and issue warrants for same on the state treasury.

On motion of Mr. Lampson the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The question being "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 67, nays 11, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Harter, Huron,	Norris,
Beatty, Morrow,	Henderson;	Nye,
Beyer,	Hoffman,	Peck,

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CASSIDY: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 161:

Resolved, That the president and secretary be and they are hereby appointed as a special committee to audit, allow and order paid such bills as have not yet been paid or filed with the secretary and are proper charges against the Convention.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I move to recess until nine o'clock in the morning.

The motion was carried and the Convention thereupon recessed until nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

EIGHTY-SECOND DAY

(LEGISLATIVE DAY OF JUNE 6)

MORNING SESSION.

FRIDAY, June 7, 1912.

The Convention met pursuant to recess and was called to order by the president and opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. McClelland, the member from Knox county, as follows:

We come humbly into Thy presence, oh God, grateful for life's blessings. We bow gratefully to Thee as we go back over the days of our work here and see the many manifestations of Thy loving kindness. We thank Thee for the blessings of usefulness that Thou hast given us. We thank Thee for the wisdom to guide us in the right paths and to do the right things that Thou hast bestowed upon us. We acknowledge Thee today as the author and as the Lord of our being. Thou hast so blessed us. We thank Thee for what Thou hast done for us in the days that have gone by, and for the work that Thou hast permitted us to do for the upbuilding and advancement of our people, that we may secure a reign of law and of righteousness in the world. Direct us all and make us Thy own, that whatever we may do, whatever service we are called upon to render, may be well done until at last Thou shalt say to us in regard to all of our work, Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the Kingdom of thy Lord. And to thy name shall be the glory, Amen.

Mr. DOTY: The Convention will remember that we ordered Resolution No. 134 printed as it would appear if amended. It will be about thirty minutes before this printed resolution will be here.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 162:

Resolved, That the secretary is authorized to receive all data collected by the historian and reference librarian, to put the same and other documents in his office in shape for convenient reference and permanent preservation, and at the conclusion of his work to transmit them with books and other material of historical value to the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Society.

By unanimous consent the rules were suspended and the resolution was considered at once.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: On last Friday the Convention, in a moment of generosity to itself, authorized the secretary of the Convention to print an unlimited number of the constitution of 1851 with the present amendments, in such form that the original section and present amendment will be in different type. I do not know whether the Convention wants the secretary to print a million copies of that pamphlet or twenty-five copies, and I do not think the secretary knows. Now, I move that that motion be rescinded. I do not think there is any necessity for this at all. I think the pamphlet that we are to publish will contain everything that this contains, and the secretary is so busy that he is going to have very little time to attend to the duty put on him, and for these two reasons I think this should be rescinded.

Mr. JONES: Why not fix the number that shall be sent, say one to each voter in the state?

Mr. DOTY: I simply say it is in indefinite shape now. I am not trying to put it in shape.

Mr. JONES: Can you conceive how the average man with some of these amendments can get a correct idea of them without referring to the original provision of the constitution?

Mr. DOTY: The average voter will be more confused by having the present constitution plus what you propose to do mixed up than to have just what you are trying to do. I think the amendment and the explanation will be all that is necessary. What could the average man do with the old constitution and Judge Peck's proposal? He wouldn't know anything about it. Then take your Torrens proposal; what could the average man know about that? You are simply putting up a Chinese puzzle to the voters.

Mr. WALKER: I hope the suggestion to the amendment by the gentleman from Cuyahoga will not prevail. I think the resolution or motion as adopted on May 31 was very wise. I suggested in what I said last night that the average voter of the state would be able to take the constitution as it now is and distinguish between it and the amendments. It may be possibly a little confusing to him, but in every community there are influential men entirely capable of handling these matters, and the only intelligent way to approach a comparison is to know what the present constitution is and compare it with what the amendments are. You can find a copy of the United States constitution in every home and in every school district, but you cannot find the state constitution. There are comparatively few of them. I say we have no right to withhold from the voters the constitution of the state of Ohio. This was not introduced for lawyers to stick into their libraries at all. I think the lawyers have an abundant supply of constitutions, but this is for the people. If we want to save any money I think we can curtail this large corps of employes they are trying to leave behind here and thereby save enough expense to take care of this item.

Mr. DOTY: Do you contend that it is wise for us to print the old constitution with the amendments in large quantities for the voters of the state?

Mr. WALKER: There should be as many copies of the state constitution as we print pamphlets under the resolution adopted last night. I understand this does not cover the same ground. That should not have been voted down last night. If you will agree to reconsider that resolution last night and incorporate it in this I shall vote with you in rescinding. I think the secretary ought to have some privilege of disseminating the constitution.

Printing of Constitution with Proposed Amendments—Correction of Errors in Proposed Amendments.

Mr. DOTY: Are you in favor of publishing a vast number of old constitutions with our amendments?

Mr. WALKER: Not an unreasonable number.

Mr. DOTY: Now another question: Suppose this constitution of 1851 with all of the amendments is printed and a large number scattered among the people of the state. After the election, at which some of the amendments would be adopted and others rejected, would not there be enough pamphlets left over and in the possession of the voters, and would it not be a bad thing to have something around that was not really the constitution?

Mr. WALKER: I think the voters would compare and would find out what had been adopted.

Mr. DOTY: Certainly, if he had the knowledge you and I have, but they have not been here as we have.

Mr. WALKER: There are leading men in communities and they will keep them straight on that.

Mr. DOTY: You are merely thinking up a scheme that will confuse them for years and years to come.

Mr. WALKER: I will risk the confusion.

Mr. PETTIT: I find myself for once in accord with Mr. Doty.

Mr. DOTY: This is not the only time. We were together about thirty days ago on something.

Mr. PETTIT: It seems to me that on this sheet or pamphlet we will have all the information necessary on the subject, and I think it would be an absolute useless expense to print the constitution as has been referred to.

Mr. READ: If we consider this matter carefully we will thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Holmes [Mr. WALKER] on this question. A number of my constituents have asked if we were not going to have the whole constitution printed along with the new part so that they could compare it. I told them I believed that was the intention, and they said that that was the right thing to do because they wanted to know what was in the old constitution when they came to vote upon an amendment changing the old constitution.

Mr. DOTY: I will withdraw the motion and will move that the number of copies of the constitution ordered be limited to five thousand.

The motion was carried.

Mr. ANTRIM: I want to call attention to three very serious defects in the initiative and referendum proposal as passed. Possibly some of you would like to mark them. Turn to page 2 in the grand resolution, article II, section 1. You will find in section 1 in the fourth line at the end of the line these words, "and amendments to the constitution." Those words should be stricken out altogether. I am referring now to the last grand resolution put on your desk that has the ballot at the end of it. These words should be stricken out for this reason: The amendment prepared by the special committee at the last reading cuts out altogether the indirect initiative method of proposing constitutional amendments. Of course, that was adopted and after it was adopted the change was not made in section 1 to correspond. The result is we have an inconsistency.

Mr. PECK: That does not refer only to the indirect method, but to both methods. It is a general provision.

Mr. ANTRIM: There is only one method of amending the constitution and that is by the direct method.

Mr. PECK: And they have reserved the power to do so.

Mr. ANTRIM: This says, "but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution." As a matter of fact we shall not be able to propose to the general assembly amendments to the constitution. The only method is the direct method on a petition of ten per cent, so the only correct thing to do is to strike out those words "amendments to the constitution."

Now, turn to the next page, three, about ten lines from the bottom of the page, beginning with the sentence "Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in section 1a, and section 1b."

The implication there is that both proposed laws and amendments have to do with section 1a and section 1b. As a matter of fact amendments have only to do with section 1a and proposed laws only to section 1b. Of course that resulted from the fact that this amendment was introduced by a special committee and this change was not made to correspond. That sentence would have to be entirely rewritten to make it correct.

This is not the fault of the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, because they corrected only the amendment itself, section 1b. They did not look to the remainder of the proposal, which they had gone over carefully before. These are inconsistencies that arise as the result of the introduction of this new section, and I am calling attention to the error but not suggesting the change.

Now, there is one other one and you will find that on page 5, section 1g, not quite down to the middle of the page. The sentence, "No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition." The inference is that we submit both laws and amendments to the constitution by initiative petition and supplementary petitions. As a matter of fact we permit only amendments by initiative petition. Supplementary petitions have nothing to do with amendments and laws by both initiative and supplementary petitions, and the way to correct that is to introduce the word "or" between "initiative" and "supplementary" or rewrite the sentence.

Mr. LAMPSON: This matter came up last night and I thought a good deal about the parliamentary method of making the correction. I talked with Mr. Crosser and he felt that he would rather leave it just as it is, inasmuch as it does not affect the meaning and application of the amendment. The only way I can see out of that is to resolve that the secretary of the Convention be directed to enroll and print the proposal as adopted on final passage so that it would read "as follows:" and then set out in full the corrections. But that would afford a technical opportunity for some one to raise a question.

Mr. KING: If that motion were carried, could it be made to include the amendment relating to the courts, Judge Peck's proposal?

Mr. LAMPSON: It could, but that should be fixed by a separate amendment. I also took that matter into consideration. This is a simple direction to the secretary to enroll and cause to be printed as adopted on final passage, so as to read "as follows:" and that would be certified to the secretary of state as what has been enrolled under these directions and this sheet would have to be taken out and another sheet substituted.

Correction of Errors in Proposed Amendments.

Mr. JONES: Would the journal show that that was adopted in that form?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, but you would have to take in connection with it this direction, which must be adopted by a yea and nay vote, to get a correct understanding of the matter. Of course, it would be certified by the secretary of the state in accordance with a resolution directing the secretary to make the correction and enroll and cause the proposal to be printed in that way.

Mr. FESS: Could we not reconsider the final vote on this matter?

Mr. LAMPSON: The trouble about that is it has been signed by the president and secretary and a reconsideration comes too late.

Mr. DOTY: The trouble is that the minutes of the Convention show that the proposals have been enrolled and, so far as we know, filed with the secretary of state.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not want to be understood as saying that this affords a clear way out of it. It is the only possible way. Our rules provide that we shall do whatever we do in the shape of proposals. I mean in the way of amending the constitution. We have provided these proposals shall have a certain number of readings and a certain consideration and all the proposals have gone through that grind. Then it came up to the place where we should officially certify or notify the secretary of state of what we have done. The way we did that was through what we call the grand resolution, which we signed last Saturday. We didn't have to sign it, but only the president and secretary. We did sign it, however, and for all we know that has gone to the secretary of state and it may be that the secretary of state actually has that copy in his possession. Technically that is where it belongs. If the secretary of this Convention has that enrolled copy he is holding it as his own risk.

Mr. HOSKINS: Suppose there is an error; could we direct the secretary to correct it?

Mr. DOTY: If you do it according to our rules that is possible. It is possible to introduce a proposal this morning now, to take number 2 and amend as follows. Then the resolution is put in with the correction, just as we have suspended the rules before, and we would suspend them again and order it to its second reading and to its third reading, and then pass another grand resolution which we would have to enroll. In connection with that we would have to rescind the one we have passed, enroll the second one and send it to the secretary of state with directions to substitute for the other one.

Mr. HOSKINS: If the matter were an error couldn't the secretary correct it on the original enrolled bill?

Mr. DOTY: The secretary of the Convention has no right to change a period or a comma or a word. That does not make any difference to him. He cannot change a thing.

Mr. HOSKINS: Except by direction of the Convention?

Mr. DOTY: And if he does it by direction of the Convention this Convention is directing him to certify something to the secretary of state that has not passed or that did not pass.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Would not that require signing again?

Mr. DOTY: All the signatures required were those of the president and secretary. I am not contending that we shouldn't make the corrections. I am willing to stay another week and correct them, but if they are corrected they must be corrected in a proper way.

Mr. ANTRIM: Do you not think the initiative and referendum proposal will be more widely read in this country than all the rest together, and therefore don't you believe that as far as possible we should free it from defects?

Mr. DOTY: Of course, I do.

Mr. ANTRIM: We are going to be judged in the other states more largely in what we have done in this proposal than anything else.

Mr. DOTY: That is true. I am not at all contending against making these corrections. I am only trying to point out the only possible way to make them. The method proposed by the member from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] may be right, but I don't think it is.

Mr. WINN: This Convention is a law unto itself except as it may be controlled by the rules, and it may be that we can suspend the rules and do what we please. We might suspend the rules and make new rules.

Mr. DOTY: We could not under the rules.

Mr. WINN: We could suspend the rules and undo everything we have done.

Mr. DOTY: You cannot suspend the rules of procedure except by a two-thirds vote and notice of three days.

Mr. WINN: Do you say it takes three days' notice to change the rules?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. KING: I do not believe there can be any way devised by which these corrections can be made safely, nor do I believe they are material corrections at all. The words in the initiative and referendum proposal suggested by the gentleman who raised the question, will simply be rejected as mere surplusage. They say, as hereinafter provided, the affirmative grant of power is to be found in the subsequent section to tell how that power can be exercised, and it does not apply in the double-petition method at all. The suggestion of the gentleman from Allen as to the judicial amendment, section 15, article IV, does not lie at all. It could not be better written. The trouble arises because the committee used the expression "laws may be passed" wherever "general assembly" had been used. When they changed that expression they didn't change it so as to plainly indicate or express just what was intended by that section, but as it reads now laws may be passed. Now the legislative power is vested in the general assembly regardless of limitation or reservation. We reserve certain legislative powers, to be exercised in a certain way, to the people. But laws may be passed to increase the number of judges and establish other courts and so forth whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall agree thereon. So that is the way and the only way now that laws can be passed to increase the number of judges and increase the number of districts or establish other courts, when two-thirds of the members of each house—that can mean but just one thing, and that is the general assembly, the only law-making power in Ohio that has two houses. That, therefore, will be construed to mean that the general assembly alone can act upon the subject of increasing or diminishing the number of judges. As I see it, it could have been better written to express the idea in connection with the initiative clause in our constitution, but at the same time it is a perfectly workable proposition and ought not in my judgment now be tinkered with.

Mr. HALFHILL: The way the proposal was written originally it had in the forefront of it the words "general assembly." Now the committee on Phraseology struck out the words "general assembly" and inserted "laws may be passed". It is very awkward looking. It is so awkward that there should be some way to remedy it. I admit that the construction would be just as contended for by Judge King, however.

Mr. KING: You say it is awkward. There is no doubt about the meaning of it?

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not think there is any doubt. The meaning is correct, but it is awkward.

Mr. PECK: But after it has been passed that way, is not that an end of it?

Mr. HALFHILL: We certainly have control of our own proceedings here. I do not see any force in the argument of the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Dory] that everything we have done here is so sacred that we cannot remedy it. I do not know of anybody who has made more fun of precedent and established things than the gentleman from Cuyahoga.

Mr. DOTY: I distinguish between the words "precedent" and "sacred".

Mr. PECK: Well, what is before the Convention?

Mr. DOTY: Nothing but to wait for the printer to bring up Resolution No. 134.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Cuyahoga has stated it correctly.

Mr. HALFHILL: I move that we insert in this provision after the word "house" the words "of the general assembly".

Mr. DOTY: There are several points of order that might be raised to that. One is that it is not in writing.

Mr. LAMPSON: Another point of order is that it is not before the Convention.

Mr. DOTY: And while the gentleman is reducing it to writing we will think of several others.

Mr. LAMPSON: I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if his motion is voted down it will be notice to future investigators that the Convention did not intend what the gentleman wants to insert.

Mr. HALFHILL: That may be true.

Mr. DOTY: I now call up Resolution No. 134.

The PRESIDENT: The question is upon agreeing to the report of the committee.

Mr. DOTY: The difference in the two resolutions, the one I introduced and the other, is not material except in two or three particulars. My notion that the best way to get the resolution in shape, if the Convention desires to do so, and I say it without reflection upon the committee, is to disagree with the report of the committee, which will leave the resolution as originally introduced and then amend that resolution to accord with the wishes of the Convention. I have some amendments for correcting dates and one thing and another that in my judgment ought to be corrected and I think it will then be in proper shape.

The resolutions we adopted yesterday are going to make a tremendous amount of work. I do not mean mental work only, but down right mechanical manual work, to be done by somebody. The number of employes that I had provided in the original resolution in my judgment is not large enough to do this work and do it right. I went over in a hasty way the work of the secretary in indexing and printing and publishing the journals and debates and I do not suppose that many of you members can really realize what that work is. I do not want you to think I am trying to make a mountain out of a mole hill. It is a matter personally of no concern to me whatever. I am not charged with the responsibility. I do feel that I ought to tell you what I think about it because I have had experience. I do not suppose you can realize the amount of work the secretary is going to be charged with under the resolution we passed yesterday and under the resolutions concerning the publishing and printing of the debates and journals. The original resolution only provided for five people, one of whom would be engaged for the most part—although when he was not engaged he could be used elsewhere—in the work of the committee on Submission. That leaves three clerks and the secretary to do the work of indexing and proofreading. I provided a really expert proofreader, and in my judgment there ought to be at least one more clerk, and the amendment that I prepared provided for that. I will state to you frankly if you do not want any more clerks the resolution is easily amended. I have no personal interest in the name of any person inserted. Now my amendments are as follows:

In line 1, strike out "Saturday" and insert "Friday".

In line 2, strike out "1" and insert "7".

In line 29 strike out "the month of June" and insert "thirty days from June 7, 1912".

In line 23 strike out "during the month of June" and insert "until July 7".

In line 30 change "16" to "20".

In line 34 change "this date" to "June 7".

In line 41 change "1" to "7".

In line 58 change "1" to "7".

In line 17 after "Morrison" insert "S. E. Neff".

Now, if the committee's report is voted down and we return to my original resolution, we can as easily amend that as any other. I think it will be much easier to consider and we will fix the whole matter in a few moments.

Mr. KERR: Your resolution will be open to amendment?

Mr. DOTY: Yes; I have amendments to offer myself, which I have read.

Mr. RILEY: We have clean copies of the last resolution.

Mr. DOTY: Clean copies don't make so much difference.

Mr. RILEY: Well, we have no copies of the other at all.

Mr. DOTY: Resolution No. 134 is upon your desk

Retention of Employees through Recess of Convention.

and has been for a week or ten days. There are more members know what is in that than in the other resolution.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution is on page 50 of the journal.

Mr. DOTY: Yes, and it has been printed in bill form. It is pending before the Convention and is on everybody's desk, including that of the member from Washington.

Mr. ROEHM: This resolution was sent to the committee on Employees and we spent an hour and a half or two hours on it. We couldn't agree upon certain names and finally we did agree to report it back in the shape it is now, allowing the secretary to make the appointments. The remainder of the report is substantially the original resolution.

Mr. DOTY: You were just referring to us the part the committee couldn't settle?

Mr. ROEHM: That part will have to be attended to here.

Mr. WINN: I want to call attention to one very important thing. I notice that the services of the postmaster are continued for ten days. If I understand it the postmaster will be required to go to the postoffice and file a list with the postmaster of the delegates to the Convention and where to forward our mail. Do you not think it would be fair to put the assistant postmaster in to aid him in doing that arduous work?

Mr. ROEHM: We tried to follow that report as well as we could. The date, June 16, has not been changed, although it is a week later than when the resolution was first introduced.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I hope the report of the committee will be agreed to. We have heard a great deal of argument during the Convention on short ballot and responsibility. Now place a man in charge and let him be responsible. The secretary should be allowed to select the help he needs.

Mr. LAMPSON: I am credibly informed that the secretary does not desire the responsibility of making these appointments. I am authorized to so state.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: That does not change my ideas. We should hold him responsible for the work, and he is the only one who should be required to appoint the employees.

Mr. DOTY: The gentleman from Crawford is entirely right. And if you go back to the beginning of the Convention you will find it is the very stand I took and one that the member from Crawford didn't take at that time. Members of the Convention said at that time to the secretary that he had no right to say who his help should be, but that they would hold him responsible for the work. That is the way we began and we put certain employees in his office and compelled him to take them whether he wanted them or not. I was against that. It is wrong in principle.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: It is wrong now.

Mr. DOTY: It is not wrong now if we were right then. If it is right then, why is it not right now? Why cannot the Convention pick out the helpers from that same set of people? Another thing, you say you are going to allow the secretary to appoint them and you only permit him to appoint half of them. Personally I don't care who appoints.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: The secretary knows who is best qualified.

Mr. DOTY: Yes, and he could have picked out a fair set of men at the beginning and he could have secured better work out of the employees than he has obtained if he had had the selection and control over them. Your directors don't come around and tell you whom to put in as paying teller.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: What was it that determined the committee to remove from the resolution the name of the expert, Mr. Nichols, and replace him with an inexperienced proofreader?

Mr. ROEHM: In the first place, I do not believe that Rebrassier is so inexperienced a man. Secondly, we did not know who Mr. Nichols was.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: It is generally conceded that Mr. Nichols is an expert in the business for which he was suggested in the report of the committee, and I have no idea that the gentleman who replaces him has anything like as large experience in that direction. I think that Mr. Nichols would certainly be the better man and I move that his name be replaced.

Mr. DOTY: Just vote down that report and you will do the same thing.

The report of the committee was disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DOTY: I now offer the amendment that I read a moment ago. Some of the proposed changes are made necessary by the postponement of the date of recess. After this is adopted we can make any further amendment if we so desire.

The amendment offered by Mr. Doty was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I want to offer an amendment to Mr. Doty's amendment. I do it with a certain amount of hesitancy and embarrassment because it involves striking out a name which is now in and substituting another. Before offering the amendment I want to testify to the hard work that Mr. Morrison has done and the good service he has rendered to the Convention and my high personal admiration for him as a man, but some of the friends of the other employees have handed this amendment to me and asked that they be given an opportunity to vote for Mr. Wulff, who is also at the desk. I have known Mr. Wulff for many years and worked with him in many special tasks and it gives me pleasure to offer this amendment which inserts Mr. Wulff's name in place of that of Mr. Morrison.

Mr. TANNEHILL: I want to second that for Mr. Wulff. I do not do it because I have anything against any other clerk. I think they have all been efficient and I think the Convention has a right to select whom they want to remain.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert after "Ira I. Morrison" the name of S. E. Neff. Strike out in lines 16 and 17 the name of "Ira I. Morrison" and substitute in lieu thereof the name of "Ernest G. Wulff".

Retention of Employes through Recess of Convention.

Mr. DOTY: Mr. Morrison has been employed by this Convention and whatever efficiency he has had you have seen. He has been paid for his services and up to this moment, assuming he got his pay today, we owe him nothing. We are not under any obligation to hire him or any person else. There is no obligation about this at all. It is very embarrassing to stand here and attempt to compare two gentlemen who are right in front of us, and for both of whom I have high esteem, but we are up to the employment of a clerk for the work that he can do, not the work he has done, and, based upon the best experience we can find about our staff, I will take the judgment of any member of the Convention if he will take the time and trouble to investigate the efficiency and experience and knowledge that Mr. Morrison has. Mr. Wulff has had experience for one session upon a job that was absolutely created and absolutely unnecessary. That job over in the corner and that job at that desk ought to have been combined. Mr. Wulff ought to have done both of those jobs and he could have done it. He is a man of ability. But the kind of work the secretary has called upon Mr. Wulff to do has not given him the necessary experience. It was not his fault, but it has not given him the necessary experience to do the kind of work that Mr. Galbreath wants in the next three months.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: Is there an employe by the name of Neff?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: If there is no objection I would like to change my amendment and insert Mr. Wulff in place of Mr. Neff.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I oppose this change in the amendment. Mr. Neff has been here during the Convention and I think the members will realize that he has been a very valuable assistant to the secretary. He is the one who has been doing the research work and has been very satisfactory all the way through. I shall oppose very much substituting Mr. Wulff's name for that of Mr. Neff.

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I will offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert after "S. E. Neff" the name of "Ernest G. Wulff".

Mr. SMITH, of Hamilton: I regret very much that we cannot keep every employe that we have permanently. And as it has been suggested that we have not retained quite enough assistance, I offer this amendment and will not move to strike out anything.

Mr. TETLOW: I would like to hear the names of those who are to be retained read.

The SECRETARY: Ira I. Morrison, S. E. Neff, Ernest G. Wulff, Ella M. Scriven, Julia E. Kersting, Katherine Kellar and George Cartwright.

Mr. TETLOW: Originally, employing these people was not a very small job. It was a thankless proposition and one that required a great deal of care and attention. We were able to select employes that have been efficient and good conscientious men and women. It seems to me, after looking over the entire work that this committee on Employes has done, that we made some mistakes. A person can see after he has had some experience in doing work that he might have done that which would have been better. I think it is an outrage, I don't care who is retained for these positions, to employ seven people along with the secretary to carry on this work that has been laid down by our resolution. It is an expenditure of the state's money that is absolutely unnecessary. We reduced the time for which they were to be retained, and I can't figure out why the secretary with three good clerks cannot complete the work that has been laid down by August 26. Take the matter which we have upon our desks and in our desks. There is a resolution to pay a whole lot of money to have that packed up and sent home. One man can do it in a day or two. I think we had better not fight so much over who is to be retained as to keep down retaining too many. I want the work done right and done well, and I want to see the work of the Convention perfected, but I don't want to spend more money than is necessary to do it.

Mr. DOTY: There is a good deal of force in what the member from Columbiana [Mr. TETLOW] has said. I for one want at this time, probably the last time I shall ever have an opportunity to compliment the committee on Employes for the excellent work they did in the early part of this Convention. I think the Convention owes a debt of gratitude to that committee for the work it did. And there is a good deal of truth in what the member said about piling up expense. I am not much on piling up expense myself. My resolution called for five people and I think that is not enough. I made an amendment to add one and since then there has been an amendment to add another. There is just so much work to be done. You might put twenty-five on temporarily and they might get through it in a very short time. I think when the work is done that the employes will be discharged by whoever is in charge.

Mr. PETTIT: But will they do it?

Mr. DOTY: Of course they will. Nobody believes that the president and secretary of the Convention are going to keep anybody when they are not needed.

Mr. PETTIT: That is what is being done now.

Mr. DOTY: You may be right about that, but I think you will find that when the work is done the employes will be retired.

Mr. BROWN, of Highland: There cannot be any objection to the larger number if the provision is for them to be relieved from duty as soon as the work is done.

Mr. TETLOW: I don't see how seven employes can work in the secretary's office on the work that we have to do. I don't see how they can be used to advantage.

Mr. McCLELLAND: It is difficult to discharge any employes after they have rendered as efficient service as they have here. But that same situation may continue. The president and the secretary will find it hard work to discharge some of the employes and you will see that the whole bunch will be retained until the last advertisements are in, so that they will simply be employed for the whole time. I therefore move that the names in lines 16 and 17 of the Doty resolution be stricken out and the corresponding lines in the committee's report be substituted, "For this work, the secretary of the Convention is hereby authorized to retain three employes of the present force to be continued at their present compensation."

Retention of Employes through Recess of Convention.

Mr. DOTY: I do not want to raise a point of order to be captious, but that should be in writing.

Mr. McCLELLAND: It is in writing.

Mr. DOTY: The motion is not in writing, but I am willing to wait until it is and I do not want to hurry the member.

Mr. FESS: There is not anyone on the floor who would hesitate to vote for all the help that we need, but if there is any way by which we can get along with less, or by which we can find out just how much we need, we would like to know it. Every member would vote for any person who has been selected purely on account of efficiency. Now there is a person suggested as a proofreader and I would like to vote for that person. But at the same time I would like to know whether it is understood that when this work is done these people are to be discharged without continuing for an indefinite time. It seems to me that ought to be clearly understood by everybody here.

Mr. DOTY: I am preparing an amendment that will make that absolutely clear and definite and I will read it in just a moment.

Mr. FESS: With that point in view there is no use in higgling here and killing time. The Convention is ready and anxious to do whatever is necessary for a proper ending.

Mr. DOTY: I would ask the member from Knox if this amendment that I am proposing will not meet his approbation and settle the whole question to his satisfaction as well as to the satisfaction of everybody else: "The president, vice president and secretary are hereby authorized to discontinue the services of any employe provided in this resolution at any time."

Mr. McCLELLAND: I do not withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STILWELL: I move that the amendment of the delegate from Knox be laid on the table.

The motion was carried.

Mr. DOTY: Now I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

After line 58 insert:

"Section 8. The president, vice president and secretary are hereby authorized to discontinue the services of any employe provided for in this resolution at any time."

Mr. DOTY: I now demand the previous question on the whole thing.

Mr. MILLER, of Fairfield: I hope the amendment will not be carried.

The PRESIDENT: The president would like to ask the member from Cuyahoga if he will not withdraw that motion, as the president stated to the member from Fairfield that he would give him an opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. DOTY: I have no objection to withdrawing the demand for the previous question for the gentleman to offer the amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 4 strike out "10" and insert "25".

The PRESIDENT: That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. DOTY: Let us dispose of my amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Doty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: Now the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Crawford.

The amendment offered by Mr. Miller, of Crawford, was again read.

Mr. DOTY: I now demand the previous question on the whole thing.

The PRESIDENT: The president would like to ask the gentleman from Cuyahoga to withhold that. The president promised to recognize the member from Stark [Mr. WEYBRECHT].

Mr. DOTY: All right.

Mr. LAMPSON: Let us act on this amendment first.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Crawford [Mr. MILLER] was agreed to.

Mr. WEYBRECHT: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

In line 17 after "Ira I. Morrison" insert "H. L. Rebrassier".

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DOTY: I demand the previous question on the whole resolution.

The main question was ordered.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. SMITH] to insert "Ernest G. Wulff" after the name "S. E. Neff" was agreed to.

The amendment offered by the delegate from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY] was agreed to.

Mr. KRAMER: Now I think there should be a separation there, and that section 3 should be voted on separately.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection the separation will be made and the question is on the adoption of the resolution except section 3.

Mr. CASSIDY: There is an expenditure of money involved and the yeas and nays must be called upon that.

Mr. LAMPSON: Upon the resolution as a whole.

The resolution, except section 3, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The question now is "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 60, nays 20, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Antrim,	Halfhill,	Miller, Crawford,
Beyer,	Harbarger,	Moore,
Brown, Highland,	Harris Ashtabula,	Nye,
Brown, Pike,	Harter, Huron,	Okey,
Cody,	Harter, Stark,	Partington,

Retention of Employes through Recess of Convention.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Beatty, Morrow,	Kramer,	Tannehill,
Cassidy,	Mauck,	Tetlow,
Colton,	McClelland,	Wagner,
Johnson, Madison,	Miller, Fairfield,	Walker,
Johnson, Williams,	Norris,	Winn,
Jones,	Riley,	Wise.
Keller,	Stokes,

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. TANNEHILL: A division was demanded and we have not voted on that section.

The PRESIDENT: The vote was taken first on the resolution with the exception of section 3 and then a vote was taken upon the passage of the resolution as a whole, including section 3.

Mr. KRAMER: When did we have a chance to vote against section 3 by itself. I would like to know about that.

Mr. LAMPSON: There could not be any division of the resolution.

Mr. DOTY: I now move that we adjourn to reconvene August 26, 1912.

The motion was carried and the Convention adjourned to meet August 26, 1912, at two o'clock p. m.

EIGHTY-THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MONDAY, August 26, 1912.

The Convention was called to order pursuant to adjournment and opened with prayer by the delegate from Knox county, the Rev. Mr. McClelland.

The journal of the legislative day of June 6 was read and approved.

Mr. LAMPSON: In a minute or two I shall be ready to offer a resolution which the secretary is now preparing.

Mr. DOTY: There is a resolution that it is necessary for us to pass and I would like to offer it at this time to get it out of the way.

The resolution was read as follows:
Resolution No. 163:

Resolved, That when the Convention adjourns on August 26, 1912, it be without day.

Mr. DOTY: This is merely to carry out the rule we adopted, and it will require at least a majority to adjourn; and so that we shall not be crowded at the end I offer the resolution at this time to get it out of the way.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: There is no objection, provided there is no intention on the part of anyone to bring forward any matter of business and insist on it being acted upon this afternoon. I can conceive of a condition arising which would necessitate and render desirable an adjournment. I do not know that I am putting an interpretation upon it that is entirely warranted, but I do not see the necessity of such a resolution.

Mr. DOTY: I had supposed it was apparent to everybody why such a resolution was necessary. This Convention by special rule has declared that we cannot adjourn without day unless sixty members vote affirmatively on the roll call, and I am trying to get that roll call out of the way now. It seems to me that we all know that this Convention is quite capable of looking out for its own rights.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I was aware of that, but I thought it was a good thing to watch in time. I do not mean to assume that there is anything at all out of line. I supposed that it was the understanding of every member of the Convention that after a little formal discussion we would adjourn. That was my understanding, and from expressions I have heard from members I think it was the general understanding.

Mr. FESS: May I ask the gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. Dory] a question?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. FESS: Is it the meaning of your resolution that when we adjourn today we adjourn without day?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

Mr. FESS: That means that we must keep in session until we are ready to adjourn?

Mr. DOTY: We could recess until tomorrow if it were necessary. That could be determined later. The member from Ashtabula [Mr. HARRIS] has set forth my understanding of what is to be done, but if the Convention desires to do something that will take a week we can recess from day to day, or we can reconsider and rescind this resolution.

Mr. FESS: I am in favor of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on suspending the rules that the resolution may be put on its passage. The rules were suspended.

The PRESIDENT: Now the question is "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were regularly demanded, taken, and resulted—yeas 85, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Baum,	Harbarger,	Miller, Ottawa,
Beatty, Morrow,	Harris, Ashtabula,	Nye,
Beatty, Wood,	Harter, Huron,	Partington,
Beyer,	Henderson,	Peck,

Halfhill,

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LAMPSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 164:

Resolved, That the president of the Convention is hereby authorized to certify to the next general assembly the following claims for payment:

Mr. LAMPSON: Right at that point the claims in detail would appear. I have three or four hundred of them in my hand and others have come to the office and are in process of being typewritten. I ask the secretary not to read the claims in detail, but that he read the rest of the resolution.

The remaining part of the resolution was read as follows:

That the president is authorized to make such additions to the above list as may be necessary to correct omissions growing out of lack of reports of claims for newspaper advertising.

Mr. LAMPSON: Under authority of the Convention contracts were made with four hundred and ninety-one newspapers to advertise three hundred inches of matter and to circulate the supplements containing the amendments, together with the explanations—in other words, the address to the people. All but a few of these papers have reported the execution of their contract, but there are a few, perhaps half a dozen or so, that have made no report. Some of the reports have come in today and very likely the remainder will come in within a day or two. A few have neglected to include the supplement. That is the reason why the final paragraph of the resolution is made as it is so that the reports from those which have made these failures can be added. Nothing can be added except where they have contracts which they have executed, and they must prove their execution.

I do not know whether the Convention cares to hear one of these contracts read or not, but as it is very brief and as we have the time, I will read one. Here is one from Fulton county:

WAUSEON, OHIO, July 19, 1912.

The committee on Submission, of the Ohio Constitutional Convention, Herbert S. Bigelow, president, 52 Blymer building, Cincinnati, Ohio:

The Democratic Expositor hereby agrees to accept a contract for publishing the advertising matter of the Constitutional Convention upon the following terms:

Space: Three columns, 20 inches long, once a week for each of five weeks.

Price: Payment for the aggregate of fifteen columns (300 inches) to be $108.

Date of: In weekly papers the advertisements to be inserted in each of the weeks beginning July 29, August 5, 12, 19 and 26.

In daily papers insertion to be made on five successive Saturdays, viz: August 3, 10, 17, 24 and 31.

Supplements: We will insert in all of the editions containing the second advertisement supplement as authorized by the Convention.

We hereby authorize your Convention committee to order for us one thousand copies of said supplement to be dated August 9, and to carry the name of our paper as follows: The Democratic Expositor.

We understand that the price for these supplements is to be $6.25 a thousand, express prepaid, and that this price to be paid to the Western Newspaper Union by us, but that the amount paid by us for said supplement shall be added to our bill of $108 to be paid by the Convention.

We understand that we are at liberty to purchase these supplements elsewhere, or to print them ourselves, and in this event we shall be allowed $6.25 per thousand, but if we do so we agree to submit proof of same for approval of your committee before publication.

We further agree to terms of payment as provided by resolution of the Convention, viz., that each publisher shall accept his equal, ratable share of whatever funds the Convention may have left, and that the balance due each publisher shall be certified by the Constitutional Convention to the next Ohio legislature for payment, upon the usual proof of publication.

H. D. MEISTER.

As to the supplements, the option was given to the papers to purchase them or to print them themselves in their own offices, and a great many of them printed them themselves. If they purchased them from the Western Newspaper Union they paid for them.

Each newspaper has furnished in duplicate a statement of having executed the contract, the dates when the advertising was published, etc. The total is 491 newspapers and the space aggregates 141,300 inches, one column wide. The total number of supplements is 1,126,544. There are ten or a dozen papers that have not reported as to the supplements. They may have reported the advertisements but neglected to report the supplements, and that is the error we have to correct. The total cost is about $62,000. We have had it added by the adding machine and as now reported it amounts to $61,176.18. That is the total of all the advertising and for the circulation of a million or more supplements. The exact number of supplements, as I have said, is 1,126,544. The total cost of all that has been $61,176.18, to which will be added the corrections for the supplements not reported and the very few papers that have not made reports.

All of these reports are on file in the president's office. The clerk in there worked until two o'clock this morning transcribing and they are in this form.

Now the advertising is the same in all the country papers and in all the city papers. The only difference is in the larger cities, where the charge would be larger, such papers as the Cincinnati Enquirer and the papers of Columbus and Cleveland. The cost does not exceed $400 for any one of those large papers, even where they have 600,000 circulation. So far as I am concerned, being somewhat familiar with the newspaper business, I am ready to say this amount of advertising has been done for much less than any similar amount was ever done in the state of Ohio.

Mr. HALFHILL: May I ask the gentleman a question?

The PRESIDENT: Does the gentleman yield to a question from the gentleman from Allen?

Mr. LAMPSON: Certainly.

Mr. HALFHILL: The details of this matter were in the hands of a special committee?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: Who were the members of the special committee?

Mr. LAMPSON: The president, Mr. Stevens and myself.

Mr. HALFHILL: Are you familiar with all the contracts that were made?

Mr. LAMPSON: No, sir; I am not. I am fairly familiar with those applying to the country papers, with here and there an exception growing out of some misunderstanding or failure to get the advertising. There were one or two cases where the advertising failed to reach the paper in time. I only know of one such case, but there may be others.

Mr. HALFHILL: The resolution submitted by Mr. Doty, if I remember correctly, provided that commercial rates might be used.

Mr. LAMPSON: That was used in case of the city papers.

Mr. HALFHILL: What was that rate?

Newspaper Advertising of Work of Convention.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not know.

Mr. DOTY: That varied with each paper.

Mr. LAMPSON: It varied according to the circulation of the paper. In one case it was $1.54 an inch. That was the Cleveland Plain Dealer. I do not carry all of those in my mind, but they are all here. All the contracts with the rates charged are on file. I can only say that I have looked at them only to the extent to satisfy myself that there was not anything exorbitant about them. I was surprised that a great newspaper like the Cincinnati Enquirer should have a bill of less than $500.

Mr. HALFHILL: Another inquiry: Did the subcommittee approve of the advertising as it went in?

Mr. LAMPSON: The subcommittee individually went over the list of Ohio papers and checked off such papers as it was thought might fairly come within the rule. We were limited by the resolution to five hundred. We reached four hundred and ninety-one.

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not believe you caught my question. I want to know if the subcommittee passed upon and approved the form of the advertisement, the copy?

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not think they did entirely.

Mr. HALFHILL: I call attention to the advertisement in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of August 24, which sets forth how to vote affirmatively on the initiative and referendum and municipal home rule.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not know that I have seen that. I do not know whether I have or have not. The subcommittee was kept very busy. I found when I answered the inquiries from the various newspapers over the state and the correspondence with the other members that I had very little time for anything else.

Mr. DOTY: There is nothing untrue in that advertisement, is there?

Mr. HALFHILL: But why put it in that way?

Mr. PECK: Do you know that that is official, Mr. Doty?

Mr. DOTY: Yes; it is.

Mr. HALFHILL: If the gentleman from Ashtabula [Mr. LAMPSON] is through with his remarks I want to say a few words.

Mr. LAMPSON: I want to make as complete a statement as I can. If any gentleman desires to ask a question I am at his service.

Mr. HALFHILL: Will you yield until I can state a matter of personal privilege?

Mr. LAMPSON: You can bring that up later if it is a matter of personal privilege. I don't know anything about it but the report should go in first.

The PRESIDENT: The member does not now yield.

Mr. LAMPSON: I do not yield until I see whether other members desire to ask questions.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Was the same matter published in the daily and in the weekly paper and was it paid for at the same price?

Mr. LAMPSON: Every country paper was paid $108. We found it impracticable to discriminate. We got a great deal more than our money's worth in some papers and less in some others, but that is true in all legal advertising. Every lawyer who has legal advertising to do knows that he often gives an advertisement to some little paper that circulates only in a township or two, but the legal rate is the same as if it were published in a paper of much wider circulation.

Mr. KING: Was the copy of the advertising matter furnished the different papers prepared by the committee and was it the same in every paper, or was there a difference?

Mr. LAMPSON: As far as I know it was the same. In my part of the state it was the same.

Mr. KING: And is the bill presented from the newspapers of Ohio for advertising that copy?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, for advertising that copy.

Mr. KING: Does it have anything to do with this matter that the gentleman brought up?

Mr. LAMPSON: I don't think so.

Mr. KING: I understood that the resolution of the Convention near the closing day prescribed the form of the advertising explicitly.

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes, sir. For instance the form of the ballot was the same and the address was the same everywhere. As a matter of fact these papers circulated this address without any specific compensation at all. The price of $6.25 per thousand copies was not expected to any more than cover the fair cost of printing, and if the paper printed them itself and it had a circulation of only two or three thousand it wouldn't pay for setting up the type. This $108 in a general way was supposed to include that service, although no specific rate was made for it. Now are there any other questions? Anyone can see the contracts and the reports in the office if they desire to look at them. You will notice that the bills ran very much the same—$111, $109, $108, $118, $116, $111. They varied only according to the number of supplements circulated until you get down to the large city papers. If there are no other questions, I move that the rules be suspended and that we vote on the adoption of this resolution.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. HALFHILL: Now I desire to ask a few questions.

The PRESIDENT: Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMPSON: Yes.

The PRESIDENT: The member yields.

Mr. HALFHILL: Your resolution is very much in blank form at the end. Does it contemplate giving authority to the president to add anything to that except newspaper contracts?

Mr. LAMPSON: Nothing whatever other than newspaper contracts that have been filled, but which have not yet reached the president's office. There are only a few of those. Some came in today and twenty or thirty came in last night. Today we have some telegrams from newspapers saying they will forward theirs.

Mr. FESS: I would like to ask whether the resolution that instructed this committee to proceed to get these contracts did not carry with it the authority on the part of the committee to do the work, and whether that committee didn't have Mr. Halfhill upon it, and whether we did not instruct this committee of three to proceed to do the work?

Mr. LAMPSON: The statement is correct.

Mr. FESS: I am in favor of it.

Mr. LAMPSON: I want to say one word farther. The other day a circular which is being circulated in my county and which emanates from Columbus was handed to me. It says that this advertising bill that was provided for would amount to a half million dollars. That was simply a gross misrepresentation of the truth, a base slander. The fact is, as I have reported already, it reaches all told, including the million supplements, to about $60,000.

Newspaper Advertising of Work of Convention.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Do you know what the cost of publishing the advertising of the last amendments that were submitted by the legislature amounted to?

Mr. LAMPSON: It was away up in the thousands of dollars. I did know, but I do not carry those things in my mind.

Mr. DOTY: As I recall it, it was $83,000. There were three or four amendments submitted under the same sort of arrangement. There was no appropriation in advance to pay for it. The secretary of state put the advertising in the newspapers and they had to wait until the legislature made the appropriation. The legislature appropriated the money and paid for it.

Mr. LAMPSON: That is not the one that I had in my mind. The one I was thinking of amounted to a great deal more than that. In the state of New York the advertising bill amounted to a million and a quarter.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I wanted to get the comparison so that we can see that this is a very moderate amount.

Mr. LAMPSON: It certainly is. The secretary informs me that when the three amendments were submitted by the legislature a few years ago the amount was $91,000.

Mr. DOTY: That is the one I was trying to remember.

Mr. LAMPSON: Referring to what I said a moment ago, the president has just received this telegram, which I will read simply to confirm what I have said in regard to a few of the reports yet out:

Cleveland, O, August 26, 1912.

HERBERT S. BIGELOW,

Constitutional Convention, Columbus, O.

Your letter of 14th referring to Convention advertising came while I was absent; was mislaid; shown me not five minutes ago. Our bill is $108 advertising, $81.25 for 13,000 supplements. Please include it and will send regular bill forms by special delivery at once.

The Catholic Universe.

A. H. LYON.

Mr. LAMPSON: Here are two more communications that have come by special delivery, and I think we shall have them all by night. The intention of the resolution is to confine this strictly to newspaper advertising. I will read it again:

That the president is authorized to make such additions to the above list as may be necessary to correct omissions growing out of lack of reports of claims for newspaper advertising.

Mr. Lampson moved that the rule be suspended and the resolution be considered at once.

The motion was carried.

The question being "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I understand the secretary has the report as to the situation of our work which should be read at this time.

The PRESIDENT: The secretary will now read his report.

The report was read as follows:

FINANCIAL.

There has been kept from the opening of the Convention in the office a carefully itemized record of all expenditures and the duplicate copies of all bills and vouchers. The accounts have been kept in a loose-leaf record book. We are a little proud of it. For the very creditable form in which it appears the Convention is indebted to Miss Julia E. Kersting.

Following is a summary of expenditures to August 26:

Salaries of members.....	$119,000 00
Mileage of members.....	11,435 74
Salary of secretary.....	1,941 66
Per diem of sergeant-at-arms.....	810 00
Per diem of employees.....	39,663 00
Reporting debates	5,000 00
Printing	6,743 44
Contingent expenses.....	6,107 25

Total

Appropriation	$200,000 00
Balance	9,298 91

On June 7, shortly before the adjournment of the Convention to meet again August 26, a resolution was adopted providing for the employment of seven clerks to assist the president and secretary, one clerk for one month to assist the historian and reference librarian, and five other persons for five days "to procure boxes and all necessary material for packing and shipping documents to delegates."

The following work was specifically assigned to the direction of the president and secretary in said resolution:

1. The issuing of pamphlets and documents and the preparation and placing of such advertising matter as the Convention shall authorize.
2. The indexing, proofreading and publication of the journal of the Convention.

Report of Secretary.

3. The editing, proofreading, indexing and publication of the debates of the Convention.

Promptly after the adjournment of the Convention the secretary had published five thousand copies of the constitution of Ohio with amendments proposed by the Constitutional Convention of 1912, authorized May 31. On June 22, five thousand copies of the Address to the People, in newspaper supplement form, were published for distribution. Three days later fifty thousand additional copies were purchased. This action was made necessary by a demand that came promptly after the adjournment of the Convention from almost every section of the state, for copies of the proposed amendments. Arrangements had not then been completed for the publication of the one hundred and sixty-nine thousand copies of the Address to the People in pamphlet form, and in the judgment of the president and secretary this purchase was warranted by the emergency presented. Later these pamphlets were published and distributed to the members of the Convention and citizens of the state. The first consignment was received from the printer July 16, and the last were delivered at the office of the secretary August 1. To meet insistent demands a second edition of the constitution of Ohio with proposed amendments was published and six thousand copies of the Address to the People in newspaper supplement form were purchased. Altogether there were delivered for distribution:

Address to the People in newspaper supplement form	71,000
Address to the People in pamphlet form	169,000
Constitution of Ohio with proposed amendments	10,000
Total	250,000

In addition to this there were purchased and distributed from the president's office 44,400 copies of the Address to the People, raising the total to 294,400 copies. Through the newspapers of Ohio, 1,177,559 copies were distributed, making a grand total of 1,471,959 copies. The work of no previous state convention of Ohio, and perhaps of no previous state constitutional convention in the United States, was so well advertised.

The preparation and placing of the advertising matter was done under the direction of the Committee on Submission and Address to the People and the president. In the office of the latter were let the contracts with the press of the state and advertising was checked up as it appeared in the different newspapers.

The work of indexing and proofreading the journal is under way in the office of the secretary. All but the index is in type and has been proofread. The greater portion of it has been printed. Its practical completion has been prevented by delay in printing.

The editing, proofreading, indexing and publication of the debates have also been retarded by delay in printing. Only about five hundred pages of type have been set to date, and as no forms have been printed, it has been impossible even to commence the indexing. The editing is well under way and after final adjournment will be pushed to completion with the utmost promptitude consistent with creditable work.

The historian and reference librarian early in July delivered to the office of the secretary photographs and typewritten sketches of the members of the Convention. Since that time, a few photographs have been added, making the collection practically complete. It is the desire of the secretary, without additional expense to the Convention or the state, to arrange and edit this valuable material and supplement it with a brief history of the Constitutional Conventions of Ohio. Its publication may be left to the future.

Since the adjournment of the Convention June 7, the office of the secretary has been open each week day for the distribution of literature, the answering of correspondence and other routine work.

Circular letters and copies of two pamphlets, to which reference has already been made, were sent to all public libraries in the state and to the presidents of county teachers' institutes. Copies of these letters are submitted herewith. Many appreciative responses were received and assurances were given that in a number of these institutes space on programs would be given for the discussion of the work of the Convention. In that work the educational agencies of the state have manifested a lively interest and it is believed that prospects for its approval have not been diminished through intelligent investigation and study.

So much, in a very cursory way, for what has been accomplished to date. Much remains to be done. The index to the journal must be finished. That should not take long. The work on the debates is only fairly begun. Not a line of the index has been written. It is possible that some of the members of this Convention do not fully appreciate all that the work of editing and indexing these debates implies. Michigan paid for the indexing of the journal and debates of her Convention the sum of $1,950. Your secretary suggested to the committee on Printing and Publication a plan by which the work could be done without extra expense. This seemed to meet the approval of the committee. The details of the plan are not a matter of interest now. Before this Convention adjourned it most generously provided help for the office of the secretary. It is not his purpose to ask a continuance of this generosity. The money that might have gone into the work that remains to be done has already been spent. The limit of the appropriation for this Convention is in sight as is also the very probable contingency of an appeal to the emergency board. For the latter, same provision should be made before final adjournment.

The time is at hand for the practice of that economy to which eloquent tribute was paid on more than one occasion in the proceedings of the Convention.

Report of Secretary—Advertising Work of Convention.

In view of these considerations the following suggestions are respectfully submitted.

1. A supplemental arrangement should be made with the printer which will insure the printing and binding of the debates not later than December 31, 1912.

2. Although this work does not usually go with the office, the secretary will undertake, without assistance, to index the debates and complete the index of the journal.

3. The continuance of Mr. E. S. Nichols to proofread the debates and assist in completing the editorial work is recommended as not only desirable but necessary.

4. The continuance of Miss Julia Kersting is recommended at her present pay for ten days to assist in work incident to the final adjournment of this Convention.

5. The continuance of Ira I. Morrison to the close of the current month to work on the index of the journal is also recommended.

6. Some provision should probably be made for the care of two rooms for the secretary and his assistant.

7. A sum of money, not to exceed four hundred dollars, might be set aside to employ additional help when it is needed, such help to be employed with the approval of the president and secretary.

It is believed that no argument is needed to show that the assistance here recommended is necessary. If, however, it is thought best to reduce or omit entirely the sum of four hundred dollars for additional help, the secretary will put his hand to the pen and prepare by this ancient method the manuscript for the index to the debates and journal and carry on any incidental correspondence that may come to his office.

Mr. DOTY: It is understood that this communication from the secretary will be a part of the journal, but for fear that it may not be I move that it be made a part of today's journal.

The motion was carried.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Do I understand that these pamphlets were available to others than members?

The SECRETARY: Yes; there has not been any request sent to the office of the secretary that has not been honored. In many instances there was a greater number asked for than we could furnish, but we have always furnished some.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Did the Ohio Bankers Association ask for any pamphlets?

The SECRETARY: Yes.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: Were they supplied?

The SECRETARY: Yes. I do not know whether they got as many as they desired, but we supplied them in part.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: I would like to read here from a letter from the Ohio Bankers Association. A pamphlet was sent out and some of the members objected to it going out under the stamp of the Ohio Bankers Association, and when I asked if they were sent out by the authority of the Bankers Association I received this letter:

Columbus, Ohio, August 14, 1912.

Hon. GEORGE W. MILLER, President,

The Farmers & Citizens Bank & Savings Co.
Bucyrus, Ohio.

My Dear Sir:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 13th inst. regarding the pamphlet containing proposed amendments of Ohio's constitution.

These pamphlets were sent out from the association headquarters simply for the purpose of putting the proposed amendments before the bankers of Ohio. We have had so many requests for copies of these amendments that we thought it would be an accommodation if we were to put out something of the kind, and these were the only ones available.

The arguments are not from the association. We have read only a few and while it is my opinion there are several that the Association would approve, there are also some it would not.

I would be pleased to have you advise me if there is anything objectionable in the pamphlet.

Very truly yours,

S. B. RANKIN,
Secretary.

I simply want to mention this at this time because I think it is due the members of the Ohio Bankers Association that this explanation be made, that the secretary of the association assumed the authority to send out these pamphlets with the stamp of the association.

The SECRETARY: If it is not considered out of order I would supplement my answer to your question, to emphasize the fact that no person has made a request at any time for a copy of these amendments when he has not gotten them. My recollection is that this is the Private Bankers Association.

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: No; this is the Ohio Bankers Association, including all the banks, national and state.

The SECRETARY: I am certain that many of the bankers of that association have received the pamphlet, and I want to apologize for my somewhat extended report on this ground: There have been so many misstatements in regard to when these addresses to the people were available that I thought they should be corrected. There was one statement that none of them were available until the 19th of July, while my report shows they were available on the 22nd of June.

Mr. HOSKINS: I want the privilege of asking Mr. Miller a question. I did not gather the force of the statement made by Mr. Miller. There was so much confusion. I have examined this letter now and I want to know what excuse the president of the Ohio State Bankers Association gave for putting the stamp of this association upon that so-called argument?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: There was no excuse. I wrote repeatedly to the secretary asking whether this pamphlet was sent out by authority of the association, and that letter was the answer. He wanted to know whether there was any objection to it, and I answered but he has not replied. In addition to that I wrote the president of the association asking him if the Ohio Bankers Association would bear the odium of putting out such a circular and he has not answered that letter.

Retention of Employes after Adjournment of Convention.

Mr. HOSKINS: Then, if I understand this so-called circular it is simply a voluntary act of some fellow who happens to hold the job of secretary of the Ohio Bankers Association?

Mr. MILLER, of Crawford: And that secretary is president of a private bank.

Mr. DOTY: Ah, now we see it!

Mr. HOSKINS: All I want to say is to comment upon that circular and the source from which it seems to come. According to my judgment it is from about the same source from which a good deal of the other literature put out in criticism of the Convention has come. I am glad to have the explanation that the Ohio State Bankers Association, as an association, is not responsible for it, but that the secretary alone is responsible, and that the secretary is the president of a private bank which one of our amendments touches.

Mr. DOTY: I do not suppose we want a history of all the circulars against the Convention, but I want to say a word about a circular that is being prepared. You have not got it yet, but you will get it. It purports to be signed by the Consumers League. The president is a farmer and the vice president is an ice dealer. They had a meeting last week and they are getting out a circular on the Home Rule proposition. That circular is being printed in Cleveland and is paid for by the public service corporations of Ohio. Now I have another resolution that I want to offer.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 165:

Resolved, That the secretary of the Convention is hereby authorized to continue E. S. Nichols, Ira I. Morrison and Ella M. Scriven in the service of the Convention for the purpose of preparing copy of debates for the printer and proofreading and indexing of journal and debates, at the compensation heretofore paid and until such time as the work described shall be completed; the secretary is authorized to continue the services of Julia E. Kersting until September 10, 1912, at the compensation heretofore paid, and

Resolved, That the president of the Convention is hereby authorized to sign vouchers for the payment for the services provided for herein and for the payment of any bills arising by reason of any contract heretofore made by authority of the Convention for printing and publishing journal, debates and pamphlets.

Mr. DOTY: I move that the rules be suspended and that we consider this resolution at once. When the rules are suspended I shall be glad to explain it.

The motion to suspend the rules was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DOTY: I think it is perfectly apparent from the very able and complete report from the secretary that there is a great deal of work in closing up our proceedings and printing our debates, much more in fact than many of you anticipated when we adjourned. It has gone along just about as I thought it would at that time. I do not think the secretary has had more help than he has needed up to now. Certainly, to complete the preparation and copy for the printer and the indexing the amount of help is small enough. It seems to me we ought to be willing to leave to the secretary of the Convention the time when he will get through. I do not think that anyone can tell now when it will be through. The secretary cannot. Therefore, I think we shall have to trust him to keep these people employed only such time as is necessary. He says he hopes to have the debates completed by the 31st of December. If he does he will be doing very well. I doubt whether he will get them done by that time. But if it can be done those persons named in this resolution can do it. Up to this time the force has been engaged on the advertising work. That is practically over, but there is a great deal more work to do in getting out the debates and the journal.

Mr. KNIGHT: I would like to ask a question. Early in the session it was reported officially from some committee that it was understood that after this Convention adjourned sine die no one could sign any vouchers.

Mr. DOTY: I am glad you mentioned that. The president asked one of the clerks to look that up and that attache has conferred with the auditor and the attorney general upon that very point. The auditor looked the matter up and said he thought he was able to pay our vouchers for the contracts that we have already entered into and the necessary work of completing them. Then he went to the attorney general's office and had a conference with one of the men in the office and they spent some little time over there looking up the matter and they verbally agreed with the auditor that he was right and that they would furnish him at his request at any time a statement to that effect. If they should decide we cannot pay our bills the whole thing stops. If they decide we can pay our bills, we can go on. This resolution, or something similar, should be passed. I am sure you will find the bills will be paid, but if not they will have to stop until the next session of the legislature.

Mr. KNIGHT: I understand then that we have not as a Convention any official reversal of the ruling of the attorney general some months ago, and that the only sure way at the present time is for us not to adjourn sine die until or unless we get such official opinion from the attorney general.

Mr. DOTY: I can see the force of that. It is just according to the chances. In view of what the two chief officers in the departments involved have stated, I think the chances are very small that the vouchers will not be paid.

This is the situation: The law states that we are not allowed to pay for any services or pay for any bills after we adjourn sine die. The publication of the debates was undertaken considerably before the time we shall adjourn sine die and the attorney general holds that any necessary assistance or clerical help to carry out that contract will be paid.

Mr. KNIGHT: I do not oppose the resolution, but I wanted to get an idea whether we were safe, having a written opinion of the attorney general one way and only a verbal opinion the other.

Mr. DOTY: I think we can get along all right.

Mr. HOSKINS: Who signs the vouchers?

Mr. DOTY: The president. For fear we may have forgotten to give him the authority to sign for the printing, I put it there.

Retention of Employes after Adjournment of Convention—Distribution of Proceedings and Debates.

Mr. HOSKINS: The president is practically the agent for the Convention after the adjournment of the Convention for signing vouchers?

Mr. DOTY: And for that purpose only.

Mr. CROSSER: I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amend Resolution 165 by substituting the words "Anna L. Bower" for the name "Ira I. Morrison".

Mr. CROSSER: When the resolution was adopted on the seventh day of June I was in favor of Miss Bower being retained. I knew she was a very competent girl. She did her work well here and it occurred to me it is only performing a duty to place her name in the resolution. I have no doubt the other people are competent, but I know this lady is very competent.

Mr. KNIGHT: I wish there were room for two instead of one, but from having followed the work in the last two months, being in the state house frequently, I know the special work that Mr. Morrison has been doing has been on indexing the journal. That work is about half completed. If we swap horses in the middle of the stream it means we have to go back and have all the indexing done over again, and, with the highest respect for the young woman named in the amendment, I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. STOKES: I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 84, nays 1, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Mr. Stilwell voted in the negative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WATSON: I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 166:

Resolved, That the distribution of the printed debates of this Convention shall be as follows:

1. To each member of the Convention, fourteen sets.

2. To the state library of each state in the Union, one set.

3. To the secretary and official reporter, each two sets.

4. To each public library in the state, whether state, county or city, one set.

5. To each accredited reporter for the press, one set.

6. To the library of each college and university in the state, one set.

7. To each law library of the state, one set.

8. To each employe of the Convention, one set.

That all the remaining sets shall be turned over to the secretary of state and shall be placed on sale by him at $6.00 per volume or $12.00 per set of two volumes; the money derived from the sale of same to be covered into the state treasury.

All resolutions or orders of the Convention in conflict herewith are repealed, revoked or rescinded.

Mr. WATSON: That resolution seems to be necessary in order to correct the former resolution, as the former resolution was not in accordance with the contract made with the printer.

The PRESIDENT: The member from Guernsey [Mr. WATSON] moves that the rules be suspended and the resolution be considered at this time.

The motion to suspend was carried.

Mr. WATSON: As I started to say, this resolution seems to be necessary because the former resolution does not coincide with the contract made with the printer. The former resolution calls for three volumes and the contract with the printer calls for two, and this resolution is to conform to that contract.

Mr. DOTY: Does the original resolution call for a price of $12 for our debates?

Mr. WATSON: Yes; $12 for the set was fixed here, the same as before.

Mr. DOTY: It occurs to me that our debates are not worth $12. I have been looking over my own remarks and I do not think they justify any such price. I move that we strike out "6" and insert "4" and strike out "12" and insert "8".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS: I don't think that under the resolution there would be many of our debates left for sale.

Mr. DOTY: There will be very few, a hundred or so.

The PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 78, nays none, as follows:

So the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. READ: There is a matter that has been mooted in our county and I have been requested to bring it before the Convention. It brings up the question of whether we should make any amendment to any proposal that has been adopted. I also have a request from a number of persons in Summit county and also from the Bar Association, by an unanimous vote, that we so word the first section of article IV that the people may know whether or not the office of justices of the peace is abolished. I tried to explain to them that it is not abolished except as provided in another proposal for the large cities, but the Bar Association of Summit county claims that on the first of January, if this proposal is adopted, all justices of the peace in the state will be out of office, and the demand now is that that be so amended as to make it clear that this will not occur. I accordingly present an amendment to that proposal.

The secretary started to read the amendment as follows:

Amend article IV, section 1, as follows:—

Mr. DOTY: Is that the introduction of a proposal?

Mr. READ: It is an amendment to a proposal.

Mr. DOTY: There is nothing before the Convention.

Mr. DWYER: Let it be read.

Mr. DOTY: I have heard enough of it read to ask the question and I would like to have it answered.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment is out of order in the form presented.

Mr. LAMPSON: I rise to a question of inquiry. This is a question which ought to be determined, and I ask unanimous consent that the general subject of justices of the peace as affected by the amendment which has been proposed by this Convention, be taken up for thirty minutes' discussion.

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection the question is before the Convention and the member from Summit has the floor.

Mr. WATSON: I move that remarks be limited to three minutes each.

The motion was carried.

Mr. READ: In section 1 of article IV, as amended, justices of the peace are dropped out. They were included in the old article of the constitution. The old section read:

The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time establish.

The new section reads:

The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

Now it is claimed by some of those who say that justices of the peace are abolished that the dropping out of the words "justices of the peace" in this amendment has the effect of abolishing that office. I think that it is our duty to make that point clear. In Summit county alone it is claimed that this proposal will lose us a thousand votes.

Mr. ANDERSON: Does the dropping of the words "justices of the peace" take away from the legislature the power to make any kind of court it pleases? Has not that been passed upon by the supreme court?

Mr. READ: Sure.

Mr. ANDERSON: They can do as they please?

Mr. READ: Yes.

Mr. HOSKINS: I think the first thing in this discussion would be to hear from the chairman of the Judiciary committee, which committee had this matter in charge. He is probably as competent to instruct us as anybody. Of course, each of us has his own opinion about the matter, but we should hear from the chairman of the Judiciary committee.

Mr. LAMPSON: I ask unanimous consent that Judge Peck be given ten minutes, which time is not to be taken out of the thirty minutes.

The PRESIDENT: Without objection that will be ordered.

Mr. PECK: The Judiciary committee did not have entire charge of this subject. The matter in part came from the Judiciary committee and in part was decided by motions on the floor of the Convention.

Now, in the first place, there are several provisions in the constitution that bear on this subject, and you have to consider them all together if you are going to solve this question aright.

The first mention that is made of justices of the peace in the constitution is the one to which reference has just been made, section 1 of article IV, where it is cited that "The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time establish." Justices of the peace are specifically named there, but that mention is simply a mention. It does not provide for the direct creation of the office of justices of the peace. It does not provide any term of office or any duties, nor does it provide how many justices of the peace there shall be. The real section upon which the whole life and power of justices of the peace depend is section 9 of that article, and I submit to you that one section is as good as another. Section 9 of that chapter read this way:

A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected, by the electors, in each township in the several counties. Their term of office shall be three years, and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law.

*Office of Justice of the Peace not Abolished.

There you have it. That is the real provision for the existence of justices of the peace.

Mr. READ: The schedule under that—

Mr. PECK: I have not gotten to that. One thing at a time. I will come to that directly. I will explain this section first—"A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties." I am pointing out that that is the real section from which justices of the peace derive their existence and power. It provides for their term of office and for their powers and duties, and that these shall be regulated by law, putting the duty upon the general assembly imperatively. So much for justices of the peace up to that time.

When that section came to be amended there was a general demand that the legislature should have power to change justices of the peace in certain parts of the state. There were cities in the state that did not want justices of the peace, other cities wanted them and there were other cities that wanted them to a certain extent and they also wanted other courts having similar power. And they wanted power to limit the justices of the peace, so that it was desired to put justices of the peace under the control of the general assembly, and that was the reason why the words "justices of the peace" were left out of section 1, that section 9 might be amended so as to put justices of the peace within the control of the general assembly. If section 1 stood as it was and justices of the peace were to be forever a constitutional office, nothing that the legislature would do could affect them. So in order that the matter might be in the power of the general assembly, "justices of the peace" had to be stricken out of section 1, and that was the object of striking it out there.

Then section 9 was changed. The new section provides for the election of justices of the peace in the same language as in the old section, but adds "until otherwise provided by law": "A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law." All that is new there is the "until otherwise provided by law." That leaves them, as I said before, under the control of the legislature.

Mr. READ: But if section 1 is adopted this does not go into effect?

Mr. PECK: You are mistaken about that. Don't get wild on the schedule. It is not as clear as light, but it is all right if you understand it.

Now, without referring to the schedule, there are the two provisions as they stand. There cannot be any doubt if these words stood by themselves, "A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors of the several counties until otherwise provided by law," there would be ample provision for justices of the peace. Then the provision goes on:

Their term of office shall be for four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law; provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

That does not affect the question at all. That is simply for legal purposes. Then follows the schedule. It is not as clearly expressed as it might be, and all of the trouble has grown out of the expression of the schedule. It says:

If the amendment to article IV, sections 1, 2, and 6 be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then section 9 of article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

I understand that refers to the original section 9 and that the new section 9 is put in its place. It means that the original section 9 is repealed. Where it says, "and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect", that is the amendment relating to the city of Cleveland.

Mr. READ: Does it not refer to the whole section?

Mr. PECK: No, sir; the whole section is not an amendment. It only refers to the part that is an amendment.

Mr. READ: And it does not refer to the whole section?

Mr. PECK: No, sir; just to the amendment. It was intended to refer to and does refer to that coming after the word "provided."

Mr. READ: Then you maintain that that section would and does remain in the constitution and would be in effect even though section 1 were not there?

Mr. PECK: Yes; section 1 has nothing to do with that. Section 1 leaves it in such a way that the general assembly can act upon it, and if section 1 were abolished and section 9 were left in, it would not affect the office of justice of the peace.

Mr. READ: The wording is rather unfortunate.

Mr. PECK: That is another matter. There are various other things in the constitution—amendments—which bear out what I say.

Turn to article XVII, section 2, of the existing constitution, which has not been changed. About the middle of it, it fixes the terms of office of various offices:

The term of office of justices of the peace shall be such even number of years not exceeding four (4) years, as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

There is a recognition of justices of the peace and a fixing of their term of office. That is continued in force. It is not interfered with. Then, at the end of that article you will find this, which affects justices of the peace:

Every elective officer holding office when this amendment is adopted, shall continue to hold such office for the full term for which he was elected, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified as provided by law.

Does that read like it was abolishing justices of the peace? Does it not continue them in office. Justice of the peace is an elective office. Take that with the other things to which I have called your attention, and it satisfies me that the intention of this body not to abolish the office of justice of the peace is perfectly apparent to anybody who wants to construe it without prejudice.

Office of Justice of the Peace not Abolished.

Certain gentlemen have been circulating the story that the office of justices of the peace is abolished, not because they care for justices of the peace, but for other reasons, to use it against the constitution generally, and not particularly against Proposal No. 19.

Mr. LAMPSON: With the gentleman's permission, I will call attention to section 15 of article IV: "And any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided." Does not that strengthen your contention?

Mr. PECK: Yes; it looks the same way. The intention creeps out every time you examine the constitution. There was no intention to abolish the justices of the peace. Everybody in the Convention knows it and the document itself shows it, when you examine it in the right spirit and in a proper way, and I can satisfy any court on that. It is unfortunate that it should require explanation, but we cannot help that now. I rather think that it is too late to add anything to it. My own impression is that we could not get any amendment before the people in time for them to act upon it. The president and some of the other members may know better about that than I, but it seems to me it is too late to attempt to publish anything new in time for the people to vote for it a week from tomorrow. You cannot satisfy these men who are opposing it. A man who has his mind made up and who thinks his office is in danger will vote "no" anyhow.

I have expressed my legal view of this matter. I have published it in the newspapers. There will be an article tomorrow in the Law Review of Cincinnati on this subject written by me which I will try to send to the members of the Convention and that will be generally circulated among the bar of the state. I have written several articles in several of the prominent newspapers and will be glad to furnish those.

Mr. FESS: Is there any objection to putting in "justices of the peace" in section 1?

Mr. PECK: I think I would object to that because it puts back the old status; you would have the justices of the peace forever and amen and the legislature could not abolish them. The legislature could not give you the local court you wanted; justices of the peace would be fixed and immovable. We know that that matter ought to be made flexible and jurisdiction over that matter should be vested in the general assembly.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is it not a fact that the opposition to this section and the pamphlet about this amendment, based upon doing away with the justices of the peace, was inspired by a justice of the peace lawyer of Toledo, a member of a large corporation firm, and that being true, why would it not be a good idea, since justices of the peace believe they will go out of office January 1, if the constitution is ratified, to instruct our secretary to write to the seventeen hundred justices in Ohio and call their attention to the sections that Judge Peck and Mr. Lampson have read?

Mr. PECK: I have no objection to that. Now any other question I can answer I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. PARTINGTON: I could not hear your explanation in regard to the schedule where section 9 is repealed.

Mr. PECK: The schedule refers to the old section 9. We could not repeal something that is not existing at the time. We repeal old section 9 and substitute new section 9.

Mr. LAMPSON: Would it be possible to use the word "repeal" in referring to a proposed amendment, one which has not yet been adopted?

Mr. PECK: Of course not. You could not repeal something that did not exist. Unfortunately these matters were not foreseen or the schedule could have been written so as to exclude those matters.

Mr. WATSON: Would you object to heading a committee to prepare an address and statement referring to this matter?

Mr. PECK: I would not if it did not involve staying here tonight. I have to go home tonight. I have to be in Cincinnati tomorrow. I would serve in any way I can.

Mr. WALKER: I confess to a difficulty in understanding why, if this refers to section 9 of the present constitution, it will not repeal both sections 9. "The foregoing amendment"—that must refer to section 9—shall be of no effect."

Mr. PECK: The "foregoing amendment" is only a part of section 9. The fore part of section is not an amendment, but the same as the original section 9. The "foregoing amendment" is an amendment relating to the city of Cleveland. That is the matter that would be of no effect, because the whole matter is under the control of the legislature, and they could abolish justices of the peace if they wanted to.

Mr. READ: The people in our section are under the impression that if section 1 is adopted section 9 will be dropped entirely and will be of no effect.

Mr. PECK: I think anybody can see that the abolition of section 1 would not necessarily repeal section 9. Why should it?

Mr. READ: For my own part I do not believe it would abolish it, but I want to satisfy my people that the Convention has not abolished the justices of the peace.

Mr. PECK: Section 9 gives the life and power and section 1 is only an incidental mention, and the dropping out of the words "justices of the peace" in section 1 will permit section 9 to cover the whole subject.

Mr. LAMPSON: In order to make your argument complete, although it is pretty complete already, I want to ask you a question referring to the schedule on the bottom of page 47. It says: "All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed." That is, at the time of the adoption of any of these amendments. In your judgment would the law creating the office of justice of the peace and providing for the election and jurisdiction be inconsistent with any of these matters?

Mr. PECK: No, sir; and for the reasons already stated.

Mr. KING: I do not rise to disagree with the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary committee, but I do not put on section 9 and its schedule the force that he does. I say that section 1 is a declaratory section as to where the judicial power is vested. It does not establish any courts nor does it provide for any. It originally read: "The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court as the general assembly may from time to time establish."

Office of Justice of the Peace not Abolished.

That is very indefinite. If this amendment had dropped the common pleas courts and the courts of probate out it would have been just as good and would have left our courts in the same position as they are today, because they are established by law as well as by the constitution. There is in the city of Cleveland a court of insolvency. Is that repealed by the constitutional amendment? There is a superior court in Cincinnati. Is that repealed because it is not mentioned in the first section of article IV? They could leave out of that section every court below the courts of appeals and we would still be in the same shape, because there is a provision that the general assembly may provide such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as it pleases. It has established justices of the peace. They are in office under law, and under the section referred to by the gentleman from Cincinnati, they remain. That section is an absolute clincher on the argument and leaves no loophole. Every statute of the state not inconsistent with any of these amendments stands. The statute establishing justices of the peace is not inconsistent with anything in this section, so the power of the legislature to establish all kinds of courts and those that are established are protected not only by that section of the schedule but also by the following section in another amendment. Either by the amendment or by the original section they are protected. In other words, this constitutional amendment does not legislate any officer out of office except he is specially mentioned by the amendment as being legislated out of office. The board of public works is legislated out of office and it is stated when it shall go out. So also the commissioner of public schools. He is legislated out of office by a constitutional amendment, if it is adopted. But justices of the peace are not, for nowhere in the amendment is it provided that they shall go out of office, and if the legislature does not repeal the laws now on the statute books relating to the justices of the peace, they will be elected in the future as in the past even if we didn't have any section 1. Section 1 does not establish justices of the peace. Get that out of your head and go back to the bar of Summit county and tell them that justices of the peace are not created by that section at all. They are created "by law," although the original constitution by section 9 did provide for justices of the peace as a constitutional office. But it did not create them and there are laws upon the statute books which do create them. Now, if sections 1 and 9 are no longer in the constitution, still the laws are upon the statute books which create justices of the peace and also the laws under which they are elected and by which their terms of office are fixed and the manner in which they are compensated. So section 1 has not anything to do with the question, because this other section is so broad that it covers all the courts that the general assembly may establish and the general assembly has established courts of insolvency, municipal courts, superior courts, etc., and it can continue from time to time to do that, and these laws are in force and are not in conflict with anything adopted here and are not interfered with. So do you not see that it is logically true and certain that justices of the peace do not go out of office? I say they certainly do not and they will continue until their terms expire, unless the legislature changes the term.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: The gentleman insists that had the court of common pleas and court of probate been omitted here they would still be in force and effect as courts of the state. Now the average citizen in the rural districts wonders why justices of the peace were omitted and the others were not. Explain that.

Mr. KING: I was not present when that question was discussed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I do not remember that it was discussed in the Convention.

Mr. KING: I don't think it was.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Can we have the reason now?

Mr. KING: The reason was fully given by Judge Peck.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: I could not hear it.

Mr. KING: That it was to leave entirely to the general assembly the determination of the nature, character, term of office, manner of election and how many there should be.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Why not the same as to the others?

Mr. KING: They could have done it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Ashtabula: Why did they not?

Mr. KING: They followed the mark that was laid down in the old constitution which contained a long section in regard to the courts. But it didn't define any superior court of Cincinnati and why was not that done? Simply because it never was a constitutional court except under the provision that the general assembly may establish such courts as it pleases.

Mr. PECK: And it has existed for sixty years.

Mr. KING: So as to the court of insolvency and the juvenile courts. It might just as well be that way with the probate court, but there is another section in another part of the article that provides for constitutionally establishing the probate court. I do not believe that the justice court as a court has yet reached the stage of perfection. I think there is still opportunity for amendment by the general assembly and I think that is the general opinion. I know it is among the lawyers with whom I am acquainted and it was deemed a good deal better to leave it out of this constitution in the declaratory clause and permit the general assembly to deal with the subject from time to time as it sees fit. I believe that is the better way, but that goes to a question of policy. The other goes to a question of whether this abolished the justices from the face of the earth, and I say to the justices of the peace that they will be just as well off if this amendment is adopted as they were before.

Mr. ANDERSON: You say that if there had not been any mention of justices of the peace in the constitution of 1851 there would be just as many justices of the peace as there are now?

Mr. KING: Yes; the statute provides everything.

Mr. ANDERSON: And with the constitution of 1851 just as it is with reference to justices of the peace, if the legislature had never passed any laws in reference to the justices of the peace there would not be any in Ohio today?

Office of Justice of the Peace not Abolished.

Mr. KING: Not one.

Mr. DAVIO: How would it work in the city of Cleveland if this amendment is carried? Would not the justices of the peace be legislated out the first year?

Mr. KING: Yes, I think so, but I don't want to be too swift about that. No, I think not. I will tell you all that does. It provides that no new ones shall be elected:

Mr. DAVIO: Those elected will serve their terms out?

Mr. KING: Yes; their office is preserved by other sections of the constitution. It provides that in townships where there is another court having the same jurisdiction that justices have no justices shall be elected.

Mr. DAVIO: It also says that those justices of the peace shall have and exercise jurisdiction, etc.

Mr. KING: Yes, but you can not take away what they now have unless you also provide that they shall actually go out of office, and we do not provide that. If we do not do that in the constitution then there is another provision that holds them during their term of office. That term is secured for them and it cannot be taken away.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: We had a discussion last Friday night in the rural county where I live on the subject whether or not justices of the peace would be legislated out of office. I had received a circular from some lawyers saying it did away with the justices court. I told that audience if this amendment carried that it would not, but that we would have the justices of the peace until the legislature passed laws abolishing them. Was I right?

Mr. PECK: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: Why worry about the rural districts? I think the trouble is all with the lawyers. I am sure a lot of lawyers would like to overrule what we have done. I would not vote to change one thing, even if the whole constitution goes down. I do not believe in child's play. This matter will be all right no matter how adopted, and the supreme court will decide the matter. I think it is waste of time to adopt any amendment now to remedy a fancied or supposed wrong, a wrong that does not exist.

Mr. FESS: If Judge Peck's address and Judge King's address could be read by everybody there could not be any danger. We are talking in the Convention now about whether justices of the peace will be abolished. We are agreed that they will not. I am perfectly satisfied from what the gentlemen have said that they will not and it is up to you and to me to make the people in the rural districts see that justices of the peace are not abolished.

Mr. PECK: I do not know how we can make them see it any plainer.

Mr. FESS: I had a letter and I sent it to Judge Peck. I wanted a word from Judge Peck that I might read everywhere I go. I am one of the members of the Convention that is on the platform every day. Only three times yesterday I violated the Sabbath by speaking on these amendments, as you can see by my voice today, and to save my life I cannot make the fellows see that this office of justice of the peace is not disturbed, even after quoting and reading from the letter of Judge Peck, which is as clear as sunlight. My point now is to sound a note of warning that if we want Proposal No. 19 adopted we must all get busy in the rural districts and overcome the prejudice that certain interests of the state are working against this constitution, interests that do not care the snap of the finger for justices of the peace, but they are everywhere poisoning the minds in the rural sections. Why, last Thursday night I spoke to a group of men in Tiffin, many of them lawyers. I insisted that the office of justice of the peace was not abolished and when I got through with my argument one of the judges of the town said to me that they had studied the matter and that I was wrong, that the justices were abolished.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: And those men you talked to were not men from the backwoods districts.

Mr. FESS: No.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Williams: That is the trouble—with the cities. With about only three per cent of the people understanding the constitution what can we do? It is a simple matter to me. We take justices of the peace out of the constitution and we put them in the hands of the legislature.

Mr. FESS: My friend from Williams [Mr. JOHNSON] does not see what I am talking about. He has not touched one corner of it. We want to save what we have, but we do not want to go out of the Convention thinking that nobody is in doubt. It is our business when we go back home to spread this idea that the justices of the peace are not wiped out. That is what I am trying to talk about.

Mr. MAUCK: Can the gentleman suggest anything that ought to be done by the legislature to create an office except to provide for the election, the term of office, the salary and the jurisdiction?

Mr. FESS: Do you object to going back home and explaining these facts?

Mr. MAUCK: I have explained them to my people and they are perfectly satisfied.

Mr. FESS: I have explained it to my people and they are not satisfied.

Mr. DWYER: I want to ask Dr. Fess a question. Do you not believe that Mr. Anderson's proposal is a good one—to have the explanation made by Judge King and Judge Peck put in form and mailed to all of the justices of the peace?

Mr. FESS: I do. I want the Convention to understand that there is no suggestion on my part that we should amend at this point. But we ought to do something to get this matter before the people and convince them that our work has not been a work of demolition.

Mr. NYE: Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I had not expected to say one word at this meeting, but it does seem to me that there is absolutely no doubt about this proposition and every member of this Convention ought to be satisfied that the office of justice of the peace is not dispensed with.

By the old section 1 of article IV it is provided:

The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit court, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court as the general assembly may from time to time establish.

Office of Justice of the Peace not Abolished.

The new section provides substantially the same thing, but it stops with the probate court and does not mention justices of the peace.

Now, we have in Ohio the superior court at Cincinnati, juvenile courts in all of the cities and insolvency courts in some of the cities. It might just as well be said that we are legislating them out of power as to say we legislate the justices of the peace out because justices of the peace are left out of this section. We have statutes providing for the establishment of the superior court. We have statutes providing for the establishment of the juvenile court, and recently there was an act passed by the legislature providing for the court in Cleveland, which has been talked of in this Convention, which is coextensive with the justices courts. All of those courts are still in existence and continue in existence notwithstanding the adoption of the amendment to the constitution.

We also have upon the statute books a statute providing that a certain number of justices of the peace shall be elected in each township of the state and the statute today provides the jurisdiction of those justices of the peace. Now it would be just as competent and just as proper, in my judgment, to say that the superior court of Cincinnati and all these other courts other than justices of the peace, were legislated out of existence as to say that the justices of the peace courts are. True, justice of the peace would no longer be a constitutional office, but it can be made an office and is made an office by the statutes of the state.

Now, if you look at the schedule at the close of the amendments you will find that it provides:

The several amendments passed and submitted by this Convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed.

Now, as I have said before, we have statutes providing for the establishment of justices of the peace, and until those laws are repealed the justices of the peace continue in office the same as today, and it seems to me that the proposition that they are legislated out of office by this amendment cannot be maintained, and I am surprised at any lawyer of the state claiming such a thing.

Mr. LAMPSON: Under the present constitution there is a grant of power to the legislature to creat the office of justice of the peace. The legislature has acted and has created that office and the law is now in force. Under the proposed amendment there is a grant of power to the legislature to creat courts inferior to the courts of appeals, which would include the office of justice of the peace. The schedule provides that all laws in force at the time of the adoption of this amendment not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed. Can any court hold consistently that the law creating the office of justice of the peace under the grant of power contained in the present constitution is inconsistent with the similar grant of power, although in different language, under the proposed amendment? I think not.

Mr. ANDERSON: I agree with the gentleman from Greene [Mr. Fess] that it is very necessary for us to do something to counteract the belief now in the minds of the justices of the peace and the friends of the justice of the peace and convince them that if this proposed amendment is ratified the office of justice of the peace will not be in any way disturbed. Enemies of our work are resorting to a campaign of misrepresentation the like of which was never known in this state or any other state. A corporation attorney at Toledo, who probably had never tried a case before a justice of the peace and who represents clients who have no interests in the justices of the peace, is the man who is sending out circulars to each justice of the peace. I have had justices come to see me and I have talked to them by the hour and with no more effect than the gentleman from Greene [Mr. Fess] says he has had. With Mr. Harter, of Stark, I went into the offices of several judges in Canton with the justice of the peace over there and tried to explain that it did not do away with justices of the peace or cut down their terms, and yet that justice of the peace agreed with the lawyer from Toledo. I have here a little slip of paper to which I want to call your attention. On one side it says:

ATTENTION! MERCHANTS! FARMERS!
WORKINGMEN!

YOUR COUNTY FAIR IS IN DANGER.

Amendment No. 38, to the Proposed New Constitution which will be voted on Tuesday, September 3rd, will make it impossible for your fair to be properly advertised. The fair managers have used posters, banners, signs and other forms of Out-Door Advertising all of which will be prohibited if Amendment No. 38 passes.

To protect the thousands of dollars invested in the fair grounds and buildings to insure the continued holding of these annual affairs, VOTE NO on Amendment No. 38. It will prohibit a circus poster too; it would prohibit sales signs; it would throw thousands out of employment and WHAT IS THERE TO BE GAINED FOR YOU OR ANYONE?

On the other side it says:

Vote NO on Amendment No. 38

38		Yes	Art. XV, Sec. 11.
	X	No	Out-Door Advertising.

and Save Your County Fair.

On the left of this it says: "And Save Your County Fair."

I presume the gentleman who got up this is connected with a circus.

I believe it is very necessary to do something to reach every justice in the state of Ohio and therefore I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Office of Justice of the Peace Not Abolished—Question of Personal Privilege.

Resolution No. 167:

Resolved, That Judges Peck, King and Nye be appointed a committee with the assistance of the secretary to draw a statement concerning the proposed amendments as affecting the office of justice of the peace and that the secretary send each justice of the peace a copy of such report.

The PRESIDENT: The gentleman from Mahoning moves a suspension of the rules and that this resolution be considered at this time.

The rules were suspended.

The PRESIDENT: The question is "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted — yeas 72, nays 3, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hahn,	Marshall,
Beatty, Morrow,	Halfhill,	Matthews,
Beatty, Wood,	Harbarger,	McClelland,

Fox,	Malin,	Mr. President.

Messrs. Mauck, Stevens and Taggart voted in the negative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WINN: Gentlemen of the Convention: I have hastily prepared a resolution bearing upon this same subject, which I am about to offer and touching which I desire to say a word before offering it.

I believe it will be wise if just at this moment we adopt a resolution declaring it to be the sense of this Convention that it was not the intention of the Convention to abolish justices of the peace and that the adoption of any amendment we have proposed will not legislate any person out of office. I offer the resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolution No. 168:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that the office of justice of the peace is not abolished by any amendment submitted by this Convention and that such is not the effect of any proposed amendment when considered in connection with other proposed amendments and with the provisions of the constitution bearing upon the subject not affected by any proposed amendment; that said office of justice of the peace will not be abolished nor will any justice of the peace be legislated out of office by reason of the adoption of any proposed amendment or amendments submitted by this Convention.

The PRESIDENT: The question is, Shall the rules be suspended?

The rules were suspended.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WINN: I just want to say one more word so that we may all understand fully the import of the resolution. It is not only that it may go out throughout the state that this Convention did not propose to abolish justices of the peace and has not done so, but that it may go into our proceedings, because if this question does reach the supreme court, and it may be that the lawyer in Toledo who has put out this pamphlet headed with these words, more familiar to him than anything else, "Stop, look and listen"—words familiar to all railroad lawyers—it may be possible that he will find some means by which he may procure the submission of this question to the supreme court, and in that event an expression by this Convention of its intention will probably have great weight with that body.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HALFHILL: As a matter of personal privilege I desire to explain my relations to the committee on Submission and Address to the People.

At the time that resolution was brought in by Mr. Doty, to whom we are under obligations for much of the work of the Convention, I was afraid of it because it conferred too much power on the president. I was especially afraid of it when I saw the able lieutenant of the president and the president working together in a team, because I had encountered that before and I knew how dangerous it was.

Mr. DOTY: "Stop, look and listen!"

Mr. HALFHILL: While I was calling some attention to that and doing it rightfully, because it was my business to see that the state treasury was not thrown wide open without some restrictions, the gentlemen from Cuyahoga [Mr. Doty], with his usual skill, slipped over and had somebody suggest that I be made a member of the committee, so that I could watch him and the president, and the president, quicker than a flash, said, "If there is no objection on he goes." So I was on that committee and it was supposed that we would have some little opportunity to look inside.

Mr. DOTY: Well, did you not get it?

Mr. HALFHILL: I was in the committee on the second of July at one session and then I was legislated off.

Mr. DOTY: Will the member from Allen allow me a word?

Mr. HALFHILL: When I finish you can have all the time you want, so far as I am concerned. What I mean is that all of the work of the committee was put in the hands of a subcommittee of three and I was on the outside. I did not even get a look-in.

Mr. DOTY: Is it not a fact that at the time that that subcommittee was being made up you were named as one of the original three and you declined to serve on that committee?

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not know but that that is so.

Mr. DOTY: It is correct.

Mr. HALFHILL: If you say it is correct, it is correct. I have no recollection on that point. But what could I have done on that committee? I would have been in as bad shape as I was.

Question of Personal Privilege—Payment of Employees.

Mr. DOTY: Are you asking me?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: You would have had one vote out of three, two to one.

Mr. HALFHILL: I would have been where I was most of the time—when the time came the president, aided by his lieutenant from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY], would have steam-rolled me.

Mr. DOTY: Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HALFHILL: Yes.

Mr. DOTY: Do you know whether the member from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS] is in favor of the president of the Short Ballot Association for president of the United States?

Mr. HALFHILL: There is no accounting for taste, as the old woman said when she kissed the bull moose. So I say, Mr. President, further—

Mr. LAMPSON: Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HALFHILL: Just a moment. I say further about the gentleman from Auglaize [Mr. HOSKINS] that he might do worse in this campaign than to vote for Wilson.

Mr. LAMPSON: I want to ask if the gentleman from Allen [Mr. HALFHILL] was present when the kissing bee took place that he has referred to?

Mr. HALFHILL: I do not think I would follow that kissing bee very far. Now, I want to get to the question.

Mr. DOTY: I call attention to the fact that he refuses to answer my question about the member from Auglaize.

Mr. HALFHILL: No, sir; I answered it.

Mr. HOSKINS: I want to know what he said about me? I didn't hear it.

Mr. HALFHILL: He wanted to know if you were in favor of the president of the Short Ballot Association for president of the United States?

Mr. HOSKINS: Yes.

Mr. HALFHILL: That part at least is settled then. Evidently the skillful gentleman from Cuyahoga [Mr. DOTY] is endeavoring to flag me on the statement I want to make and I do not intend to be flagged. Now I shall not yield until I have finished the statement. I do not say but what the advertising contracts and the planning about them and everything was done just as reported by Mr. Lampson and that the interests of the state were protected in a business way. I have no reason to think otherwise, but here is what I am complaining about and I want you to look at this advertisement. This exhibit appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer: "Ballot must be marked forty-two times. A vote for an amendment is cast this way," and then there is an affirmative vote shown for the initiative and referendum and for municipal home rule. I do object to using the money of the state of Ohio to urge forward some particular proposal, and I objected when the president submitted that to me in the proof. I wrote him a letter to that effect and I want to be put on record to that effect. I said it was not fair and it was not right, and I put it down over my own signature, and yet later I bought a Cleveland Plain Dealer and found that advertisement in it. If the president is content to throw the power of his high office at the last minute, as he did throw it so often during the course of this Convention, in favor of some proposal that he especially backed, and throw every obstacle in the way of anybody against him—if he thinks that is right, I want him to have the responsibility for it, and I do not want it to be known or understood that because I was on that committee I ever agreed to that form of advertisement. That is all I care to say on that point.

Mr. CASSIDY: I desire to offer a resolution and to give just a word of explanation. Several of our employees are serving here today and there is no provision for their compensation and I offer a resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the president and secretary be and they are hereby authorized and directed to issue vouchers in payment for today's services to the employees who are on duty.

Mr. DOTY: The spirit of the resolution should be carried out, but the form of the resolution is not right. In the first place, some of our former employees are on the pay roll. In the second place, we do not know how many of our former employees who are not now on the pay roll are present. I suppose the secretary knows, but we do not know. I think the names of those we want to pay should be put in this resolution.

Mr. CASSIDY: If the secretary will furnish me the names I will put them in.

The SECRETARY: I have the names.

The resolution was amended by the insertion of the names and read as follows:

Resolution No. 169:

Resolved, That the president and secretary be and they are hereby authorized and directed to issue vouchers in payment for today's services to the following employees:

Will T. Blake, T. H. Brown, Clement Kelly, J. C. Sherlock, William C. Ries, Fred Blankner, C. M. Fisher, William Todd, Allen G. Atwill, Nelson Winslow, A. Jacobs, Howard Fordyce, Albert Goodyear, Charles Mills, Harry Blair.

The PRESIDENT: The question is on the suspension of the rules to consider this resolution.

The rules were suspended.

The PRESIDENT: The question is now on the adoption of the resolution and the secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 52, nays none, as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Anderson,	Hahn,	Longstreth,
Baum,	Halfhill,	Ludey,

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOTY: I call for the reading of today's journal.

The journal was read.

VICE PRESIDENT FESS [in the chair]: You have heard the reading of the journal and if there is no objection or correction it will stand approved as read.

Mr. KERR: Will there be a copy of that furnished to each member to add to the journal he now has?

Mr. DOTY: Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT: The chair recognizes the delegate from Hamilton [Mr. BIGELOW].

The PRESIDENT: Members of the Convention profoundly realize that the state of Ohio is at present facing a most important duty and opportunity. We believe we voice the sincere sentiment of an overwhelming majority of this Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio when we say that the issue at stake is real representative and progressive government. We look forward to next Tuesday certainly not without hope; but we are more impressed than ever before with the power of the enemy.

We believe that the opposition has not been fair, that questionable methods have been used to misrepresent the work of this Convention, not to enlighten but to confuse the voters of this state. I do not wish to sound any note of discouragement, yet I want to express what I believe to be the feeling of many delegates here, that the issue is at this hour in doubt. A few weeks ago it seemed inconceivable that such forces could have been marshalled or such an impression made, but with the money to fill the country newspapers with "boiler-plate," with the means to send agents all over this state, to make even a house-to-house canvass of misrepresentation, with the line so tightly drawn that even today in my city certain large employers try to lock their men in their factories to prevent the men from hearing the speeches of those who are trying to explain these issues that the men may intelligently vote next Tuesday, we close this Convention with some misgivings. We know that next Tuesday is going to be a real battle. We believe that the power of money is on one side and the enthusiasm for liberty on the other. All we can do is to put forth our best efforts between now and next Tuesday, knowing that if the issue is decided in favor of the work of this Convention the door will be open for progressive and real representative government, but that if the issue goes against us next Tuesday the opportunity passes from the people of this state for another twenty years, because these opportunities cannot come again within the lifetime of many of us here—not for two decades. We go forth to battle next Tuesday with a sense of our obligation to the cause of progressive government and to the future of this state, bound to take our place upon the firing line and fight, even as we know we are fighting, for the good of the state of Ohio and for the good of our children. And with this determination, even with our knowledge of the power of the enemy, we go forth with the conviction that we are right and that truth will prevail. I now move that this Convention do finally adjourn.

Mr. DOTY: I second the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT: It is moved and seconded that the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio do now finally adjourn. Those in favor of the motion will say aye and those opposed no. The motion is carried and this Convention is finally adjourned.

OMISSIONS FROM RECORD

The following items were not included in the manuscript record. They should appear as indicated below:

Page 126. Preceding "Resolution No. 40—Mr. King was taken up" insert:

Resolution No. 39—Mr. Doty, was taken up.
On motion of Mr. Doty the resolution was referred to committee on Rules.

Page 552. After the verification of the roll call, insert:

So the proposal passed as follows:

Proposal No. 100—Mr. Fackler.

"To submit an amendment to article IV, section 9, of the constitution.—Relative to justice of the peace.

Resolved, by the Constitutional Convention of the state of Ohio,
That a proposal to amend the constitution shall be submitted to the electors to read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties. Their term of office shall be four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law. Provided that there shall be no justices of the peace in any township where a court, other than a mayor's court, is or may hereafter be maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace are given jurisdiction, and no justices of the peace shall have or exercise jurisdiction in such township."

Under the rules the proposal was referred to the committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Amendments to the Constitution of Ohio

Resolution Adopted in Convention May 31, 1912, and Signed June 1, 1912

Resolved by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Ohio, That the amendments proposed to the constitution and adopted by this Convention, as hereinafter set forth, shall be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection on the third day of September, A. D., 1912, and that the president and secretary of this Convention be, and they are hereby, directed to certify the same to the secretary of state for submission to the electors according to law.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with murder in the first degree, where proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime. Until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary during life.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance cannot be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 1. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws.

SEC. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Amendment to the Constitution Proposed by Initiative Petition to be Submitted Directly to the Electors."

SEC. 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided, proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly, either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to the referendum. If it shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action shall be taken thereon within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, it shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election, if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which supplementary petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after the proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months, if no action has been taken thereon, or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state. The proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition, which form shall be either as first petitioned for or with any amendment or amendments which may have been incorporated therein by either branch or by both branches of the general assembly. If a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect as herein provided in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors. All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof, in case of proposed laws: "Law Proposed by Initiative Petition First to be Submitted to the General Assembly." Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in section 1a and section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the constitution shall be the amendment to the constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

SEC. 1c. The second aforestated power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided.

When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

SEC. 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a ye and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a ye and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

SEC. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

SEC. 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

SEC. 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality, the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it Enacted by the People of the State of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be It Resolved by the People of the State of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provision or the powers herein reserved.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

SCHEDULE.

The foregoing amendment, if adopted by the electors, shall take effect October 1, 1912.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all powers, necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation, or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the re-passage of a bill.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 33. Laws may be passed to secure to mechanics artisans, laborers, sub-contractors and material men, their just dues by direct lien upon the property, upon which they have bestowed labor or for which they have furnished material. No other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 34. Laws may be passed fixing and regulating the hours of labor, establishing a minimum wage, and providing for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of all employees; and no other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents, for death, injuries or occupational diseases, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payment shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employes and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employe when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rates of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and all other minerals.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political sub-division thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interests in, lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

ARTICLE II.

SEC. 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without the State of Ohio, and such goods made within the State of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made." Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political sub-division thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political sub-division thereof.

ARTICLE III.

SEC. 8. The governor on extraordinary occasions may convene the general assembly by proclamation and shall state in the proclamation the purpose for which such special session is called, and no other business shall be transacted at such special session except that named in the proclamation, or in a subsequent public proclamation or message to the general assembly issued by the governor during said special session, but the general assembly may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

SEC. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, in cases of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court.

SEC. 6. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which the circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold sessions shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The courts of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and, to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction, and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its record to that court. No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decisions in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. Any judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas, and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

SEC. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per centum of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county officers, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

SEC. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

SEC. 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided.

SCHEDULE.

If the foregoing amendment shall be adopted by the electors, the judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914; each county shall continue as a part of its existing common pleas district and sub-division thereof, until one resident judge of the court of common pleas is elected and qualified therein.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be for four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law: provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise jurisdiction in such township.

SCHEDULE.

If the amendment to article IV, sections 1, 2 and 6, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then section 9 of article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

ARTICLE IV.

SEC. 21. Laws may be passed, prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the state, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to punish for contempt. No order of injunction shall issue in any controversy involving the employment of labor, except to preserve physical property from injury or destruction; and all persons charged in contempt proceedings with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall, upon demand, be granted a trial by jury as in criminal cases.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state for one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he or she resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

SCHEDULE.

If the amendment to article V, section 1, to the constitution—Woman's Suffrage, be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 2. All elections shall be either by ballot or by mechanical device, or by both, preserving the secrecy of the vote. Laws may be enacted to regulate the preparation of the ballot and to determine the application of such mechanical device.

ARTICLE V.

SEC. 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal offices shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers of municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

ARTICLE VI.

SEC. 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds: provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

SEC. 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor, for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

If the foregoing amendment be adopted by the electors it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever; provided, however, that laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds to an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed fifty million dollars for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of inter-county wagon roads throughout the state. Not to exceed ten million dollars of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing and maintaining the same shall be paid by the state. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by section 6, of article XII.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

ARTICLE VIII.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, with the powers and duties now exercised by the board of public works until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE.

Section 13 of article VIII is hereby repealed.

ARTICLE XII.

SEC. 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

SEC. 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritances, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 8. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such incomes as may be designated by law; but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

SEC. 9. Not less than fifty per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originate.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

SEC. 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals.

SEC. 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political sub-divisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank," "banker" or "banking," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector: provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public, or as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivision thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law, and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local sub-division while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word "saloon" as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

At said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

	For License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.
	Against License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License," if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the words "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

If the votes for license shall exceed the votes against license, then the article above mentioned shall become section 9 of article XV of the constitution, and the present section 9 of said article, also known as section 18 of the schedule shall be repealed.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 10. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision.

ARTICLE XV.

SEC. 11. Laws may be passed regulating and limiting the use of property on or near public ways and grounds for erecting bill-boards thereon and for the public display of posters, pictures and other forms of advertising.

ARTICLE XVI.

SEC. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

SEC. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

SEC. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution," shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

ARTICLE XVIII.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities; all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

SEC. 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

SEC. 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

SEC. 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case, fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

SEC. 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

SEC. 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter." The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter; provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from the date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held therein. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

SEC. 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof, and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission; and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

SEC. 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality nor be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. Any municipality appropriating private property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

SEC. 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

SEC. 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

SEC. 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

SCHEDULE.

If the foregoing amendment to the constitution be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, it shall take effect on November 15, 1912.

SCHEDULE.

The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law. Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this convention and adopted by the electors, inconsistent with, or in conflict with, any provision of the present constitution, shall be held to prevail.

Amendments to the Constitution Submitted by Convention.

METHOD OF SUBMISSION.

The several proposals duly passed by this convention shall be submitted to the electors as separate amendments to the constitution at a special election to be held on the third day of September, 1912. The several amendments shall be designated on the ballot by their proper article and section numbers and also by their approved descriptive titles and shall be printed on said ballot and consecutively numbered in the manner and form hereinafter set forth. The adoption of any amendment by its title shall have the effect of adopting the amendment in full as finally passed by the convention. Said special election shall be held pursuant to all provisions of law applicable thereto including special registration. Ballots shall be marked in accordance with instructions printed thereon. Challengers and witnesses shall be admitted to all polling places under such regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of state. Within ten days after said election the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections of the several counties shall forward by mail in duplicate sealed certified abstracts of the votes cast on the several amendments, one to the secretary of state and one to the auditor of state at Columbus. Within five days thereafter such abstracts shall be opened and canvassed by the secretary of state and auditor of state in the presence of the governor who shall forthwith, by proclamation, declare the results of said election. Each amendment on which the number of affirmative votes shall exceed the number of negative votes shall become a part of the constitution.

[Here follows the form of ballot identical with that on pages 2007-2011.]

Report of Special Committee Relative to Office of Justice of the Peace

The special committee appointed, pursuant to Resolution No. 167, on the last day of the convention (page 2092), met immediately after adjournment and framed a statement which was sent to each justice of the peace in the state in printed circular form as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.
COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1912.

OFFICE OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE

IT IS NOT ABOLISHED BY THE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

Report of special committee appointed by the Convention:

The undersigned, appointed by the Fourth Constitutional Convention at its session in Columbus August 26, 1912, as a committee to prepare and have published a statement as to whether or not the adoption of No. 19, on the constitutional amendments ballot, relating to change in the judicial system, will abolish the office of justice of the peace, beg leave to submit the following report:

This office, by the existing constitution, is declared to be one of the courts in which judicial power is vested. But this section of article IV, now in force, as well as amended section 1, vests the judicial power in certain named courts and such other inferior courts as may from time to time be established by law. While the office of justice of the peace is recognized by the constitution as a judicial one, it is also established by law, for there exists on the statute books a provision for election of justices of the peace, their number in each township, the terms of their office, their jurisdiction and the manner of their compensation.

Provision is made in the General Code for justices of the peace, as well as their election and duties, in sections 1712-1806, inclusive, and for their jurisdiction and powers in sections 10223-10491, inclusive; and none of these statutes will be repealed by the adoption of any of the constitutional amendments proposed.

Section 15 of article IV of the constitution, both in the present constitution and in the amendment proposed, provides that "any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided." Section 1 of the original schedule and the schedule adopted by the Convention, known as amendment No. 41 on the ballot, provides that all laws in force, not inconsistent with these amendments, "shall continue in force until amended or repealed." These two provisions of the constitution protect in office every official until the end of his term, and they protect forever, until repealed by the general assembly, the statutes creating and regulating the jurisdiction of the office of justice of the peace, because it is not inconsistent with the constitutional provisions contained in section 1 of article IV. Section 1 is only declarative of the courts in which judicial power is vested. It omits to name several important courts now existing in Ohio, as for instance, the superior court of Cincinnati, the court of insolvency of Cuyahoga county, the municipal court of the city of Cleveland, and there may be others, all of which are created by statute and all of which will remain in existence until the statutes creating them are repealed or changed. This is so with justices of the peace. The justices now in office will continue until their terms expire, and they will continue to be elected until the general assembly changes the law relating to them. It may be just as well said that the superior court of Cincinnati, the court of insolvency of Cuyahoga county and the municipal court of Cleveland are abolished by these amendments, because they are not named in section 1 as constitutional courts; yet no one would claim that these courts are interfered with.

This we believe to be the legal construction and effect of the proposed amendments that relate to the office of justice of the peace.

HIRAM D. PECK,
E. B. KING,
D. J. NYE.

The foregoing report has been submitted pursuant to resolution No. 167.

C. B. GALBREATH,
Secretary of the Convention.

Contract for Printing Proceeding and Debates

WHEREAS, It has become desirable to cause the proceedings and debates of the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio to be printed and published in some durable form, this contract regarding the same entered into by and between the State of Ohio and The F. J. Heer Printing Company- WITNESSETH:—

That the F. J. Heer Printing Company, for and in consideration of the performance by the State of Ohio of its promises and agreements hereinafter set forth, does hereby agree to furnish all the necessary paper and do all the necessary printing and binding for the publication of twenty-five hundred (2500) copies of reports of the said proceedings and debates, to be bound in two volumes. It is understood and agreed that the paper so furnished shall be of a quality, weight and grade suitable and proper for such work, the size of the page to be 9 x 12, type surface 7 x 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ including heading, type to be ten point, style of Michigan Constitutional Convention (1907) report, the binding to be buckram of a good grade and quality and all the work, both printing and binding, to be done in a good and workmanlike manner.

As a compensation for the performance of the foregoing the State of Ohio is to pay said The F. J. Heer Printing Company the sum of four thousand nine hundred and ninety-two and fifty hundredths dollars, ($4,992.50), such sum being based on an estimate that said volumes shall contain in the aggregate fifteen hundred (15000) pages. It is hereby agreed that if there shall be fewer than fifteen hundred pages in said two volumes there shall be deducted from said amount ($4,992.50) so to be paid The F. J. Heer Printing Company the sum of two and fifty hundredths dollars ($2.50) per page for each page less than said number of fifteen hundred that said volumes shall contain, but if said volumes shall contain more than fifteen hundred pages the said The F. J. Heer Printing Company, in addition to said amount of $4,992.50, shall receive and be paid the sum of two and fifty hundredths dollars ($2.50) for each page said volumes may contain in excess of such estimated number of fifteen hundred.

It is further understood and agreed that The F. J. Heer Printing Company shall be paid for printing the index to said debates and furnishing the paper therefor the sum of three and fifty hundredths dollars ($3.50) per page for each full printed page of such index, such pages to be set in brier type, double column.

It is further understood and agreed that the copy from which all of said printing, including index, shall be done, shall be furnished by the secretary of the convention to the said printing company and that no matter shall be included in said volumes except what shall have been so furnished by said secretary.

It is also further understood and agreed that The F. J. Heer Printing Company on its part will use all due diligence to secure the completion and delivery of the bound volumes of said reports at the earliest possible date after the final adjournment of the Convention and further to secure that no delay in such completion and delivery shall occur on account of any act or omission of said printing company.

In witness whereof the parties aforesaid have hereunto affixed their signatures this eleventh day of April, 1912.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF OHIO.

We, the people of the State of Ohio, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, to secure its blessings and promote our common welfare, do establish this constitution.

ARTICLE I.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

SEC. 1. All men are, by nature, free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and seeking and obtaining happiness and safety.

SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform, or abolish the same, whenever they may deem it necessary; and no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted, that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the general assembly.

SEC. 3. The people have the right to assemble together, in a peaceable manner, to consult for their common good; to instruct their representatives; and to petition the general assembly for the redress of grievances.

SEC. 4. The people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security; but standing armies, in time of peace, are dangerous to liberty, and shall not be kept up; and the military shall be in strict subordination to the civil power.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate.

SEC. 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

SEC. 6. There shall be no slavery in this state; nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crime.

NOTE:—The sections of the constitution to which no amendments were adopted, at the special election, September 3, 1912, are printed in uniform type like that used in sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of article I. The smaller type, like that first used in sections 5 and 10 of article I, indicates the sections of the constitution to which amendments have been made. The black or bold-faced type, like that used in the second instance in sections 5 and 10 of article I, indicates the amendments adopted. If the sections in smaller type are omitted and those in the bold-faced type are retained, there will remain the constitution as it is with the amendments approved September 3, 1912. If the sections in bold-faced type are omitted, the constitution as it was January 1, 1912, will remain.

SEC. 7. All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship, against his consent; and no preference shall be given, by law, to any religious society; nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. No religious test shall be required, as a qualification for office, nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations. Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction.

SEC. 8. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety require it.

SEC. 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, and cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and in cases of petit larceny and other inferior offenses, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district, in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; nor shall any person be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, or be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

SEC. 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance can not be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

SEC. 11. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of the right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libel, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury, that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives, and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted.

SEC. 12. No person shall be transported out of the state, for any offense committed within the same; and no conviction shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture of estate.

SEC. 13. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner; nor, in time of war, except in the manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 14. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and possessions, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched and the person and things to be seized.

SEC. 15. No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law; and justice administered without denial or delay.

SEC. 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

SEC. 17. No hereditary emoluments, honors, or privileges, shall ever be granted or conferred by this state.

SEC. 18. No power of suspending laws shall ever be exercised, except by the general assembly.

SEC. 19. Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. When taken in time of war or other public exigency, imperatively requiring its immediate seizure or for the purpose of making or repairing roads, which shall be open to the public, without charge, a compensation shall be made to the owner, in money, and in all other cases, where private property shall be taken for public use, a compensation therefor shall first be made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money; and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury, without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner.

SEC. 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

SEC. 20. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people; and all powers, not herein delegated, remain with the people.

ARTICLE II.

LEGISLATIVE.

SEC. 1. The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate, and house of representatives.

SEC. 1. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws.

SEC. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Amendment to the Constitution Proposed by Initiative Petition to be Submitted Directly to the Electors."

SEC. 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided, proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly, either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to the referendum. If it shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action shall be taken thereon within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, it shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election, if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which supplementary petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after the proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months, if no action has been taken thereon, or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state. The proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition, which form shall be either as first petitioned for or with any amendment or amendments which may have been incorporated therein by either branch or by both branches, of the general assembly. If a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect as herein provided in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors. All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof, in case of proposed laws: "Law Proposed by Initiative Petition First to be Submitted to the General Assembly." Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors as provided in section 1a and section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the constitution shall be the amendment to the constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

Sec. 1c. The second aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

Sec. 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a ye and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a ye and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

Sec. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

Sec. 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

Sec. 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality, the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it Enacted by the People of the State of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be It Resolved by the People of the State of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved.

Schedule.

The foregoing amendment, if adopted by the electors shall take effect October 1, 1912.

SEC. 2. Senators and representatives shall be elected biennially by the electors of the respective counties or districts, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November; their term of office shall commence on the first day of January next thereafter, and continue two years. (As amended October 13, 1885.)

SEC. 3. Senators and representatives shall have resided in their respective counties, or districts, one year next preceding their election, unless they shall have been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this state.

SEC. 4. No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia.

SEC. 5. No person hereafter convicted of an embezzlement of the public funds, shall hold any office in this state; nor shall any person, holding public money for disbursement, or otherwise, have a seat in the general assembly, until he shall have accounted for, and paid such money into the treasury.

SEC. 6. Each house shall be judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members; a majority of all the members, elected to each house shall be a quorum to do business; but a less number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. The mode of organizing the house of representatives, at the commencement of each regular session, shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all other powers, necessary to provide for its safety, and the undisturbed transaction of its business.

SEC. 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct; and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause; and shall have all powers, necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation, or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers.

SEC. 9. Each house shall keep a correct journal of its proceedings, which shall be published. At the desire of any two members, the yeas and nays shall be entered upon the journal; and, on the passage of every bill, in either house, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered upon the journal; and no law shall be passed in either house, without the concurrence of a majority of all the members elected thereto.

SEC. 10. Any member of either house shall have the right to protest against any act, or resolution thereof; and such protest, and the reasons therefor, shall, without alteration, commitment, or delay, be entered upon the journal.

SEC. 11. All vacancies which may happen in either house shall, for the unexpired term, be filled by election, as shall be directed by law.

SEC. 12. Senators and representatives, during the session of the general assembly, and in going to, and returning from the same, shall be privileged from arrest, in all cases, except treason, felony, or breach of the peace; and for any speech, or debate, in either house, they shall not be questioned elsewhere.

SEC. 13. The proceedings of both houses shall be public, except in cases which, in the opinion of two-thirds of those present, require secrecy.

SEC. 14. Neither house shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than two days, Sundays excluded; nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be in session.

SEC. 15. Bills may originate in either house; but may be altered, amended, or rejected in the other.

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contain the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed.

Every bill passed by both houses of the general assembly shall, before said bill can become law, be presented to the governor. If he approves he shall sign said bill and thereupon said bill shall be law. If he object he shall not sign and shall return said bill, together with his objection thereto in writing, to the house wherein said bill originated, which house shall enter at large upon its journal said objection and shall proceed to reconsider said bill. If, after said reconsideration, at least two-thirds of the members-elect of that house vote to repass said bill it shall be sent, together with said objection, to the other house, which shall enter at large upon its journal said objection and shall proceed to reconsider said bill. If, after said reconsideration, at least two-thirds of the members-elect of that house vote to pass said bill it shall be law, otherwise it shall not be law. The votes for the repassage of said bill shall in each house respectively be no less than those given on the original passage. If any bill passed by both houses of the general assembly and presented to the governor is not signed and is not returned to the house wherein it originated and within ten days after being so presented, exclusive of Sunday and the day said bill was presented, said bill shall be law as in like manner as if signed, unless final adjournment of the general assembly prevents such return, in which case [it] shall be law, unless objected to by the governor and filed, together with his objection thereto in writing, by him in the office of the secretary of state within the prescribed ten days; and the secretary of state shall at once make public said fact and shall return said bill, together with said objection, upon the opening of the next following session of the general assembly, to the house wherein said bill originated, where it shall be treated in like manner as if returned within the prescribed ten days.

If any bill passed by both houses of the general assembly and presented to the governor contains two or more sections, or two or more items of appropriation of money, he may object to one or more of said sections or to one or more of said items of appropriation of money, and approve the other portion of said bill, in which case said approved portion may be signed and then shall be law; and such section or sections, item or items of appropriation of money objected to shall be returned within the time and in the manner prescribed for, and shall be separately reconsidered as in the case of, a whole bill; but if final adjournment of the general assembly prevents such return the governor shall file said section or sections, item or items of appropriation of money together with his objection thereto in writing, with the secretary of state as in the case of a whole bill, and the secretary of state shall then make public said fact, but shall not further act as in the case of a whole bill (As amended November 3, 1903.)

SEC. 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the repassage of a bill.

SEC. 17. The presiding officer of each house shall sign, publicly in the presence of the house over which he presides, while the same is in session, and capable of transacting business, all bills and joint resolutions passed by the general assembly.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

SEC. 18. The style of the laws of this state shall be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio."

SEC. 19. No senator or representative shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, or for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office under this state, which shall be created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased, during the term for which he shall have been elected.

SEC. 20. The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished.

SEC. 21. The general assembly shall determine, by law, before what authority, and in what manner, the trial of contested elections shall be conducted.

SEC. 22. No money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years.

SEC. 23. The house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment, but a majority of the members elected must concur therein. Impeachments shall be tried by the senate; and the senators, when sitting for that purpose, shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to law and evidence. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators.

SEC. 24. The governor, judges, and all state officers, may be impeached for any misdemeanor in office; but judgment shall not extend further than removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office under the authority of this state. The party impeached, whether convicted or not, shall be liable to indictment, trial, and judgment, according to law.

SEC. 25. All regular sessions of the general assembly shall commence on the first Monday of January, biennially. The first session, under this constitution, shall commence on the first Monday of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

SEC. 26. All laws, of a general nature, shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; nor shall any act, except such as relates to public schools, be passed, to take effect upon the approval of any other authority than the general assembly, except, as otherwise provided in this constitution.

SEC. 27. The election and appointment of all officers, and the filling of all vacancies, not otherwise provided for by this constitution, or the constitution of the United States, shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law; but no appointing power shall be exercised by the general assembly, except as prescribed in this Constitution, and in the election of United States senators; and in these cases the vote shall be taken "viva voce."

SEC. 28. The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts; but may, by general laws, authorize courts to carry into effect, upon such terms as shall be just and equitable, the manifest intention of parties, and officers, by curing omissions, defects, and errors, in instruments and proceedings, arising out of their want of conformity with the laws of this state.

SEC. 29. No extra compensation shall be made to any officer, public agent, or contractor, after the service shall have been rendered, or the contract entered into; nor shall any money be paid, on any claim, the subject matter of which shall not have been provided for by pre-existing law, unless such compensation, or claim, be allowed by two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly.

SEC. 30. No new county shall contain less than four hundred square miles of territory, nor shall any county be reduced below that amount; and all laws creating new counties, changing county lines, or removing county seats, shall, before taking effect, be submitted to the electors of the several counties to be affected thereby, at the next general election after the passage thereof, and be adopted by a majority of all the electors voting at such election, in each of said counties; but any county now or hereafter containing one hundred thousand inhabitants, may be divided, whenever a majority of the voters residing in each of the proposed divisions shall approve of the law passed for that purpose; but no town or city within the same shall be divided, nor shall either of the divisions contain less than twenty thousand inhabitants.

SEC. 31. The members and officers of the general assembly shall receive a fixed compensation, to be prescribed by law, and no other allowance or perquisites, either in the payment of postage or otherwise; and no change in their compensation shall take effect during their term of office.

SEC. 32. The general assembly shall grant no divorce, nor exercise any judicial power not herein expressly conferred.

SEC. 33. Laws may be passed to secure to mechanics, artisans, laborers, sub-contractors and material men, their just dues by direct lien upon the property, upon which they have bestowed labor or for which they have furnished material. No other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

SEC. 34. Laws may be passed fixing and regulating the hours of labor, establishing a minimum wage, and providing for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of all employees; and no other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

SEC. 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents, for death, injuries or occupational diseases, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payments shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employes and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employe when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rates of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

Sec. 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and all other minerals.

Sec. 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political sub-division thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

Sec. 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

Sec. 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

Sec. 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interests in, lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

Sec. 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without the State of Ohio, and such goods made within the State of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state or any political sub-division thereof or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political sub-division thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made". Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political sub-division thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political sub-division thereof.

ARTICLE III.

EXECUTIVE.

SEC. 1. The executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, and an attorney general, who shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of the state, and at the places of voting for members of the general assembly. (As amended October 13, 1885.)

SEC. 2. The governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney general shall hold their offices for two years; and the auditor for four years. Their terms of office shall commence on the second Monday of January next after their election, and continue until their successors are elected and qualified.

SEC. 3. The returns of every election for the officers named in the foregoing section shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, by the returning officers, directed to the president of the senate, who, during the first week of the session, shall open and publish them, and declare the result in the presence of a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly. The person having the highest number of votes shall be declared duly elected; but if any two or more shall be highest, and equal in votes, for the same office, one of them shall be chosen by the joint vote of both houses.

SEC. 4. Should there be no session of the general assembly in January next after an election for any of the officers aforesaid, the returns of such election shall be made to the secretary of state, and opened, and the result declared by the governor, in such manner as may be provided by law.

SEC. 5. The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in the governor.

SEC. 6. He may require information, in writing, from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices; and shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

SEC. 7. He shall communicate at every session, by message, to the general assembly, the condition of the state, and recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient.

SEC. 8. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation, and shall state to both houses, when assembled, the purpose for which they have been convened.

SEC. 8. The governor on extraordinary occasions may convene the general assembly by proclamation and shall state in the proclamation the purpose for which such special session is called, and no other business shall be transacted at such special session except that named in the proclamation, or in a subsequent public proclamation or message to the general assembly issued by the governor during said special session, but the general assembly may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

SEC. 9. In case of disagreement between the two houses, in respect to the time of adjournment, he shall have power to adjourn the general assembly to such time as he may think proper, but not beyond the regular meetings thereof.

SEC. 10. He shall be commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

SEC. 11. He shall have power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, for all crimes and offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper; subject, however, to such regulations, as to the manner of applying for pardons, as may be prescribed by law. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of the sentence, and report the case to the general assembly, at its next meeting, when the general assembly shall either pardon, commute the sentence, direct its execution, or grant a further reprieve. He shall communicate to the general assembly, at every regular session, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name and crime of the convict, the sentence, its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon, or reprieve, with his reasons therefor.

SEC. 12. There shall be a seal of the state, which shall be kept by the governor, and used by him officially; and shall be called "The Great Seal of the State of Ohio."

SEC. 13. All grants and commissions shall be issued in the name, and by the authority, of the state of Ohio; sealed with the great seal; signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

SEC. 14. No member of congress, or other person holding office under the authority of this state, or of the United States, shall execute the office of governor, except as herein provided.

SEC. 15. In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal, or other disability of the governor; the powers and duties of the office, for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

SEC. 16. The lieutenant governor shall be president of the senate, but shall vote only when the senate is equally divided; and in case of his absence, or impeachment, or when he shall exercise the office of governor, the senate shall choose a president pro tempore.

SEC. 17. If the lieutenant governor, while executing the office of governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the president of the senate shall act as governor, until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives.

SEC. 18. Should the office of auditor, treasurer, secretary, or attorney general, become vacant, for any of the causes specified in the fifteenth section of this article, the governor shall fill the vacancy until the disability is removed, or a successor is elected and qualified. Every such vacancy shall be filled by election, at the first general election that occurs more than thirty days after it shall have happened; and the person chosen shall hold the office for the full term fixed in the second section of this article.

SEC. 19. The officers mentioned in this article shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation to be established by law, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which they shall have been elected.

SEC. 20. The officers of the executive department and of the public state institutions shall, at least five days preceding each regular session of the general assembly, severally report to the governor, who shall transmit such reports, with his message to the general assembly.

ARTICLE IV.

JUDICIAL.

SEC. 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time establish. (As amended October 9, 1883.)

Sec. 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

SEC. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provide [provided] by law, consist of five judges; a majority of whom competent to sit shall be necessary to form a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus and procedendo, and such appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large, for such term, not less than five years, as the general assembly may prescribe, and they shall be elected and their official term shall begin at such time as may be fixed by law. In case the general assembly shall increase the number of such judges, the first term of each of such additional judges shall be such, that in each year after their first election, an equal number of judges of the supreme court shall be elected, except in elections to fill vacancies; and whenever the number of such judges shall be increased, the general assembly may authorize such court to organize divisions thereof, not exceeding three, each division to consist of an equal number of judges; for the adjudication of cases, a majority of each division shall constitute a quorum, and such an assignment of the cases to each division may be made as such court may deem expedient, but whenever all the judges of either division hearing a case shall not concur as to the judgment to be rendered therein, or whenever a case shall involve the constitutionality of an act of the general assembly or of an act of congress, it shall be reserved to the whole court for adjudication. The judges of the supreme court in office when this amendment takes effect, shall continue to hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified. (As amended October 9, 1883.)

Sec. 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or to pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, in cases of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be prevented from invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court.

SEC. 3. The state shall be divided into nine common pleas districts, of which the county of Hamilton shall constitute one, of compact territory, and bounded by county lines; and each of said districts, consisting of three or more counties, shall be subdivided into three parts, of compact territory, bounded by county lines, and as nearly equal in population as practicable; in each of which, one judge of the court of common pleas for said district, and residing therein, shall be elected by the electors of said subdivision. Courts of common pleas shall be held, by one or more of these judges, in every county in the district, as often as may be provided by law; and more than one court, or sitting thereof, may be held at the same time in each district.

SEC. 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. Any judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas, and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

SEC. 4. The jurisdiction of the courts of common pleas, and of the judges thereof shall be fixed by law.

SEC. 5. [Repealed October 9, 1883.]

SEC. 6. The circuit court shall have like original jurisdiction with the supreme court, and such appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law. Such courts shall be composed of such number of judges as may be provided by law, and shall be held in each county, at least once in each year. The number of circuits, and the boundaries thereof, shall be prescribed by law. Such judges shall be elected in each circuit by the electors thereof, and at such time and for such term as may be prescribed by law, and the same number shall be elected in each circuit. Each judge shall be competent to exercise his judicial powers in any circuit. The general assembly may change, from time to time, the number or boundaries of the circuits. The circuit courts shall be the successors of the district courts, and all cases, judgments, records, and proceedings pending in said district courts, in the several counties of any district, shall be transferred to the circuit courts, in the several counties, and be proceeded in as though said district courts had not been abolished, and the district courts shall continue in existence until the election and qualification of the judges of the circuit courts. (As amended October 9, 1883.)

SEC. 6. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold sessions shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The courts of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and, to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction, and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its record to that court.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decisions in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court.

SEC. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the voters of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, or by fees, or both, as shall be provided by law.

Sec. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per centum of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county officers, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

SEC. 8. The probate court shall have jurisdiction in probate and testamentary matters, the appointment of administrators and guardians, the settlement of the accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, and such jurisdiction in habeas corpus, the issuing of marriage licenses and for the sale of land by executors, administrators, and guardians, and such other jurisdiction, in any county or counties, as may be provided by law.

SEC. 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors, in each township in the several counties. Their term of office shall be three years, and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 9. [Repealed September 3, 1912.]

SEC. 10. All judges, other than those provided for in this constitution, shall be elected by the electors of the judicial district for which they may be created, but not for a longer term of office than five years.

SEC. 11. [Repealed October 9, 1883.]

SEC. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the district for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for five years.

Sec. 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

SEC. 13. In case the office of any judge shall become vacant, before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified; and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have happened.

SEC. 14. The judges of the supreme court, and of the court of common pleas, shall, at stated times, receive, for their services, such compensation as may be provided by law, which shall not be diminished, or increased, during their term of office; but they shall receive no fees or perquisites, nor hold any other office of profit or trust, under the authority of this state, or the United States. All votes for either of them, for any elective office, except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void.

SEC. 15. The general assembly may increase, or diminish, the number of the judges of the supreme court, the number of the districts of the court of common pleas, the number of judges in any district, change the districts, or the subdivisions thereof, or establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition, or diminution, shall vacate the office of any judge.

Sec. 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided.

Schedule.

If the foregoing amendment shall be adopted by the electors, the judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914; each county shall continue as a part of its existing common pleas district and sub-division thereof, until one resident judge of the court of common pleas is elected and qualified therein.

SEC. 16. There shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. He shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of all other courts of record held therein; but, the general assembly may provide, by law, for the election of a clerk, with a like term of office, for each or any other of the courts of record, and may authorize the judge of the probate court to perform the duties of clerk for his court, under such regulations as may be directed by law. Clerks of courts shall be removable for such cause and in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 17. Judges may be removed from office, by concurrent resolution of both houses of the general assembly, if two-thirds of the members, elected to each house, concur therein; but no such removal shall be made, except upon complaint, the substance of which shall be entered on the journal, nor, until the party charged shall have had notice thereof, and an opportunity to be heard.

SEC. 18. The several judges of the supreme court, of the common pleas, and of such other courts as may be created, shall, respectively, have and exercise such power and jurisdiction, at chambers, or otherwise, as may be directed by law.

SEC. 19. The general assembly may establish courts of conciliation, and prescribe their powers and duties; but such courts shall not render final judgment in any case, except upon submission, by the parties, of the matter in dispute, and their agreement to abide such judgment.

SEC. 20. The style of all process shall be "The State of Ohio;" all prosecutions shall be carried on, in the name, and by the authority, of the state of Ohio; and all indictments shall conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

SEC. 22. [21]. A commission, which shall consist of five members, shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the members of which shall hold office for the term of three years from and after the first day of February, 1876, to dispose of such part of the business then on the dockets of the supreme court, as shall, by arrangement between said commission and said court, be transferred to such commission; and said commission shall have like jurisdiction and power in respect to such business as are or may be vested in said court; and the members of said commission shall receive a like compensation for the time being with the judges of said court. A majority of the members of said commission shall be necessary to form a quorum or pronounce a decision, and its decision shall be certified, entered, and enforced as the judgments of the supreme court, and at the expiration of the term of said commission, all business undisposed of shall by it be certified to the supreme court and be disposed of as if said commission had never existed. The clerk and reporter of said court shall be the clerk and reporter of said commission, and the commission shall have such other attendants not exceeding in number those provided by law for said court, which attendants said commission may appoint and remove at its pleasure. Any vacancy occurring in said commission, shall be filled by appointment of the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, if the senate be in session, and if the senate be not in session, by the governor, but in such last case, such appointment shall expire at the end of the next session of the general assembly. The general assembly may, on application of the supreme court duly entered on the journal of the court and certified, provide by law, whenever two-thirds of such [each] house shall concur therein, from time to time, for the appointment, in like manner, of a like commission with like powers, jurisdiction and duties; provided, that the term of any such commission shall not exceed two years, nor shall it be created oftener than once in ten years.

ARTICLE V.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

SEC. 1. Every white male citizen* of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector, and be entitled to vote at all elections.

SEC. 2. All elections shall be by ballot.

SEC. 3. Electors, during their attendance at elections, and in going to and returning therefrom, shall be privileged from arrest, in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace.

SEC. 4. The general assembly shall have power to exclude from the privilege of voting, or of being eligible to office, any person convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime.

SEC. 5. No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States, shall, by being stationed in any garrison, or military, or naval station, within the state, be considered a resident of this state.

SEC. 6. No idiot, or insane person, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector.

SEC. 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal offices shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers of municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

ARTICLE VI.

EDUCATION.

SEC. 1. The principal of all funds, arising from the sale, or other disposition of lands, or other property, granted or entrusted to this state for educational and religious purposes, shall forever be preserved inviolate, and undiminished; and, the income arising therefrom, shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants, or appropriations.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

SEC. 2. The general assembly shall make such provisions, by taxation, or otherwise, as, with the income arising from the school trust fund, will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state; but no religious or other sect, or sects, shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this state.

SEC. 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds: provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

SEC. 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor, for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the state commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

Schedule.

If the foregoing amendment be adopted by the electors it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

ARTICLE VII.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

SEC. 1. Institutions for the benefit of the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb, shall always be fostered and supported by the state; and be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

SEC. 2. The directors of the penitentiary shall be appointed or elected in such manner as the general assembly may direct; and the trustees of the benevolent, and other state institutions, now elected by the general assembly, and of such other state institutions, as may be hereafter created, shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate; and upon all nominations made by the governor, the question shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered upon the journals of the senate.

SEC. 3. The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may occur in the offices aforesaid, until the next session of the general assembly, and, until a successor to his appointee shall be confirmed and qualified.

ARTICLE VIII.

PUBLIC DEBT AND PUBLIC WORKS.

SEC. 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever.

SEC. 2. In addition to the above limited power, the state may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the state in war, or to redeem the present outstanding indebtedness of the state; but the money, arising from the contracting of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was raised, or to repay such debts, and to no other purpose whatever; and all debts, incurred to redeem the present outstanding indebtedness of the state, shall be so contracted as to be payable by the sinking fund, hereinafter provided for, as the same shall accumulate.

SEC. 3. Except the debts above specified in sections one and two of this article, no debt whatever shall hereafter be created by or on behalf of the state.

SEC. 4. The credit of the state shall not, in any manner, be given or loaned to, or in aid of, any individual association or corporation whatever; nor shall the state ever hereafter become a joint owner, or stockholder, in any company or association in this state, or elsewhere, formed for any purpose whatever.

SEC. 5. The state shall never assume the debts of any county, city, town, or township, or of any corporation whatever, unless such debt shall have been created to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the state in war.

SEC. 6. The general assembly shall never authorize any county, city, town, or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation or association.

SEC. 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state, or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

SEC. 7. The faith of the state being pledged for the payment of its public debt, in order to provide therefor, there shall be created a sinking fund, which shall be sufficient to pay the accruing interest on such debt, and, annually, to reduce the principal thereof, by a sum not less than one hundred thousand dollars, increased yearly, and each and every year, by compounding, at the rate of six per cent. per annum. The said sinking fund shall consist, of the net annual income of the public works and stocks owned by the state, of any other funds or resources that are, or may be, provided by law, and of such further sum, to be raised by taxation, as may be required for the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 8. The auditor of state, secretary of state, and attorney general, are hereby created a board of commissioners, to be styled, "The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund."

SEC. 9. The commissioners of the sinking fund shall, immediately preceding each regular session of the general assembly, make an estimate of the probable amount of the fund, provided for in the seventh section of this article, from all sources except from taxation, and report the same, together with all their proceedings relative to said fund and the public debt, to the governor, who shall transmit the same with his regular message, to the general assembly; and the general assembly shall make all necessary provision for raising and disbursing said sinking fund, in pursuance of the provisions of this article.

SEC. 10. It shall be the duty of the said commissioners faithfully to apply said fund, together with all moneys that may be, by the general assembly, appropriated to that object, to the payment of the interest, as it becomes due, and the redemption of the principal of the public debt of the state, excepting only, the school and trust funds held by the state.

SEC. 11. The said commissioners shall, semi-annually, make a full and detailed report of their proceedings to the governor, who shall, immediately, cause the same to be published, and shall also communicate the same to the general assembly, forthwith, if it be in session, and if not, then at its first session after such report shall be made.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, there shall be a board of public works, to consist of three members, who shall be elected by the people, at the first general election after the adoption of this constitution, one for the term of one year, one for the term of two years, and one for the term of three years; and one member of said board shall be elected annually thereafter, who shall hold his office for three years.

SEC. 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, with the powers and duties now exercised by the board of public works until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

Schedule.

Section 13 of article VIII is hereby repealed.

SEC. 13. The powers and duties of said board of public works, and its several members, and their compensation, shall be such as now are, or may be, prescribed by law.

SEC. 13. [Repealed September 3, 1912.]

ARTICLE IX.

MILITIA.

SEC. 1. All white male citizens, residents of this state, being eighteen years of age, and under the age of forty-five years, shall be enrolled in the militia, and perform military duty, in such manner, not incompatible with the constitution and laws of the United States, as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. Majors general, brigadiers general, colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, captains, and subalterns, shall be elected by the persons subject to military duty, in their respective districts.

SEC. 3. The governor shall appoint the adjutant general, quartermaster general, and such other staff officers, as may be provided for by law. Majors general, brigadiers general, colonels, or commandants of regiments, battalions, or squadrons, shall, severally, appoint their staff, and captains shall appoint their non-commissioned officers and musicians.

SEC. 4. The governor shall commission all officers of the line and staff, ranking as such; and shall have power to call forth the militia, to execute the laws of the state, to suppress insurrection, or to repel invasion.

SEC. 5. The general assembly shall provide, by law, for the protection and safe keeping of the public arms.

ARTICLE X.

COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

SEC. 1. The general assembly shall provide, by law, for the election of such county and township officers as may be necessary.

SEC. 2. County officers shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of each county in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law. (As amended October 13, 1885.)

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of sheriff, or county treasurer, for more than four years, in any period of six years.

SEC. 4. Township officers shall be elected by the electors of each township, at such time, in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law; but shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified. (As amended October 13, 1885.)

SEC. 5. No money shall be drawn from any county or township treasury, except by authority of law.

SEC. 6. Justices of the peace, and county and township officers, may be removed, in such manner and for such cause, as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. The commissioners of counties, the trustees of townships, and similar boards, shall have such power of local taxation, for police purposes, as may be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE XI.

APPORTIONMENT.

SEC. 1. The apportionment of this state for members of the general assembly shall be made every ten years, after the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, in the following manner: The whole population of the state, as ascertained by the federal census, or in such other mode as the general assembly may direct, shall be divided by the number "one hundred," and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the house of representatives, for ten years next succeeding such apportionment.

SEC. 2. Every county having a population equal to one-half of said ratio, shall be entitled to one representative; every county, containing said ratio, and three-fourths over, shall be entitled to two representatives; every county containing three times said ratio, shall be entitled to three representatives; and so on, requiring after the first two, an entire ratio for each additional representative. Provided, however, that each county shall have one representative. (As amended November 3, 1902.)

SEC. 3. When any county shall have a fraction above the ratio, so large, that being multiplied by five, the result will be equal to one or more ratios, additional representatives shall be apportioned for such ratios, among the several sessions of the decennial period, in the following manner: If there be only one ratio, a representative shall be allotted to the fifth session of the decennial period; if there be two ratios, a representative shall be allotted to the fourth and third sessions, respectively; if three, to the third, second, and first sessions, respectively; if four, to the fourth, third, second, and first sessions, respectively.

SEC. 4. Any county, forming with another county or counties, a representative district, during one decennial period, if it have acquired sufficient population at the next decennial period, shall be entitled to a separate representation, if there shall be left, in the district from which it shall have been separated, a population sufficient for a representative; but no such change shall be made, except at a regular decennial period for the apportionment of representatives.

SEC. 5. If, in fixing any subsequent ratio, a county, previously entitled to a separate representation, shall have less than the number required by the new ratio for a representative, such county shall be attached to the county adjoining it, having the least number of inhabitants; and the representation of the district, so formed, shall be determined as herein provided.

SEC. 6. The ratio for a senator shall forever, hereafter, be ascertained by dividing the whole population of the state by the number thirty-five.

SEC. 7. The state is hereby divided into thirty-three senatorial districts, as follows: The county of Hamilton shall constitute the first senatorial district; the counties of Butler and Warren, the second; Montgomery and Preble, the third; Clermont and Brown, the fourth; Greene, Clinton, and Fayette, the fifth; Ross and Highland, the sixth; Adams, Pike, Scioto, and Jackson, the seventh; Lawrence, Gallia, Meigs, and Vinton, the eighth; Athens, Hocking, and Fairfield, the ninth; Franklin and Pickaway, the tenth; Clark, Champaign, and Madison, the eleventh; Miami, Darke, and Shelby, the twelfth; Logan, Union, Marion, and Hardin, the thirteenth; Washington and Morgan, the fourteenth; Muskingum and Perry, the fifteenth; Delaware and Licking, the sixteenth; Knox and Morrow, the seventeenth; Coshocton and Tuscarawas, the eighteenth; Guernsey and Monroe, the nineteenth; Belmont and Harrison, the twentieth; Carroll and Stark, the twenty-first; Jefferson and Columbiana, the twenty-second; Trumbull and Mahoning, the twenty-third; Ashtabula, Lake, and Geauga, the twenty-fourth; Cuyahoga, the twenty-fifth; Portage and Summit, the twenty-sixth; Medina and Lorain, the twenty-seventh; Wayne and Holmes, the twenty-eighth; Ashland and Richland, the twenty-ninth; Huron, Erie, Sandusky, and Ottawa, the thirtieth; Seneca, Crawford, and Wyandot, the thirty-first; Mercer, Auglaize, Allen, Van Wert, Paulding, Defiance, and Williams, the thirty-second; and Hancock, Wood, Lucas, Fulton, Henry and Putnam, the thirty-third. For the first decennial period, after the adoption of this constitution, each of said districts shall be entitled to one senator, except the first district, which shall be entitled to three senators.

SEC. 8. The same rules shall be applied, in apportioning the fractions of senatorial districts, and in annexing districts, which may hereafter have less than three-fourths of a senatorial ratio, as are applied to representative districts.

SEC. 9. Any county forming part of a senatorial district, having acquired a population equal to a full senatorial ratio, shall be made a separate senatorial district, at any regular decennial apportionment, if a full senatorial ratio shall be left in the district from which it shall be taken.

SEC. 10. For the first ten years, after the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, the apportionment of representatives shall be as provided in the schedule, and no change shall ever be made in the principles of representation, as herein established, or, in the senatorial districts, except as above provided. All territory, belonging to a county at the time of any apportionment, shall, as to the right of representation and suffrage, remain an integral part thereof, during the decennial period.

SEC. 11. The governor, auditor, and secretary of state, or any two of them, shall at least six months prior to the October election, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and, at each decennial period thereafter, ascertain and determine the ratio of representation, according to the decennial census, the number of representatives and senators each county or district shall be entitled to elect, and for what years, within the next ensuing ten years, and the governor shall cause the same to be published, in such manner as shall be directed by law.

JUDICIAL APPORTIONMENT.

SEC. 12. For judicial purposes, the state shall be apportioned as follows:

The county of Hamilton, shall constitute the first district, which shall not be subdivided; and the judges therein, may hold separate courts or separate sittings of the same court, at the same time.

The counties of Butler, Preble, and Darke, shall constitute the first subdivision; Montgomery, Miami, and Champaign, the second; and Warren, Clinton, Greene, and Clark, the third subdivision, of the second district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Shelby, Auglaize, Allen, Hardin, Logan, Union, and Marion, shall constitute the first subdivision; Mercer, Van Wert, Putnam, Paulding, Defiance, Williams, Henry, and Fulton, the second; and Wood, Seneca, Hancock, Wyandot, and Crawford, the third subdivision, of the third district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Lucas, Ottawa, Sandusky, Erie, and Huron, shall constitute the first subdivision; Lorain, Medina, and Summit, the second; and the county of Cuyahoga, the third subdivision, of the fourth district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Clermont, Brown, and Adams, shall constitute the first subdivision; Highland, Ross, and Fayette, the second; and Pickaway, Franklin, and Madison, the third subdivision, of the fifth district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Licking, Knox, and Delaware, shall constitute the first subdivision; Morrow, Richland, and Ashland, the second; and Wayne, Holmes, and Coshoc-ton, the third subdivision, of the sixth district; and, to-gether, shall form such district.

The counties of Fairfield, Perry, and Hocking, shall constitute the first subdivision; Jackson, Vinton, Pike, Scioto, and Lawrence, the second; and Gallia, Meigs, Athens, and Washington, the third subdivision, of the seventh district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Muskingum and Morgan, shall con-stitute the first subdivision; Guernsey, Belmont, and Monroe, the second; and Jefferson, Harrison, and Tus-carawas, the third subdivision, of the eighth district; and, together, shall form such district.

The counties of Stark, Carroll, and Columbiana, shall constitute the first subdivision; Trumbull, Portage, and Mahoning, the second; and Geauga, Lake, and Ashta-bula, the third subdivision, of the ninth district; and, together, shall form such district.

SEC. 13. The general assembly shall attach any new counties, that may hereafter be erected, to such districts, or subdivisions thereof, as shall be most convenient.

ARTICLE XII.

FINANCE AND TAXATION.

SEC. 1. The levying of taxes, by the poll, is grievous and oppressive; therefore, the general assembly shall never levy a poll tax, for county or state purposes.

Sec. 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

SEC. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting bonds of the state of Ohio, bonds of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state, and bonds issued in behalf of the public schools of Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds shall be exempt from taxation; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institu-tions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value two hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law. (As amended Novem-ber 7, 1905.)

Sec. 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the State of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxa-tion; but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institu-tions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public pur-pose, and personal property, to an amount not ex-ceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each indi-vidual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

SEC. 3. The general assembly shall provide, by law, for taxing the notes and bills discounted or purchased, moneys loaned, and all other property, effects, or dues, of every description, (without deduction,) of all banks, now existing, or hereafter created, and of all bankers, so that all property employed in banking, shall always bear a burden of taxation, equal to that imposed on the property of individuals.

SEC. 4. The general assembly shall provide for rais-ing revenue, sufficient to defray the expenses of the state, for each year, and also a sufficient sum to pay the in-terest on the state debt.

SEC. 5. No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax, shall state, dis-tinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied.

SEC. 6. The state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

Sec. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this con-stitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

Sec. 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxa-tion of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at dif-ferent rates upon collateral and direct inheritances, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

Sec. 8. Laws may be passed providing for the tax-ation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such in-comes as may be designated by law; but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dol-lars may be exempt from such taxation.

Sec. 9. Not less than fifty per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax[es] originate.

Sec. 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other min-erals.

Sec. 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

ARTICLE XIII.

CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 1. The general assembly shall pass no special act conferring corporate powers.

The amendments to the constitution approved September 3, 1912, are printed in bold-faced type. Sections amended or superseded are in small type. See note, page 2121.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

SEC. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

Sec. 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint stock companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

SEC. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her. (As amended November 3, 1903.)

Sec. 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her; except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank", "banker" or "banking", or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

SEC. 4. The property of corporations, now existing or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation, the same as the property of individuals.

SEC. 5. No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money, to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation; which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury of twelve men, in a court of record, as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 6. The general assembly shall provide for the organization of cities, and incorporated villages, by general laws, and restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power.

SEC. 7. No act of the general assembly, authorizing associations with banking powers, shall take effect until it shall be submitted to the people, at the general election next succeeding the passage thereof, and be approved by a majority of all the electors, voting at such election.

ARTICLE XIV.

JURISPRUDENCE.

SEC. 1. The general assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this constitution, shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners, and prescribe their tenure of office, compensation, and the mode of filling vacancies in said commission.

SEC. 2. The said commissioners shall revise, reform, simplify, and abridge the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings of the courts of record of this state; and, as far as practicable and expedient, shall provide for the abolition of the distinct forms of action at law, now in use, and for the administration of justice by a uniform mode of proceeding, without reference to any distinction between law and equity.

SEC. 3. The proceedings of the commissioners shall, from time to time, be reported to the general assembly, and be subject to the action of that body.

ARTICLE XV.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SEC. 1. Columbus shall be the seat of government, until otherwise directed by law.

SEC. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, by such executive officers, and in such manner, as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

SEC. 3. An accurate and detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money, the several amounts paid, to whom, and on what account, shall, from time to time, be published, as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.

SEC. 5. No person who shall hereafter fight a duel, assist in the same as second, or send, accept, or knowingly carry, a challenge therefor, shall hold any office in this state.

SEC. 6. Lotteries, and the sale of lottery tickets, for any purpose whatever, shall forever be prohibited in this state.

SEC. 7. Every person chosen or appointed to any office under this state, before entering upon the discharge of its duties, shall take an oath or affirmation, to support the Constitution of the United States, and of this state, and also an oath of office.

SEC. 8. There may be established, in the secretary of state's office, a bureau of statistics, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

Sec. 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law, and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local sub-division while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word "saloon" as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

At said election a ballot shall be in the following form:

Intoxicating Liquors.

	For License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.
	Against License to traffic in intoxicating liquors.

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License," if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the words "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

If the votes for license shall exceed the votes against license, then the article above mentioned shall become section 9 of article XV of the constitution, and the present section 9 of said article, also known as section 18 of the schedule shall be repealed.

Sec. 10. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision.

ARTICLE XVI.

AMENDMENTS.

Sec. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be published in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published, for six months preceding the next election for senators and representatives, at which time the same shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection; and if a majority of the electors, voting at such election, shall adopt such amendments, the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

Sec. 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

Sec. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote, at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting at said election, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

Sec. 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide, by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

SEC. 3. At the general election, to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution," shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and, in case a majority of all the electors, voting at such election, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

Sec. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution[?]" shall be submitted to the electors of the state; and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

ARTICLE XVII.

ELECTIONS.

SEC. 1. Elections for state and county officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the even numbered years; and all elections for all other elective officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years. (As amended November 7, 1905.)

SEC. 2. The term of office of the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney-general, secretary of state and treasurer of state shall be two years, and that of the auditor of state shall be four years. The term of office of judges of the supreme court and circuit courts shall be such even number of years not less than six (6) years as may be prescribed by the general assembly; that of the judges of the common pleas court six (6) years and of the judges of the probate court, four (4) years, and that of other judges shall be such even number of years not exceeding six (6) years as may be prescribed by the general assembly. The term of office of justices of the peace shall be such even number of years not exceeding four (4) years, as may be prescribed by the general assembly. The term of office of the members of the board of public works shall be such even number of years not exceeding six (6) years as may be so prescribed; and the term of office of all elective county, township, municipal and school officers shall be such even number of years not exceeding four (4) years as may be so prescribed.

And the general assembly shall have power to so extend existing terms of office as to affect [effect] the purpose of section 1 of this article.

Any vacancy which may occur in any elective state office other than that of a member of the general assembly or of governor, shall be filled by appointment by the governor until the disability is removed, or a successor elected and qualified. Every such vacancy shall be filled by election at the first general election for the office which is vacant, that occurs more than thirty (30) days after the vacancy shall have occurred. The person elected shall fill the office for the unexpired term. All vacancies in other elective offices shall be filled for the unexpired term in such manner as may be prescribed by law. (As amended November 7, 1905.)

SEC. 3. Every elective officer holding office when this amendment is adopted, shall continue to hold such office for the full term for which he was elected, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified as provided by law.

ARTICLE XVIII.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities; all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

SEC. 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

SEC. 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

Sec. 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

Sec. 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

Sec. 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter[?]." The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter; provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from the date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held therein. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

Sec. 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof, and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission; and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

Sec. 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality nor be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

Sec. 11. Any municipality appropriating private property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited, shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

Sec. 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

Sec. 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

Sec. 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

Schedule.

If the foregoing amendment to the constitution be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, it shall take effect on November 15th, 1912.

SCHEDULE.

(1851)

SEC. 1. All laws of this state, in force on the first day of September one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, not inconsistent with this constitution, shall continue in force, until amended, or repealed.

SEC. 2. The first election for members of the general assembly, under this constitution, shall be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

SEC. 3. The first election for governor, lieutenant governor, auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state and attorney general, shall be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one. The persons, holding said offices on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall continue therein, until the second Monday of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

SEC. 4. The first election for judges of the supreme court, courts of common pleas, and probate courts, and clerks of the courts of common pleas, shall be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, and the official term of said judges and clerks, so elected, shall commence on the second Monday of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two. Judges and clerks of the courts of common pleas and supreme court, in office on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall continue in office with their present powers and duties, until the second Monday of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two. No suit or proceeding, pending in any of the courts of this state, shall be affected by the adoption of this constitution.

SEC. 5. The register and receiver of the land office, directors of the penitentiary, directors of the benevolent institutions of the state, the state librarian, and all other officers, not otherwise provided for in this constitution, in office on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall continue in office, until their terms expire, respectively, unless the general assembly shall otherwise provide.

SEC. 6. The superior and commercial courts of Cincinnati, and the superior court of Cleveland, shall remain, until otherwise provided by law, with their present powers and jurisdiction; and the judges and clerks of said courts, in office on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall continue in office, until the expiration of their terms of office, respectively, or, until otherwise provided by law; but neither of said courts shall continue after the second Monday of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three; and no suits shall be commenced in said two first mentioned courts, after the second Monday of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, nor in said last mentioned court, after the second Monday in August, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two; and all business in either of said courts, not disposed of within the time limited for their continuance as aforesaid, shall be transferred to the court of common pleas.

SEC. 7. All county and township officers and justices of the peace, in office on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall continue in office until their terms expire, respectively.

SEC. 8. Vacancies in office, occurring after the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, shall be filled, as is now prescribed by law, and until officers are elected or appointed, and qualified, under this constitution.

SEC. 9. This constitution shall take effect, on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

SEC. 10. All officers shall continue in office, until their successors shall be chosen and qualified.

SEC. 11. Suits pending in the supreme court in bank, shall be transferred to the supreme court provided for in this constitution, and be proceeded in according to law.

SEC. 12. The district courts shall, in their respective counties, be the successors of the present supreme court; and all suits, prosecutions, judgments, records, and proceedings, pending and remaining in said supreme court, in the several counties of any district, shall be transferred to the respective district courts of such counties, and be proceeded in, as though no change had been made in said supreme court.

SEC. 13. The said courts of common pleas, shall be the successors of the present courts of common pleas in the several counties, except as to probate jurisdiction; and all suits, prosecutions, proceedings, records and judgments, pending or being in said last mentioned courts, except as aforesaid, shall be transferred to the courts of common pleas created by this constitution, and proceeded in, as though the same had been therein instituted.

SEC. 14. The probate courts provided for in this constitution, as to all matters within the jurisdiction conferred upon said courts, shall be the successors, in the several counties, of the present courts of common pleas; and the records, files, and papers, business and proceedings, appertaining to said jurisdiction, shall be transferred to said courts of probate, and be there proceeded in, according to law.

SEC. 15. Until otherwise provided by law, elections for judges and clerks shall be held, and the poll books returned, as is provided for governor, and the abstract therefrom, certified to the secretary of state, shall be by him opened, in the presence of the governor, who shall declare the result, and issue commissions to the persons elected.

SEC. 16. Where two or more counties are joined in a senatorial, representative, or judicial district, the returns of elections shall be sent to the county, having the largest population.

Constitution of Ohio with Amendments Approved by the People September 3, 1912.

SEC. 17. The foregoing constitution shall be submitted to the electors of the state, at an election to be held on the third Tuesday of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, in the several election districts of this state. The ballots at such election shall be written or printed as follows: Those in favor of the constitution, "New Constitution, Yes;" those against the constitution, "New Constitution, No." The polls at said election shall be opened between the hours of eight and ten o'clock A. M., and closed at six o'clock P. M.; and the said election shall be conducted, and the returns thereof made and certified, to the secretary of state, as provided by law for annual elections of state and county officers. Within twenty days after such election, the secretary of state shall open the returns thereof, in the presence of the governor; and, if it shall appear that a majority of all the votes, cast at such election, are in favor of the constitution, the governor shall issue his proclamation, stating that fact, and said constitution shall be the constitution of the state of Ohio, and not otherwise.

SEC. 18. At the time when the votes of the electors shall be taken for the adoption or rejection of this constitution, the additional section, in the words following, to-wit: "No license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall hereafter be granted in this state; but the general assembly may, by law, provide against evils resulting therefrom," shall be separately submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection, in form following, to-wit: A separate ballot may be given by every elector and deposited in a separate box. Upon the ballots given for said separate amendment shall be written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, the words: "License to sell intoxicating liquors, Yes;" and upon the ballots given against said amendment, in like manner, the words: "License to sell intoxicating liquors, No." If, at the said election, a majority of all the votes given for and against said amendment, shall contain the words: "License to sell intoxicating liquors, No," then the said amendment shall be a separate section of article fifteen of the constitution.

[See section 9, article XV.]

SEC. 19. The apportionment of the house of representatives, during the first decennial period under this constitution, shall be as follows:

The counties of Adams, Allen, Athens, Auglaize, Carroll, Champaign, Clark, Clinton, Crawford, Darke, Delaware, Erie, Fayette, Gallia, Geauga, Greene, Hancock, Harrison, Hocking, Holmes, Lake, Lawrence, Logan, Madison, Marion, Meigs, Morrow, Perry, Pickaway, Pike, Preble, Sandusky, Scioto, Shelby, and Union, shall, severally, be entitled to one representative, in each session of the decennial period.

The counties of Franklin, Licking, Montgomery, and Stark, shall each be entitled to two representatives, in each session of the decennial period.

The counties of Ashland, Coshocton, Highland, Huron, Lorain, Mahoning, Medina, Miami, Portage, Seneca, Summit, and Warren, shall, severally, be entitled to one representative, in each session; and one additional representative in the fifth session of the decennial period.

The counties of Ashtabula, Brown, Butler, Clermont, Fairfield, Guernsey, Jefferson, Knox, Monroe, Morgan, Richland, Trumbull, Tuscarawas, and Washington, shall, severally, be entitled to one representative, in each session; and two additional representatives, one in the third, and one in the fourth session of the decennial period.

The counties of Belmont, Columbiana, Ross and Wayne, shall, severally, be entitled to one representative, in each session; and three additional representatives, one in the first, one in the second, and one in the third session of the decennial period.

The county of Muskingum shall be entitled to two representatives, in each session; and one additional representative, in the fifth session, of the decennial period.

The county of Cuyahoga shall be entitled to two representatives, in each session; and two additional representatives, one in the third, and one in the fourth session of the decennial period.

The county of Hamilton shall be entitled to seven representatives, in each session; and four additional representatives, one in the first, one in the second, one in the third, and one in the fourth session, of the decennial period.

The following counties, until they shall have acquired a sufficient population to entitle them to elect, separately, under the fourth section of the eleventh article, shall form districts in manner following, to-wit: The counties of Jackson and Vinton, one district; the counties of Lucas and Fulton, one district; the counties of Wyandot and Hardin, one district; the counties of Mercer and Van Wert, one district; the counties of Paulding, Defiance, and Williams, one district; the counties of Putnam and Henry, one district; and the counties of Wood and Ottawa, one district; each of which districts shall be entitled to one representative, in every session of the decennial period.

Done in convention, at Cincinnati, the tenth day of March, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, and of the independence of the United States, the seventy-fifth.

Schedule.

(1912.)

The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then
